This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world’s books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that’s often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book’s long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google’s system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google “watermark” you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can’t offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book’s appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google’s mission is to organize the world’s information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world’s books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com
HISTORY OF THE MISSION
OF THE
UNITED BRETHREN
AMONG THE
Indians in North America.

IN THREE PARTS.

BY GEORGE HENRY LOSKIEL.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN
BY CHRISTIAN IGNATIUS LA TROBE.

LONDON:
PRINTED FOR THE BRETHREN'S SOCIETY FOR THE FURTHERANCE OF THE GOSPEL:
SOLD AT NO. 10, NEFIL'S COURT, FETTER LANE: AND BY JOHN STOCKDALE, OPPOSITE BURLINGTON HOUSE, PICCADILLY.

1794.
TO

ALL

IN EVERY DENOMINATION,

WHO LOVE THE

LORD JESUS CHRIST

IN SINCERITY,

AND REJOICE AT THE INCREASE OF HIS KINGDOM,

THIS ACCOUNT OF THE EFFECTS OF THE GOSPEL

AMONG THE

INDIANS IN NORTH AMERICA;

IS HUMBLY DEDICATED

BY

THE TRANSLATOR.
terms and expressions peculiar to America, though I have endeavoured to avoid it by inquiry. To some friends, who kindly assisted in the revision of the manuscript, I owe many obligations, and should stand yet more indebted, had they not spared me too much. Every error, or proposed amendment, which my readers may still point out, will serve to improve a second edition, if it ever should be wanted.

I had several doubts as to the spelling of the Indian names, and perhaps should have done better to have adopted that mode, which to an English reader might have been most convenient. But as I could not be quite positive, in what manner our missionaries, most of whom are Germans, might have expressed Indian sounds by European letters, I thought it safest, to adhere to the spelling of my Author, and the missionaries. As to the German manner of pronunciation, I will only observe, that tsch is always pronounced like a ch, and sch, like sh; chb is with them a guttural, for which perhaps a k may be the best substitute; for instance, Tschecbischchquannink; P. III. p. 36, is pronounced by our German missionaries, Chekishequannink. Now and then I have varied a little, for instance, put an aw to express the broad a of the Germans, &c.

The annexed map I received from our Brethren in North America, it being their wish that a map of those parts, in which our Indian congregations dwelt, might be added to the work. Though it may not be most scrupulously accurate as to the situation of the Indian places here described, for want of proper surveys in so great a wilderness, yet it gives as good an idea of the many emigrations of our Indian congre-congregations, as could possibly be collected from the situation of the rivers and lakes they passed, or near which they settled.
TRANSLATOR'S PREFACE.

I have added a copious Index, which I hope will prove useful.

If my readers receive the same degree of pleasure and blessing which I have often done in translating and revising this History, and are by the perusal of it excited to contemplate the work of God in the hearts of the heathen with the same astonishment and adoration, and to join me and my Brethren in prayer for its success, I am richly rewarded for any trouble I have had in laying it before them.

The profits arising from the sale, if any, will be applied towards the support of the millions by the Brethren's Society for the Furtherance of the Gospel, in London, by whom it is published.

London,
September 20th, 1794.
PREFACE

OF

THE AUTHOR.

Among the Missions hitherto established by the church of the United Brethren, the Mission among the Indians in North America is unquestionably one of the most remarkable, whether we consider the various changes it has undergone, or the nations, which are its object.

Its History contains the most striking events. The Mission, almost from the very beginning, meets with many, and even some very active enemies. We behold it often violently assailed with unabating cruelty; suffering under continual troubles the most grievous afflictions, with long, and even bloody persecutions; and subject to such frequent and extraordinary vicissitudes, that the Indian Congregation may well be styled a flock of pilgrims; yet the almighty hand of God so protects it, that when it seems almost vanquished, it rises again triumphant, through his power.

PART I. A The AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

The heathen nations, with whom the Missionaries are here engaged, are more remarkable for their ferocity, obstinacy, and hardness of heart, than all other nations of the earth, and yet the power of the word of atonement conquers their unbroken and inflexible dispositions.

The aim in laying the History of this Mission before the Public, is to place these marvellous truths in such a point of view, that the name of God and our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ may be glorified. For the truth of the Gospel can never be more firmly established than by living witnesses, who of themselves prove, that Jesus Christ is come into the world to save sinners, and that He verily saves all those, who come unto God by him.

The more I am convinced of this by experience, the greater was my pleasure in undertaking, by desire of my Brethren, to write a History, so replete with happy instances, confirming this truth.

But in order to inform my readers of the character of the Indian nations in their natural state, I thought it necessary to introduce a short preliminary account of those tribes, with which our Missionaries have been more intimately acquainted, describing their manner of living, their customs, political constitution, and conduct in peace and war. The few remarks occasionally added concerning beasts, plants, and fruits, refer only to the Indian country.

As to the materials from which this account is composed, I owe great obligations to our venerable Bishop Augustus Gottlieb Spangenberg, who resided many years in North America, and still more to the Missionary David Zeisberger, who has now served that that Mission upwards of forty years successively, and whose veracity is unquestionable. I have likewise consulted Doctor Robertson's History of America, Captain Carver's Travels through the interior Parts of America, and Mr. Leifte's Description of the British Dominions in North America, but so far only as their copious and explicit account perfectly agreed with the testimony of the above-mentioned authorities. It affords particular satisfaction to me, that, before this work went to the press, it underwent a careful revision, and was approved by Bishop Spangenberg and other worthy men, several of whom had been in North America, and resided in the Indian country. Its chief worth therefore lies in its veracity.

As to the history of the Mission itself, I have been favored with the most authentic accounts, journals, and letters of the Missionaries themselves, and of others, who have been employed in this work of God, from the archives of the Unity of the Brethren. My principal concern was to write the truth, and nothing but the truth, and therefore I have not cast a veil over the mistakes, which have been made in conducting the Mission. It must be obvious to every reader, that I have not made neatness and elegance of diction so much my study, as conciseness, plainness, and a language perfectly intelligible, even to the illiterate.

I have not been able to succeed in my endeavours to procure an accurate map of the countries in which the Mission was situated, partly because I could not find any maps of North America to be relied upon, and
AUTHOR’S PREFACE.

and did not chuse to republish one that was inaccurate; and partly because the Indian Congregation emigrated so often, and dwelt in countries so far distant from each other, that it would have been impracticable to represent all their settlements in a map of a small size, and many maps would have too much increased the price of the work.

I would willingly have finished this work sooner, for it was already announced to the Public in the year 1784, by the Hon. John Jacob de Moer, State counsellor to the King of Denmark, in his work entitled, “North America, agreeably to the Treaties of Peace in 1783;” but I was prevented by a variety of other avocations. The History has however loft nothing by this delay, as I am enabled to continue it down to the middle of the year 1787.

I take this opportunity publicly to express my gratitude to all and each of those friends who have in the least assisted me.

Finally, I pray the Lord that he would lay his blessing upon my unworthy labors, for the glory of his holy name.

Strickenhof in Livonia,
May 20, 1788.

GEORGE HENRY LOSKIEN,

PART I.

CHAPTER I.

The first Europeans who came to North America found this immense continent inhabited by numerous nations, all of whom are comprehended under the general name of Indians. Their numbers have been often over-rated, owing to the different names frequently given to one nation.

As to their origin, there is no certainty. The investigations even of the most learned have produced nothing but conjectures more or less probable; nor will I detain my readers with a repetition, much less enter into a review of them.

Those seem to be nearest the truth who join the celebrated Dr. Robertson, in supposing Tartary in Asia to be the native country of all the American Indian nations. But it is my intention to confine myself to an account of only two of these nations, namely the Delaware and Iroquois. The Delaware are divided into three tribes. The Unami are considered as the head of the nation, the Wunulachible are next in rank, and then follow the Minsi. The name Delaware was undoubtedly first given to them by the Europeans; for they call themselves Leni-lenape, that is Indian men; or Wopanachty, that is, a people, living toward the rising of the sun, having formerly inhabited the eastern coast of North America. This name is likewise given to them by the other Indian nations. The Iroquois have received their name from the French and most historians, who have written of them, make use of it. But the English call them the Six Nations, as they now consist of six nations in league with each other. Formerly they were called the Five Nations, five only being joined in that alliance. But as we shall speak of them both in their former and present state, I shall for the sake of peripety confine myself to the name of Iroquois. They call themselves Aqunwhokihi, that is, United People always to remind each other, that their security and power consists in a mutual strict adherence to their alliance. Others call them Mingo and some Maquis. These six confederate nations are the Mohawks, Oneida, Onondage, Cayuga, Seneca, and Tuscarora. The latter joined the confederacy about 70 years ago. The rest of the nations either in league with the Delaware and Iroquois, or connected with them by some means or other, are the Miskiwi, Shawangye, Cherokee, Tuscaloosu, Wunulachible, Kikapus, Mykbas, Tuckfobas, Chipewaas Otwonas, Putuwatessen, Nantitas, Wyandots or Hurons, Chackwacas, Chikoswet, and Creek Indians, with some others whose names are occasionally mentioned in this history. All these Indian nations live to the west of New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North and South Carolina, and Georgia. But it is difficult exactly to determine the boundaries of the different Ch. I. particularly the Delaware and Iroquois.

different countries they inhabit, partly for want of good surveys, and partly on account of the unsettled state of some of the nations, and therefore their territories can only be described in a general way. The Delaware live about half way between Lake Erie and the river Ohio. The Iroquois possess the country behind New York, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, about the Lakes Erie and Ontario, extending westward to the Mississippi and southward to the Ohio. The Mahicans live more to the eastward, are much mixed with the white people*, and not numerous. Their neighbors are the Oneida and Tuscarora. Then follow in a line from east to west, the Onondaga, Cayuga, and Seneca tribes. The Mahicans are neighbors of the Iroquois. The Shawanoe live below the Delaware, towards the river Ohio. The Wiondats and Hurons partly inhabit the country on the west coast of Lake Erie near Sandusky Creek, partly about Fort Detroit, between the Lakes Huron and Michigan. The Ottowas and Putawatomies live also to the west of Lake Erie, but a great way beyond it. The Wawiachtamas and Tuscaroras reside chiefly between the rivers Siotto and Wabash, and the Kickapoo, Michik, and Tuckahoes, inhabit the banks on both sides the Wabash, but are far distant from each other. The Chipewas are a numerous nation inhabiting the northern coast of Lake Erie. Some of the Nomiheks live in Maryland, but by far the greater part of this tribe retired first to the Suquehannah, and then further north. The Cherokee inhabit the mountains behind North Carolina, between the river Cherokee, which flows into the Ohio, and South Carolina; eastward of the Mississippi. The Chactaws or Catabas live behind Georgia on the banks of the Mississippi, and the Creeks are neighbors of the Cherokees and Chactawas. They live behind the mountains of Carolina and Georgia, and are divided into the Upper, Middle, and Lower Creeks. Between the Creeks and Che-

* Thus the Europeans and their descendants are called in America, to distinguish them from the Indians.
rokees, more to the westward on the east side of the Missippí are the Chikóeaws, who inhabit both sides of the river Chika fow, or Jalon River, which empties itself into the Missippí. Among these Indians are some negroes, who either were taken captive in war, or ran away from their masters, and sought safety among the Indians.

I shall defer mentioning the manner in which the Dela wares and Iroquois are connected, both with each other and with the above-mentioned nations, until I treat of their history and constitution, and content myself at present with giving some account of the country they inhabit.

This includes the large lakes, to be described hereafter, and lies between the 37th and 48th degree of north latitude and the 77th and 92d west longitude, from the meridian of London; its length being about eight hundred, and its greatest breadth eleven hundred miles. It is bounded by New York and Pennsylvania on the east; by the river Ohio, south; by the river Missippí, west; and by Canada north. This part of America is remarkably well watered having large brooks, rivers, and lakes, by which an inland communication is rendered easy. The above-mentioned chain of large lakes is very remarkable, and a most magnificent display of the works of the Almighty. Their size might entitle some of them to the name of inland oceans. The largest is Lake Superior, situated between the 46th and 50th degree of north latitude and the 84th and 92d of west longitude. Lake Superior may be justly deemed the largest lake in America, if not in the whole world. An east there should exist any larger lake in that part of North America, into which no European has as yet penetrated; its circumference, including all the bays, is computed at sixteen hundred miles. Captain Carver says, that he traversed above twelve hundred miles over this lake, and found the bed mostly a solid rock. The water is very clear, and almost as transparent as the air. If the sun shines bright it is impossible through this medium to look at the rocks.
the bottom, above a minute or two. The water has also this property, that though the superfluities is much warmed by the heat of the sun, yet when drawn up at about a fathom depth, it is as cold as ice. Storms rage in this lake here as upon the ocean, and the waves rise nearly as high, so as to endanger the largest ships. Many rivers empty themselves into this lake, but I will only mention one, which falls from an height of six hundred feet perpendicular, and appears at a distance like a white streak in the air, its stream being very narrow.

Lake Huron is the next in magnitude, and joined to the former by a natural channel called the Straits of St. Marie. It lies between the 43d and 46th degree north latitude and the 79th and 85th west longitude, is almost triangular in shape, and about one thousand miles in circumference. Among its other curiosities, is a bay called Thunder-bay. The Indians and Europeans have given it this name, on account of the continual thunder and lightning prevailing there.

To this, Lake Michigan is joined by the Straits of Michilimackinack. It is situated between the 42d and 46th degree of north latitude and 85th and 87th of west longitude, and about five hundred miles in circumference. A chain of small islands runs through it, which have a beautiful appearance.

Lake Erie is also connected with Lake Huron by a long and broad channel. The islands in Lake Erie are infested by serpents, among which the hissing snake and rattlesnake are the most remarkable. The latter are more numerous here, than in any other part of America.

Lake Ontario is joined by the river Niagara to the former. It lies between the 43d and 45th degree of north latitude and the 76th and 79th west longitude, in a direction from north-east to south-west, being an oblong of about five hundred miles in circumference. The great river St. Lawrence has its source in this lake. In all these lakes no current is observable, though they receive such a number of rivers and brooks, but their waters are remarkably clear, sweet, and wholesome, abounding with fish, and navigable for large vessels. The English kept even large armed ships both on Lake Ontario and Erie, for the defence of their trade with the Indians.

There are besides a number of smaller lakes in that part of North America; Lake Oneida is about thirty miles long and fifteen broad; Lake Cajugu, about as large; and our missionaries have met with some, rather larger, in the Seneca country. Most of the large rivers have falls. The chief river in that country, inhabited by the Delawares and Iroquois, is the Ohio. It rises about two hundred and fifty miles to the north-east of Pittsburg, in a thick forest, about half way between the south-east side of Lake Ontario and the river Susquehannah, which runs through Pennsylvania. The Delawares call this river Alligewiipo; which the Europeans have changed into Allighene; and the Iroquois call it Ohio, that is, the beautiful river. The Ohio is a navigable and gentle stream. Large vessels may pass from Pittsburg down the Ohio to the Mississippi, and to an island in that river, called New Orleans. The river Monongehela rises in Virginia, and falls into the Ohio at Pittsburg. About one hundred miles north of that town the river Venango empties itself into the Ohio. In travelling to Prequille, Lake Erie, or Niagara, you leave the Ohio and enter this river. But this journey is rendered extremely inconvenient by a portage or carrying place, which obliges travellers to convey their baggage fifteen miles by land, and then to re-ship it; and if they are not certain of finding another boat ready, they are under the necessity of conveying the boat with the baggage.

The river Muskingum, that is, Elk's Eye, on account of the number of elk feeding on its banks, rises near Cauhoga in a small lake, falls into the Ohio about two hundred miles below Pittsburg, and is navigable for Indian boats from its source to its mouth. About three hundred miles below Pittsburg, the river Sisto, and a little further west, the Waho, meets.
Of the Indian Country.

meets the Ohio. The river Sandusky runs from south to north, and falls into Lake Erie; and the Strawberry river, deriving its name from the great number of large and well-flavored strawberries, growing on its banks, empties itself into Lake Ontario. Most of the smaller rivers of the country flow into one or other of these two lakes. Many rivers, not mentioned here, fall into the Ohio, which runs from north-east to south-west, and after a course of above sixteen hundred miles, joins the Mississippi about fourteen hundred miles below Pittsburg. Brooks, generally called Creeks, are remarkably numerous, and fall either into the rivers or lakes above-mentioned. As we have touched upon the two great rivers, the Mississippi and St. Lawrence, I will only just observe, that they rise not far from each other, and taking different directions, empty themselves into the ocean, each about two thousand five hundred miles from their source.

The Mississippi, one of the largest and most majestic rivers in the world, has delightful banks of forest and meadows, upon which whole herds of elk and other game are seen grazing. In some parts, these pastures are bounded by beautiful hillocks, perpendicular rocks, or high mountains, from which the prospect is most enchanting. Several rivers, equal to the Danube or Rhine in magnitude, empty themselves into it from east to west. It has likewise several falls. The most remarkable are the falls of St. Anthony, the noise of which is heard at the distance of twenty miles. Some miles below this cataract is a cave of astonishing depth. The Indians call it the habitation of the great Spirit. About twenty feet forward from the entrance, a subterranean lake appears, the end of which has not yet been discovered, on account of the darkness of the cave. The river Mississippi at length enters the Gulf of Mexico, dividing itself into various branches.

The river St. Lawrence runs through a large part of Canada, and having received a great number of larger and smaller smaller rivers, empties itself into the Bay of St. Laurence, being at its mouth ninety miles broad. The river Niagara may be considered as an arm of the river St. Laurence, about forty-five miles long. The latter having received an immense addition to its waters in a course of near one thousand six hundred and fifty miles, falls one hundred and forty feet perpendicular, and having rushed forward about seven miles with extreme rapidity, falls again nearly from the same height with a noise, which is heard at a distance almost incredible. Besides the falls of Niagara, the river St. Laurence has other falls, which render it necessary to unload the boats, and carry the goods by land for a longer or shorter way, and yet its navigation is considerable. I return from this digression to the river Ohio.
Of the Indian Country. P.L.

The banks of the Ohio are subject to frequent inundations, especially in spring, when the snow melts in the north. This probably is the cause of the remarkable luxuriance and richness of their soil. In general the whole country inhabited by the Delawares and Iroquois is uncommonly fruitful, but it requires the usual tillage and manure, after having rendered its produce for some years spontaneously.

The country through which the Wabash flows, is very level. Here are plains, many leagues in extent, producing nothing but grass, and in a journey of some days you meet with neither hill, tree, nor thicket. Upon these plains, herds of buffaloes are seen grazing, consisting sometimes of more than one hundred head.

It is said, that the further you travel to the west, the more fruitful and beautiful the country appears, but it is for the most part uninhabited.

The most considerable chain of mountains in the land of the Delawares and Iroquois is a part of the Appalachian, or Allegheny mountains, extending from Florida in different branches almost without any interruption to the most northern parts of America. These mountains receive different names, in the different countries in which they lie. Those to the west of the Mississippi, in the neighborhood of the river St. Peter, are called the Shining Mountains, on account of an immense number of large crystals, shooting from the rocks, and sparkling beautifully in the rays of the sun, so as to be seen at a great distance. Another part of the same ridge in Pennsylvania, is called the Blue Ridge. The name given to the highest is, the Great Blue, or Wolf's Mountain, on account of the number of wolves, which infest it. The most considerable mountains in the land of the Delawares, on the road to Pittsburg, are the Scidling, Allegheny, and Laurel.
Ch. 1. Of the Climate of North America.

The above-mentioned mountains are the eastern border of the Indian country towards Pennsylvania and the colonies. To the west of them the land is diversified with hillocks and gentle risings, but is not mountainous. Both the hills and the lowlands have generally the same soil. The latter is so overgrown with thickets, that the sun can hardly penetrate. These thickets are called swamps.

As to the climate, it has been generally remarked, that those American provinces, which lie in the same latitude with Europe, suffer a much severer and longer winter than the latter. The most northern part of the United States lies in the same degree of latitude with Great Britain and the chief part of Germany, but its winter is exceedingly severe, and the summer but short. Nova Scotia, the north part of New England, and the principal part of Canada, are in the same degree of latitude with France and the south part of Germany, but the winters of the former are very cold and long. The south part of New England, New York, the greatest part of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and the south part of Canada, lie in the same degree of latitude with Spain and Italy, but the cold is very severe and lasting. Sometimes indeed the heat of summer is excessive, but sudden changes from heat to cold are frequent. Maryland, Virginia, and North Carolina, are in the
the same degree of latitude with the most southern parts of Europe, but have much more frost and snow. This severity of climate probably proceeds from the north and north-west winds blowing over an immense tract of land, covered with mountains, lakes, and forests. But the want of inhabitants and the large forests contribute much towards it. At the time when Tacitus wrote his history of Germany, it appears that its winters were much more severe and lasting than at present. It is therefore probable, that the severity of the climate will abate in America in proportion to its culture and population.

In the country of the Delawares they have warm summers. The hottest months are July and August, when woollen clothes cannot be worn. Even in autumn, and as late or later than Christmas, but little frost is seen, and if even in a clear night the ground should freeze, it thaws soon after sun-rise. In general the winter is mild, the weather being chiefly rainy, damp and changeable. After a few clear days, rainy and foggy weather is sure to follow. The river Muskingum, being a very slow current, generally freezes over, once or perhaps twice in a season. The snow is never deep, nor remains long on the ground. The winter between 1779 and 1780 was called remarkably severe, as the snow fell once two feet deep. In eight days it was gone, and the cold weather lasted only till February. In the land of the Iroquois the cold is more intense, and the snow deeper.

The difference of one hundred miles to north or south, makes likewise a great difference in the temperature of the air. Near the river Sandusky the cold is much severer, with a greater quantity of snow, than on the Muskingum; and on the Scioto the snow hardly ever remains on the ground. The weather varies also considerably on the east and west side of the Allegheny mountains. For in Pennsylvania the east wind generally brings rain; but never on the Ohio, where the east wind seldom blows, and never above twelve hours at a time. But the south and west winds bring rain, and and the rains from the west generally set in for a whole week. Even rains sometimes with a north-west wind. All storms of thunder and lightning rise either with southerly, westerly, or north-west winds, but in Pennsylvania the north-west wind brings clear and fine weather.

As to the stones and minerals found in this country, very little is known, worthy of notice. The wants of the Indians are as yet too circumscribed, to call their attention to search and examine valuable subterranean productions, from which however no inference can be drawn, that such are wanting. So much is certain, that there are neither gold nor silver mines in the land of the Delawares and Iroquois; but copper and lead is found in some places. In Lake Superior are islands, where the surface of the ground is covered with copper-ore. Native copper is likewise found in some parts. Iron-ore is common, but whether its quality be as good as that found in Pennsylvania, time must shew. The latter is thought better than any found in Europe for ship-builders' use, being not so easily corroded by salt-water. Rocks are met with on the banks of the Ohio; but there are not many in other parts, and hardly any on the Muskingum; most of the mountains and hills being covered with turf. A kind of sand-stone is found on the Ohio, which makes the best grindstones. The Indians value a species of black stone, soft and easily cut, as the best for making tobacco pipe heads. Limestone likewise has been discovered of late. Near the Ohio are several large salt-licks, which are a common place of resort for deer and other wild animals. A great quantity of salt-petree is found everywhere, in abundance, and is esteemed remarkably good.

As to the rest of the produce of the Indian country, whatever may be relied upon will be mentioned occasionally, when we treat of the customs and manner of living of the inhabitants.

* For further particulars concerning the lakes, rivers, mountains, &c. of North America, see Morse's Geography of the United States.
CHAPTER II.

Of the Languages, Arts, and Sciences, known among the Indians.

The Delawares and Iroquois, and the nations in league with them, resemble each other much, both as to their bodily and mental qualifications. The men are mostly slender, middle-sized, handsome, and fair. There are not many deformed or crippled among them. The women are short, not so handsome, and rather clumsier in appearance than the men. Their skin is of a reddish brown, nearly resembling copper, but in different shades. Some are of a brown yellow, not much differing from the mulattoes; some light brown, hardly to be known from a brown European, except by their hair and eyes. The former is jet black, fluff, lank and coarse, almost like horse-hair. They grow grey in old age. Curled hair is seldom found amongst them.

The opinion of some authors, who maintain that the Indians, even in a state of puberty, have no hair but upon their heads, is not well founded. They do not differ from other nations in this respect, but as they consider hairs upon the body as a deformity, they are continually rooting them out, so that at length there are scarcely any visible. Their eyes are large and black, and as savages, the men have a very fierce and dreadful countenance. Their features are regular and not disagreeable, but the cheek bones are rather prominent, especially in the women. Both have very white teeth, and, when healthy, a sweet breath.

In point of strength they far excel the South Americans and West Indians. The men have a firm walk; a light step, and run remarkably swift. Their smell, sight, and hearing hearing is very acute, and their memory so strong, that they can relate the most trivial circumstances, which have happened in their councils many years ago, and tell the exact time of former meetings, with the greatest precision. The powers of their imagination are lively, and enable them, in a short time, to attain to great skill and dexterity in whatever they learn. They comprehend whatever belongs to their manner of living, or tends to their supposed advantage, with the greatest ease, and their continual practice in, and scrupulous attention to every needful accomplishment, to which they are trained up from their infancy, gives them many advantages over other nations. Indeed, they have but few objects which require their whole attention, and therefore it is less divided. They have given many instances of the great excellencies of their mental powers, and of the accuracy of their deliberation and judgment. Some of them display much good sense in their commerce and conversation with strangers, and act with strict conformity to the rules of justice and equity, which proves that they see things in the proper light. The more opportunities they have to exert their faculties, the more we discover that God has blessed them with a great share of natural understanding.
Of the Indians in general.

Though the Indians are uncultivated, yet perhaps no heathen nation, in its moral conduct, exhibits a greater show of goodness and virtue. This pre-eminence will appear upon the slightest comparison between them and other heathen, and the following short remarks made by our missionaries, after many years experience and an intimate acquaintance with them, will confirm it.

In common life and conversation the Indians observe great decency. They usually treat one another and strangers with kindness and civility, and without empty compliments. Their whole behavior appears solid and prudent. In matters of consequence they seem to speak and act with the most cool and serious deliberation, avoiding all appearance of precipitancy. But upon closer examination, their caution tion appears to rise chiefly from suspicion, and their contents is affected. They are perfect masters of the art dissembling. If an Indian has lost his whole property

e and any other calamity, he speaks of it as he would of the most trivial occurrence: Yet his pride cannot always con-est his sorrow.

In the converse of both sexes, the greatest decency an propriety is observed. At least nothing licentious or indecent is openly allowed, so that in this respect it cannot be denied, but that they excel most nations. But in secret, they are nevertheless guilty of fornication, and even of unnatural crimes.

They are sociable and friendly, and a mutual intercourse subsists between the families. Quarrels, sarcastical and offensive behavior, are carefully avoided. They never put any one publicly to the blush, nor reproach even a noted mur-derer. Their common conversation turns upon hunting, dish and affairs of state. No one interrupts his neighbor in speaking, and they listen very attentively to news, whether true or false. This is one reason, why they are so fond of receiving strangers, but no inquiry is made about news, till they have smoked one pipe of tobacco.

They never curse and swear in their conversation, nor have they any such expressions for it in their language, as are common in other nations.

By their behavior it appears as if the greatest confidence subsisted among them. They frequently leave their implements and game in the open air, for many days; not alto-tgether because they place much dependence upon the honesty and faithfulness of their neighbors, for stealing is not an uncommon practice among them, but because they highly resent the least idea of suspicion. They therefore pretend to guard the game merely from the attack of wild beasts.

Difference of rank, with all its consequences, is not to be found among the Indians. They are all equally noble and free. The only difference consists in wealth, age, deacrity,

Of the Indians in general.

Ch. II.

Dexterity, courage, and office. Whoever furnishes much wapum for the chiefs, is considered as a person of quality and riches. Age is every-where much respected, for, according to their ideas, long life and wisdom are always connected together. Young Indians endeavor by presents to gain instruction from the aged, and to learn from them how to train to old age. However, the Indian youth is much degenerated in this respect. A clever hunter, a valiant warrior, and an intelligent chief, are all much honored; and no Indian, with all his notions of liberty, ever refuses to follow and obey his captain, or his chief.

Prerogatives are very acceptable to an Indian, but he is not willing to acknowledge himself under any obligations to the donor, and even takes it amiss, if they are discontinued. Some old men and women pretend to the art of procuring presents of cloaths and provisions, by a certain charm, or magic spell, called bevon. At least they find the superstition of believing in the efficacy of the bevon a profitable one.

The hospitality of the Indians is well known. It extends even to strangers, who take refuge among them. They count it a most sacred duty, from which no one is exempted. Whoever refuses relief to any one, commits a grievous offence, and not only makes himself detested and abhorred by all, but liable to revenge from the offended person.

In their conduct towards their enemies they are cruel and inexorable, and when enraged, bent upon nothing but murder and bloodshed. They are however remarkable for concealing their passions, and waiting for a convenient opportunity of gratifying them. But then their fury knows no bounds. If they cannot satisfy their resentment, they even call upon their friends and pottelry to do it. The longest space of time cannot cool their wrath, nor the most distant place of refuge afford security to their enemy.

Fornication,
Of the Indians in general.

Fornication, adultery, theft, lying, and cheating, they consider as heinous and scandalous offences, and punish them in various ways.

An adulterer must expect that the party offended will require him, either in the same manner, or put him to death. An adulterer is in general merely put away; but sometimes destroyed.

A thief must restore whatever he has stolen; but if he is too poor, or cannot be brought to justice, his relations must pay for him. In case of violent robberies, the forcerers are consulted, and these pretend to send the offender out of the world by an inexplicable process.

Since the Indians have taken so much to drinking rum, murders are more frequent. An Indian feast is seldom concluded without bloodshed. Though they lay all the blame to the rum, yet murder committed in drunkenness is severely punished. For the murder of a man one hundred yards of wampom, and for that of a woman two hundred yards must be paid by the murderer. If he is too poor, which is commonly the case, and his friends can or will not assist him, he must fly from the resentment of the relations. But if any one has murdered his own relation, he escapes without much difficulty; for the family, who alone have a right to take revenge, do not chuse by too severe a punishment, inflicted on the murderer, to deprive their race of two members at once, and thus to weaken their influence. They rather endeavor to bring about a reconciliation, and even often justify the deed.

The Indian women are more given to stealing, lying, quarrelling, backbiting, and flandering, than the men.

We have already observed, that the Indians are very capable of learning every kind of work. Some, who have long resided among the white people, have learnt to work in iron, and make hatchets, axes, and other tools, without any regular instruction. Yet few will submit to hard labor, neither their education nor their wants inclining them to industry and application. The Indians in general, but but especially the men, love ease; and even hunting, though their chief employ, is attended to, with perseverance, but for a few months of the year; the rest are chiefly spent in idleness. The women are more employed, for the whole burden of housekeeping lies upon them, and nothing but hunger and want canrouse the men from their drowsiness, and give them activity.

The honor and welfare of the nation is considered by the Indians as a most important concern. For, though they are joined together neither by force nor compact, yet they consider themselves as one nation, of which they have an exalted idea, and profess great attachment to their particular tribe. Independence appears to them to be the grand prerogative of Indians, considered either collectively or as individuals. They frankly own the superiority of the Europeans in several arts, but despise them, as submitting to laborious employments. The advantages they possess in hunting, fishing, and even in their moral conduct, appear to them superior to any European refinements. This public spirit of the Indians produces the most noble exertions in favour of their own people. They dread no danger; suffer any hardships, and meet torments and death itself with composure, in the defence of their country. Even in their last moments they prefer the greatest appearance of intrepidity, in honor of their nation, boast of their treachery, and with savage pride defy the greatest sufferings and tortures which their enemies can inflict upon them.

Though they esteem the Europeans as a very industrious and ingenious people, yet in general they consider them as enemies. They are extremely loth to exchange their manner of living for that of the Europeans, and maintain, that as a fish was never intended by God to adopt the life of a fowl, so an Indian was never designed to live like an European. They imagine that they have sufficient reason for disliking all the white people; for, they say, the Europeans have taken away our land; enclosed our hunting places for part l. C the
Of the Indian Languages.

P.L.

The use of their charts, done infinite mischief to us, especially by the importation of rum, and probably intend in time to seize upon all our country, and to destroy our whole nation. Though the long intercourse between the Delawares and Europeans has moderated this disgust, yet they have neither love nor confidence towards them. The French, however, seem to possess the greatest share of the good-will of the Indians, by easily entering into the Indian manner of living, and appearing always good-humored. The English are not so high in their favor.

Since the late war, which procured the independence of America, the white Americans are all called Big-uncle by the Indians, from the long swords worn by them.

The Iroquois still maintain their good character, for the punctuality with which they adhere to public alliances. But as the reader will find traces sufficient in the following chapters, by which he may discover the true character of the Indians, we will now turn to their languages.

I will not enter into any inquiry about the origin of the languages spoken by the Delawares and Iroquois, this being at present as difficult to determine as the origin of the nations themselves, but will only observe, that it appears very probable, that the Delaware and Iroquois are the principal languages spoken throughout the known part of North America, Terra Labrador excepted, and that all others are dialects of them. Our missionaries at least, who were particularly attentive to this subject, have never met with any, which had not some similarity with either one or the other: But the Delaware language bears no resemblance to the Iroquois.

Though the three different tribes of the Delawares have the same language, yet they speak different dialects. The Unamis and Wusalachtikos, who formerly inhabited the eastern coast of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, nearly agree in pronunciation; But the dialect of the Munsey, who formerly lived in Menissing, beyond the Blue Mountains, differs so much from the former, that they would hardly be able
Of the Indian Languages.

able to understand each other, did they not keep up a continual intercourse.

The language of the Delawares has an agreeable sound, both is common conversation, and public delivery. The dialect spoken by the Unamis and Wunalachtikos is peculiarly graceful to the ear, and much more easily learnt by an European, than that of the Monfsys, which is rougher and spoken with a broad accent. However, the Monfsy dialect is a key to many expressions in the Unami and Wunalachticos. The latter have a way of dropping some syllables, so that, without a knowledge of the former, it would be impossible, either to spell their words or guess their meaning.

The pronunciation of the Delaware language is in general soft, only the ch is a very strong guttural. The letters s, r, ph, and v, are wanting in their alphabet. They therefore omit them entirely in foreign words, or pronounce them differently, for example, Filip for Philip, Petelus for Petrus, Philcilla for Priscilla. They have few monosyllables, but a great number of polysyllables and compound words.

In trisyllables the accent is generally placed upon the middle, and in polysyllables upon the last syllable but one. This must be very minutely attended to, because the sense of many words depends entirely upon the accent.

We have already observed that several other languages derive their origin from the Delaware, and this proceeds chiefly from the vicinity or connexions of the different nations and tribes. For instance, the language of the Mahikan is nearly related to the Monfsy dialect, these two nations having formerly been neighbors in the province of New York. The Shawanofo is also related to the Monfsy, but more to the Mahikan: Only the former generally place the accent upon the last syllable. The Ottawa is nearly related to the Shawanofo, but the Chipawa more immediately to the Delaware. The language of the Twichtwees and Wa-wa-wa-waros resembles the Shawanofo; in dialect the Kikapus, Tukachfas, Mothkos, and Karhaki, differ from the De-lawre in proportion to their distance from each other, but are all nearly related. Thus also the languages of all those nations, formerly residing on the sea-coast in Maryland, very much resemble the Delaware, differing only in pronunciation and accent.

The Iroquois have one common language, but each of the six nations speaks a different dialect: However, they understand each other with ease. The Mohawks, Oneida, and Onondago, vary but little; the Cayuga rather more; then follows the Seneca, and last of all the Tuscarora. The languages of many other Indian nations are nearly related to the Iroquois, especially the Huron, which seems to differ only in pronunciation. But the Cherokees speak a compound of the Shawano, Iroquois, Huron, and others.

All these languages however are subject to innovation, owing to the intercourse of the different tribes or their connexion with the Europeans. A mixed language was thus formed by the intermarrying of the French and Indians in Canada, which was countenanced by the French government.

In things relating to common life, the language of the Indians is remarkably copious. They have frequently several names for one and the same thing, under different circumstances. For instance, the Delawares have ten different names for a bear, according to its age or sex. Such names have often not the least resemblance to each other. But if we consider all these languages in a general point of view, they are, as far as we know, very deficient in expression, though not all equally poor. The Indians have of course no terms but for the things in which they are conversant and engaged, and these are but few. Nor do they take any pains to enrich their language, in proportion as their knowledge extends, but rather choose to express themselves in a figurative or descriptive manner. Thus the language of their orators, who most sensibly feel the want of proper expressions, is full of images, and they find even gesture and grimace necessary to convey their sentiments. When they for new objects, they commonly observe, that these are things which have no name. Now and then a council is held to consult about a term, descriptive of a new thing. Thus they have chosen a word to express brown color, signifying the middle between black and white. For buckles they invented a word meaning metal flies sitting.

The want of proper expressions in spiritual things, of which they were totally ignorant, was most perplexing. But since the Gospel has been preached among them, the languages of the Delawares and Iroquois have gained much in this respect. And in proportion as the believing Indians grow in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ and his word, their languages improve and become more copious.

There are indeed no rules of oratory laid down in the Indian language, yet their orators must be well exercised, before they can gain applause. In their public delivery, they speak with a very pompous and elevated tone, in which the Iroquois excel all other Indians. In matters relating to their own affairs, in which they are well versed, both they and the Delawares speak with great clearness and precision, and so concise, that great circumlocution is required to convey the full meaning of their expressions in an European language. If they intend to speak in an obscure and referred manner, they can say so much in few words, that even the Indians themselves must study the true sense of their allusions. They show great skill in conveying an account of a bad action in terms, which to men, ignorant of their craftiness, appear descriptive of a virtuous deed, and for this purpose their expressions are well chosen. The chiefs are particularly well versed in this art of diffambling, and therefore very strict attention must be paid to every word of their discourse, especially if an answer is expected, and great caution is required to guard against deceit. The language of the Iroquois appears more easy to be learned, than that of the Delawares.

As the Indians have no letters, it is difficult for an European to write some of their words with accuracy. However, the missionary, David Zeiherger, has with great diligence compiled an English and Delaware Spelling Book and Grammar, which was printed in Philadelphia in 1776, from which I will here quote the Lord's Prayer as a specimen of the Delaware language:

The following table will give the reader some idea of the difference between the Delaware and Iroquois:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Delaware</th>
<th>Iroquois</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>The Bible</td>
<td>Gachitocheiatesgichetsh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bread</td>
<td>Jocharebquha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brother</td>
<td>Jatattegh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Earth</td>
<td>Uchwuntsha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Gospel</td>
<td>Ganichwifi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prayer</td>
<td>Untersensiiji</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Faith</td>
<td>Ne Waunouttak</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Grace</td>
<td>Ne Agotaeri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>God</td>
<td>Hawonio</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Savior</td>
<td>Unquisch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Heart</td>
<td>Awerieseihu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A Child</td>
<td>Isiiia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A Man</td>
<td>Etchfchim</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A Mother</td>
<td>Onurha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Creator of the World</td>
<td>Gcrochind na uch-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silver</td>
<td>I wuktihisuak</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Soul</td>
<td>Akais</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salvation</td>
<td>Gewerishishe</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sea</td>
<td>Zenicheswa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daughter</td>
<td>Hcohawak</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Death</td>
<td>Echquihawak</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Ne Jwoheje</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Father
We must not expect to find arts and sciences amongst the wild Indians, nor even any inclination to study them. They are not only unable to read and write, but it is very difficult to give them any idea of these accomplishments. If a written or printed paper, or book, is shown them, and something read or spoken of, as contained in it, some imagine, that it faintly speaks directly to the reader, dictating whatever he wishes to know. Others think, that the paper, when written upon, can speak to the reader, but so as to be heard by no one else. Therefore a letter, particularly if it be sealed, is considered as a very sacred thing. But they will not take pains to learn either to read or write. If any treaties of peace, contracts, or commercial papers, are required to be delivered to the Europeans, signed by their chiefs, captains, or counsellors, they never do it themselves, but get others to subscribe their names. Then each puts his mark to his name, which is often nothing but a crooked line, or a croft, sometimes a line in the form of a turkey's foot, a tortoise, or of some other creature. Some are even ashamed of their Indian names, and prefer the names given them by the white people. Some have learnt to write the initials of their new names.

As they are ignorant of these arts, and their history depends solely upon tradition, it follows of course, that instead of a true account of facts, we hear nothing but fables concerning their origin and ancestors. For instance, the Iroquois say, that the Indians formerly lived under ground, but hearing accidentally of a fine country above, they left their subterranean habitations, and took possession of the surface. The Delawares say, that the heavens are inhabited by men, and that the Indians descended from them to inhabit the earth: That a pregnant woman had been put away by her husband, and thrown down upon the earth, where she was delivered of twins, and thus by degrees the earth was peopled. The Nantikoks pretend, that seven Indians had found themselves all on a sudden sitting on the sea-coast, but knew not how they came there, whether they were created on the spot, or came from some other place beyond the seas, and that by these the country was peopled. Others affirm, that the first Indians had their origin from the waters. However foolish these traditions may be, they all seem to imply, that the Indians came from some other country.

Neither the Delawares nor Iroquois know any thing of their own history, but what has been verbally transmitted to them by their fathers and grandfathers. They carefully repeat it to their children, and to impress it more upon their minds, dress up their story in a variety of figures. When the Delawares speak with the Europeans about their ancestors, they boast that they have been mighty warriors, and exhibited many feats of valor. They delight in describing their genealogies, and are so well versed in them, that they mark every branch of the family, with the greatest precision. They also add the character of their forefathers: such an one was a wife and intelligent counsellor; a renowned chief; a mighty warrior, or a rich man, &c.

But though they are indifferent about the history of former times, and ignorant of the art of reading and writing, yet their their ancestors were well aware, that they stood in need of something to enable them to convey their ideas to a distant nation, or preserve the memory of remarkable events at least for a season. To this end they invented something like hieroglyphics, and also strings and bolts of wampom.

Their hieroglyphics are characteristic figures, which are more frequently painted upon trees than cut in stone. They are intended, either to caution against danger, to mark a place of safety, to direct the wanderer into the right path, to record a remarkable transaction, or to commemorate their deeds and achievements of their celebrated heroes, and are as intelligible to them, as a written account is to us. For this purpose, they generally chuse a tall well-grown tree, standing upon an eminence, and peeling the bark on one side, scrape the wood till it becomes white and clean. They then draw with a rude pen, the figure of the hero whose exploits they wish to celebrate, clad in his armor, and at his feet as many men without heads or arms as fell by his own hand. These drawings may last above fifty years, and it is a great consolation to the dying warrior, that his glorious deeds will be preferred to long, for the admiration and imitation of posterity. As every Indian understands their meaning, a traveller cannot gratify the feelings of his Indian guides in a more acceptable manner, than by stopping to examine monuments of this kind, and attending patiently to their extravagant accounts of the prowess of their warriors. But these are frequently so ridiculous and improbable, that it is a matter of surprise, how they should be able to invent such unaccountable fictions. The warriors sometimes paint their own deeds and adventures; for instance, the number of prisoners or scalps taken; the number of troops they commanded, and of such as fell in battle. Other paintings point out the places, where a company of Indians have been hunting, showing the nights they spent there, the number of deer, bears, &c. killed during the hunt, &c. If even a party of travelling Indians have spent but one night in the woods, it may be easily known, not only by the structure of their Use of Wampum. P.

Sleeping huts, but by their marks on the trees, to what trib they belonged: For they always leave a mark behind, mad either with ruddle or charcoal.

Wampum is an Iroquois word, meaning a muscle. A number of these muscled strung together is called a string of wampom which, when a fathom long, is termed a fathom or belt of wampom, but the word string is commonly used, whether it be long or short. Before the Europeans came to North America, the Indians used to make their strings of wampom chiefly of small pieces of wood of equal size, stained either black or white. Few were made of muscled, which were effected very valuable and difficult to make; for, not having proper tools, they spent much time in fining them, and yet their work had a clumsy appearance. But the Europeans soon contrived to make strings of wampom, both neat and elegant, and in great abundance. These they bartered with the Indians for other goods, and found this traffic very advantagous. The Indians immediately gave up the use of the old wooden substitutes for wampom, and procured those made of muscled, which, though fallen in price, were always accounted valuable.

These muscled are chiefly found on the coast of Virginia and Maryland, and are valued according to their color, which is brown, violet, and white. The former are sometimes of so dark a shade, that they pass for black, and are double the price of the white. Having first fawed them into square pieces about a quarter of an inch in length, and an eighth in thickness, they grind them round or oval upon a common grindstone. Then a hole being bored lengthways through each, large enough to admit a wire, whipcord, or thin thong, they are strung like beads, and a string of wampom is completed. Four or six strings joined in one breadth, and fastened to each other with fine thread, make a belt of wampom, being about three or four inches wide, and three feet long, containing perhaps four, eight, and twelve fathoms of wam-pom, in proportion to its required length and breadth.
This is determined by the importance of the subject, which

6
Ch. II. Use of Wampom. 27

their belts are intended either to explain or confirm, or by the dignity of the persons to whom they are to be delivered. Every thing of moment transacted at solemn councils, either between the Indians themselves, or with the Europeans, is ratified, and made valid by firings and belts of wampom. Formerly they used to give sanction to their treaties by delivering a wing of some large bird; and this custom still prevails among the more western nations, in transacting business with the Delawares. But the Delawares themselves, the Iroquois, and the nations in league with them, are now sufficiently provided with handsome and well-wrought firings and belts of wampom. Upon the delivery of a firing, a long speech may be made, and much said upon the subject under consideration; but when a belt is given, few words are spoken, but they must be words of great importance, frequently requiring an explanation. Whenever the speaker has pronounced some important sentence, he delivers a firings of wampom, adding, "I give this firing of wampom as a confirmation of what I have spoken? But the chief subject of his discourse he confirms with a belt. The answers given to a speech thus delivered, must also be confirmed by firings and belts of wampom of the same size and number as those received. Neither the color, nor the other qualities of the wampom are matters of indifference, but have an immediate reference to those things which they are meant to confirm. The brown or deep violet, called black by the Indians, always means something of severe and doubtful import; but white is the color of peace. Thus if a firing or belt of wampom is intended to confirm a warning against evil, or an earnest reproof, it is delivered in black. When a nation is called upon to go to war, or war declared against it, the belt is black, or marked with red, called by themug color of blood, having in the middle the figure of an hatchet, in white wampom.

The Indian women are very dexterous in weaving the firings of wampom into belts, and marking them with different figures, perfectly agreeing with the different subjects con-contained in the speech. These figures are marked with white wampom upon the black, and with black upon white belts. For example, in a belt of peace, they very correctly represent in black wampom, two hands joined. A belt of peace is white, a fathom long and a hand's breadth. To distinguish one belt from the other, each has its peculiarity. No belt, except the war-belt, must show any color. If they are obliged to use black wampom for want of white, they daub it over with white clay, and though black may shine through, its value and import is consider as equal to white. These firings and belts of wampom also documents, by which the Indians remember the clauses and articles of the treaties made either between themselves, with the white people. They refer to them as to public records, carefully preserving them in a chest made for that purpose. At certain feasts they meet to study their meaning and to renew the ideas, of which they were an emblem: confirmation. On such occasions they sit down around the chest, take out one firing or belt after the other, handing about to every person present, and, that they may all comprehend its meaning, repeat the words pronounced on its livery in their whole connexion. By these means they enabled to remember the promises reciprocally made between the different parties. And as it is their custom to admit the young boys, who are related to the chiefs, to these assemblies, they become early acquainted with all the affairs of the state; and thus the contents of their documents transmitted to posterity, and cannot easily be forgotten.

The following instance may serve to show how well the mode of communication answers the purpose of recall subjects to their memory: A friend of mine, at Phila- phia, gave an Indian a string of wampom, adding, "I am your friend, and will serve you to the utmost of my power. Forty years after, the Indian returned the string, saying, "Brother, you gave me this string of wampom, saying, "I am your friend and will serve you to the utmost power." I am now aged, infirm, and poor;"
“now, as you promised.” And he generously kept his word.

Besides the above-mentioned methods, by which the Indians commemorate certain events; they likewise have songs in praise of their heroes, extolling their glorious exploits. These are frequently sung, but merely from memory. They teach them to their children; and those who love poetry, compose more, so that there is no want of them.

They require but very little arithmetic to keep an account of their goods and chattels, yet they are not wholly unacquainted with it. There are indeed some nations in North America who can count to ten or twenty only, and if they wish to express a greater number, point to the hair of their heads, symbolizing that the number exceeds their powers of calculation. But those nations who trade with the Europeans have learned to calculate pretty well. The Cherokees count to one hundred. The Iroquois and Delawares understand but little of our cyphers and letters, but they can count to thousands and hundreds of thousands. They count regularly to ten, make a mark, proceed to the next ten, and so on to the end of the account. Then, by adding the tens, they find hundreds, thousands, &c. &c. The women generally count upon their fingers.

Those Indians who understand the value of money have learned it chiefly from the English and Dutch. The Delawares call pence penwig, and dollars fijel. If they want to calculate a sum of money with exactness, they take Indian corn, calling every corn a penny or diller, adding as many as are necessary to make florins, gillings, and pounds.

Most of them determine a number of years by so many winters, summers, springs, or autumns, since such an event took place. Few of them know exactly how many years old they are after thirty. Some reckon from the time of an hard frost or a deep fall of snow in such a year; from a war with the Indians, or from the building of Pittsburgh or Philadelphia. For example, “When Pittsburg was first built, I was ten years old;” or, “In spring, when we boil sugar, "Sugar, or when we plant, that is, next March, or next "May, I shall be so old, &c."

They know as little of geography as of other sciences. Some imagine, that the earth swims in the sea, or that an enormous tortoise carries the world on its back. But they have an idea of maps, and even delineate plans of countries, known to them, upon birch bark, with tolerable exactness. The distance from one place to another they never mark by miles, but by days journeys, each comprehending about fifteen or twenty miles. These they divide into half or quarter day's journeys, and mark them upon their maps with all possible accuracy. When they send parties to war or to hunt, they can describe the road, and inform them pretty exactly concerning the time required to perform the journey.

An Indian seldom loses his way in the woods, though some are between two and three hundred miles in length, and as many in breadth. Beside knowing the course of the rivers and brooks, and the situation of the hills, he is safely directed by the branches and moss growing upon the trees; for towards the south the branches are fuller and stronger, and there is less moss upon the bark than towards the north. But if the sun shines, he wants no other guide.

They mark the boundaries of their different territories chiefly by mountains, lakes, rivers, and brooks, and, if possible, in a straight line.

Among the stars, they know the polar star, and direct their course by it in the night. When the sun sets, they think it goes under water. When the moon does not shine, they say she is dead, and some call the three last days before the new moon, the naked days. Her first appearance is called her resurrection. If either sun or moon is eclipsed, they say, the sun or the moon is in a swoon.

The Delawares and Iroquois divide the year into winter, spring, summer and autumn, and each quarter into months. But their calculations are very imperfect, nor can they agree, when to begin the new year. Most of them begin with the spring, some with any other quarter, and many, who who are acquainted with the Europeans, begin with our new-year's-day. However, they all agree in giving such names to the months, as express the season of the year. They therefore call March, Chaddish month, because in this month the fish pass up the creeks and rivers in great numbers.
April, Planting month; Indian corn being planted towards the end or in the middle of April. May has a name, signifying the month in which the hoe is used for Indian corn.
The name given to June, signifies the month in which the deer become red. That of July, the time of raising the earth about the corn, and of August, the time when the corn is in the milk.
September is called the first month in autumn, and October the month of harvest; November the hunting month, most of the Indians then going out to shoot bucks; and the name of December shows that then the bucks cast their antlers. January is called the squaw's month, the ground-squirrels coming then out of the holes; and February the month of frogs, as the frogs generally begin to croak about that season.

They do not divide their months into weeks, nor count the days, but always the nights. An Indian says, "I was traveling so many nights." But if he did not stay from home all the night, he says, "I was a day's journey from home." They express half a day, by pointing to that part of the heavens where the sun is at noon, and a quarter of a day by an rising or setting. If they wish to speak more accurately, they point to other marks, intelligible to them. By the course of the sun, they determine the time of the day, with nearly as much exactness, as we do by a watch. An Indian says, "I will be with you to-morrow when the sun stands in such a place." The growth of the corn is also a mark of time: viz. "I will return when the corn is grown so high: I will do this and that, when the corn is in bloom, or ripe."

They know nothing of the causes of natural phenomena; not do they desire to be informed of them. Thunder they conceive to be a spirit dwelling in the mountains, and now and then falling forth to make himself heard. Others imagine
gine it to proceed from the crowing of a monstrous turkey-cock in the heavens; others from enraged evil spirits.

As little as the Indivix understand of sciences, or wift to be instructed in them; as little do they trouble themselves in general about the works of art. They like to see them, without asking how they are made, or for what use they are intended. But if you describe a man who is a swift racer, or a great huntsman; a good archer and marksman, or a clever sailor; a brave leader, courageous and skilful in war, well acquainted with the country, able to find his way alone through an immense forest, and to live upon a very scanty pittance; they then attend with great eagerness, and know not how to extol the bravery and skill of such a character sufficiently.

If you expect them to value or admire any art, it must have a reference to hunting, fishing, or fighting. To these you may fix their attention, and nothing gratifies their curiosity in a higher degree. They will immediately to imitate it, and many an Indian, who has never seen, how this or the other piece of workmanship is contrived, attempts in his own way to execute it, and spares neither labor nor time in the work. Thus many of the Delawares and Iroquois have learnt to make very good rifle-barrels of common fowling-pieces, and keep them like wise in good repair, by which the use of these weapons has become pretty general among them and the Shawanoe. But those nations, which live further to the west, and seldom see rifle-barrels, must be satisfied with very indifferent fowling-pieces.

The light boats, made by the Indians, and commonly called canoes, may be reckoned among the first productions of their art. The beft are made of the bark of birch, fastened upon light wooden ribs, and strengthened by cross pieces. The bark is fewed together with the slender fibres of roots, and all crevices carefully filled with splinters and caulked with turpentine. The seats are placed across, as in an European boat. They even build canoes, large enough for twenty rowers; and so light, that two or four men are able able to carry them. A canoe, which may be carried by two Indians, will bear two thousand pounds freight. These light vessels are very serviceable for trade, both to the Indians and Europeans, on account of the number of falls in the rivers; which make it necessary to unload and carry both canoes and goods, perhaps many miles by land, before they can venture into the water again. In rowing they must take great care not to overet, run aground, or strike against a rock, for if they spring a leak, it is not easily stopped. But we shall speak more of this when we treat of their fishery.

The great and almost general indifference of the Indians towards the works of art chiefly arises from this, that most of their wants are easily supplied, without the assistance of much ingenuity.

CHAPTER III.

Of the religious Ceremonies and Superstition of the Heaten Indians.

Before we enter upon a description of the religious knowledge of these nations, it must be observed, that we consider it in its present state. For as the Europeans have lived so long, both in their neighborhood and among them, it may reasonably be supposed, that the present religious notions of the Indians differ in many respects from those of their forefathers. That the Indians here spoken of have some sort of religion and mode of worship, cannot be denied; but it is replete with gross absurdity, and entirely unconnected.

The prevailing opinion of all these nations is, that there is one God, or, as they call him, one great and good Spirit, Superstition of the Indians.

Spirit, who has created the heavens and the earth, and man and every other creature: For that, which may known of God, is as well manifest in them, according Romans, i. 19, 20, as in all other heathen; and this gr and important truth is preferred among them, both by dition, and by their own observation.

They represent God as almighty, and able to do as he good as he pleases; nor do they doubt, but that he is giously and mercifully disposed towards men; because imparts power to the plants to grow, causes rain and shine, and gives fish and venison to man for his support. d, as to fish and deer, they imagine them given to Indians exclusively, and not to the white people. They also fully convinced, that God requires of them to do good and to eschew evil.

Besides the Supreme Being, they believe in good and spirits, considering them as subordinate deities. From accounts of the oldest Indians, it appears, that whene war was in contemplation, they used to admonish each other to hearken to the good, and not to the evil spirits, the fer always recommending peace. They seem to have had no idea of the Devil, as the Prince of Darkness. Before the Europeans came into the country. They consider him now as a very powerful spirit, but unable to do good, s therefore call him, The Evil One. Thus they now believe in two Beings, the one supremely good, and the other altogether evil. To the former they ascribe all good, and to the latter all evil.

About thirty years ago, a great change took place in religious opinions of the Indians. Some preachers of the own nation pretended to have received revelations from above, to have travelled into heaven, and conversed with God. They gave different accounts of their exploits on their journey, but all agreed in this, that no one could enter it heaven, without great danger: for the road, say they runs close by the gates of hell. There the Devil lies ambush, and snatches at every one, who is going to Go
Ch. III. Supplication of the Indians.

Now those who have passed by this dangerous place unhurt, come first to the Son of God, and through him to God himself, from whom they pretend to have received a commandment, to instruct the Indians in the way to heaven. By these preachers the Indians were informed, that heaven was the dwelling of God, and hell that of the devil. Some of these preachers confessed, that they had not reached the dwelling of God, but had however approached near enough to hear the cocks crow, and to see the smoke of the chimneys in heaven.

Other teachers contradicted this doctrine, and maintained that no one knew the dwelling-place of God himself, but only that of the good spirits, which is situated above the blue sky. According to their account, the latter forms a kind of partition between the habitation of the good spirits and that of man. But they pretend to have found the way to this land of spirits over a great rock, upon which the heavens reel to and fro with a stupendous noise. They relate, that two valiant warriors had travelled into those parts many years ago, but upon their return, refused to give any account of what they had seen and heard.

These teachers were again contradicted by others, who had a different opinion concerning the situation of the land of spirits and the road thither. They appeal to the testimony of two Indians, who were dead for several days; and had meanwhile been in the habitation of the good spirits. When they revived, they related that this place was to the south of heaven, and that the bright track called the milky way, was the road to it. This led to a most glorious city, the inhabitants of which enjoyed every possible good in great abundance.

Those teachers, who pretend to have been with God, mark two roads upon a deer-skin, both leading to heaven, one for the Indians and the other for the white people. They say that the latter used to go a great way round about, and the road for the Indians was then the shortest, but that now, the white people having blocked up the road for the Indians, they were obliged to make a long circuit to come to God. They have also paintings of heaven and hell. Upon the same deer-skin they likewise make the figure of a balance to represent the deceitful traffic, carried on by the white people with the Indians. This rude picture is, as it were, their book, and lies spread before them, when they preach to the Indians. They then explain every mark and figure to their hearers, and it is very evident, that their chief aim is, to influence the minds of the Indians against the white people.

In their ideas of man, they make a proper distinction between body and soul, the latter of which is considered by them as a spiritual and immortal being. Their ideas of the nature of a spirit do not preclude their representing good spirits in an human form. But they observe that these exist even the Indians, whom they consider as the most beautiful of the human race, in comeliness and perfection.

That they consider the foul as immortal, and even suppose a resurrection of the body, may be inferred from their usual manner of expressing themselves, when they say, "We Indians cannot die eternally; even Indian corn, buried in the ground, is vitrified and rises again." Many believe in the transmigration of souls, and imagine that they were with God before their birth, and came from him; or, that they have been formerly in the world, and are now living over again. They suppose, that when the souls have been some time with God, they are at liberty to return into the world and to be born again. But there are few Indians who express their thoughts so distinctly upon this subject. They believe the old doctrine of their ancestors, that all Indians who have led a good life, will come to a good place after death, where they will have every thing in abundance and may dance and make merry; but that all, who have lived in wickedness, will rove about without any fix'd abode, and be reeffs, disconsolate, and melancholy.

However, their most exalted notions concerning the happy state of the good Indians in heaven, are not able to delive them from an unusual horror at the thought of death. They dare not mention it, and whenever it enters their minds, y they tremble and quake for fear. Their confirmation is painfully visible during a storm of thunder and lightning.
This may also be deemed the most powerful motive for their religious worship, and the principal cause of the ascendency gained by the above-mentioned teachers over their minds.

To heave their system of morals seemed severe, for some of them made a total cessation from fornication, adultery, murder, and robbery, the most essential condition, when they promised their hearers a place among the good spirits and a share in their affluence and joy. They added, that they must be first thoroughly cleansed from their sins, and gave the poor people vomits, as the most expeditious mode of performing this purification.

Some Indians who believed in these absurdities vomited so often, that their lives were endangered by it. They were further briefly exhorted to fast, and to take nothing but physic for many days. Few indeed persevered in attending to so severe a regimen.

Other teachers pretended, that stripes were the most efficacious means to purge away sin. They advised their hearers to suffer themselves to be beaten with twelve different flacks, from the soles of their feet to their necks, that their sins might pass from them through their throats. Even these tormentors had their willing scholars, though it was apparant, that the people became no better, but rather worse by these wretched doctrines.

Some of these preachers went so far as to make them-several equal with God. They affirmed, that the weak and woe of the Indians depended upon their will and pleasure, and demanded the most strict observance of their dictates.
Their deluded followers, professing the highest veneration for them, brought them many presents. Even some of the most sensible and respected Indians assented to their doctrines, pectuarily following their prescriptions, even at the hazard of their health and lives.

D 3

But
Superfition of the Indians.

But the walk and conduct of these teachers of morals altogether disagreed with their exhortations to lead good and virtuous life. Among other vile practices, they publicly introduced polygamy, and during their stay had several of their wives fitting round about them. To even pretended that it was a charitable and meritorious in them, as men living in intimacy with God, to take the poor ignorant women, and lead them in the way to God to the enjoyment of eternal felicity.

This part of their doctrine was greatly relished by the hearers, and it is a lamentable truth, that since that period, adultery, fornication, and other such abominations, have been more frequent among the Indians, than before. Young people began to despise the counsel of the aged, only endeavoured to get into favor with thee preach whose followers multiplied very fast. The preachers, however, were cautious enough, never to stay too long on one place, left their treachery and deceptions should made manifest.

Various as the doctrines of these Indian preachers were, yet they all agreed in this, that after death the bad Indians, who disobey their precepts, would not come into the place of the good spirits. They asserted that they would be kept some distance, near enough to behold how cheerful the good Indians were, yet not permitted to approach; they would get nothing to eat, but poisonous wood roots; and be always dying a dreadful death, yet never. But they never threatened their hearers with hell and devil. Some even affirmed, that though the Indians who lead a wicked life, they would never go to the desert, for he existed merely for the white people. Nor does live, according to their notions, among the Indians, but over among the Europeans. This doctrine was likewise much proved of by the deluded people.

However, the respect shown to these preachers lasted till they were indifferent enough to promise to those who obey their doctrines, success in hunting and in every of undertaking; power to walk on the water as on dry ground, and rich harvests from ill-favoured land. Nothing indeed was more agreeable to the slothful disposition of an Indian, than such promises; but when their credulity was punished with hunger, their regard for these false prophets vanished suddenly, that the latter were not able to invent evasions, in time to prevent the ruin of their credit. Now though we still hear of people, who with intent to intrude themselves upon the Indians as teachers, yet they can never hope to gain the same esteem and veneration, which they enjoyed twenty or thirty years ago. The former prophets have done great mischief, which even operates to this day, for the minds of the Indians are still filled with their absurdities.

Sacrifices made with a view to pacify God and the subordinate deities are also among the religious ceremonies of the Indians. These sacrifices are of very antient date, and considered as glorious objects, that unless they are performed in proper time and in a manner acceptable to the Deity, they suppose ill-fortune, misfortunes, and death itself, would certainly befall them and their families. But they have neither priests regularly appointed, nor temples. At general and solemn sacrifices, the oldest men perform the offices of priests, but in private parties, each man bringing a sacrifice is priest himself. Instead of a temple, a large dwelling-house is fitted up for the purpose.

Our missionaries have not found rank polytheism, or gross idolatry, to exist among the Indians. They have, however, something which may be called an idol. This is the Manito, representing in wood the head of a man in miniature, which they always carry about them, either on a string round their neck or in a bag. They hang it also about their children, to prefer them from ill-fortune and care to them forever. When they perform a solemn sacrifice, a manito, or a head as large as life, is put upon a pole in the middle of the house.

But they understand by the word manito, every being, to which an offering is made, especially all good spirits. They also also look upon the elements, almost all animals, and even some plants, as spirits, one exceeding the other in dignity and power.

They sacrifice to an hare, because, according to report, the first ancestor of the Indian tribes had that name. To Indian corn they sacrifice bears flesh, but to deer and bears, Indian corn; to the fishes, small pieces of bread in the shape of fishes: But they positively deny, that they pay any adoration to these subordinate good spirits, and affirm, that they only worship the true God, through them: For God, say they, does not require men to pay offerings or adoration immediately to him. He has therefore made known his will in dreams, notifying to them, what beings they have to consider as manites, and what offerings to make to them.

The manites are also considered as tutelar spirits. Every Indian has one or more, which he conceives to be peculiarly given to assist him and make him prosperous. One has in a dream received the sun as his tutelar spirit, another the moon; a third, an owl; a fourth, a buffalo; and so forth. An Indian is dispirited, and considers himself as forsaken by God, till he has received a tutelar spirit in a dream; but those who have been thus favored, are full of courage, and proud of their powerful ally.

Among the feasts and sacrifices of the Indians, five are the most remarkable, and each has its peculiar ceremonies. I will describe them as held among the Delawares.

The fifth sacrificial feast is held by an whole family or their friends once in two years, commonly in autumn, seldom in winter. Beside the members of the family, they sometimes invite their neighbors from the adjacent towns, and, as their connexions are large, each Indian has an opportunity of attending more than one family feast in a year. The head of the family must provide every thing. He calculates the requisite number of deer and bears, and sends the young people into the woods to procure them. When they have completed their numbers, they carry the booty home, in solemn procession, depositing it in the house of sacrifice. The
The women are meanwhile engaged in preparing firr-wood for fueling or boiling, and long dry reed grists for seats. As soon as the guests are all assembled and seated, the boiled meat is served up in large kettles, with bread made of Indian corn, and distributed by the servants. The rule is, that whatever is thus brought as a sacrifice, must be eaten altogether and nothing left. A small quantity of melted fat only, is poured by the oldest men into the fire, and in the main part of the offering confits. The bones are burnt, lest the dogs should get any of them. After dinner the men and women dance with much decency. One finger only performs during the dance, walking up and down, rattling a small tortoise-shell filled with pebbles. The burden of his song consists of dreams, and a recital of all the names of the manitous, and those things which are most useful to the Indians. When the first finger is weary, he sits down, and is relieved by another. Thus this feastling is sometimes continued for three or four nights together, beginning in the afternoon and lasting till the next morning.

The second feast differs from the former only in this, that the men dance almost naked, their bodies being daubed all over with white clay.

At the third feast, ten or more tanned deer-skins are given to as many old men or women; who wrap themselves in them, and stand before the house, with their faces turned to the east, praying God with a loud voice to reward their benefactors.

The fourth sacrifice is made to a certain voracious spirit, who, according to their opinion, is never satisfied. The guests are therefore obliged to eat all the bears' flesh, and drink the melted fat, without leaving any thing, which is frequently followed by indigestions and vomiting.

The fifth festival is celebrated in honor of fire, which they consider as the first parent of all Indian nations. Twelve manitous attend him as subordinate deities, being partly animals and partly vegetables. The chief ceremony in celebrating this festival is, that a large oven is built in the midst of the house of sacrifice, consisting of twelve poles poles each of a different species of wood. These they ran into the ground, set them together at the top, and cover them entirely with blankets, joined close together, so that the whole appears like a baker's oven high enough nearly to admit a man standing upright. After dinner the oven is heated with twelve large flumes made red hot. Then twelve men creep into it, and remain there as long as they can bear the heat. Meanwhile an old man blows twelve pipes full of tobacco upon the hot flumes which occasion a smoke almost powerful enough to suffocate the persons thus confined, so that, upon their being taken out, they generally fall down in a swoon. During this feast a whole deer-skin, with the head and antlers remaining, is raised upon a pole, to which they seem to sing and pray. But they deny that they pay any adoration to the buck, declaring that God alone is worshipped through this medium.

To amuse the young people, a great quantity of wampum is thrown upon the ground, for which they scramble, and he that gets most is thought to be the best man. At these feasts there are never less than four servants appointed, who have enough to do by day and night. Their pay consists in a fathom of wampum, and leave to take the best of the provision, such as fegar, eggs, butter, bilberries, &c. and to sell them to the guests and spectators for their own profit. All festivals are closed with a general drinking-bout.

The missionaries had once an opportunity of seeing a burnt offering as performed by the savages in the neighborhood of Friedenshuetten.

When a boy dreams, that he sees a large bird of prey, of the size of a man, flying towards him from the north, and saying to him, "Roast some meat for me," the boy is then bound to sacrifice the first deer or bear he shoots to this bird. The sacrifice is appointed by an old man, who fixes the day and place in which it is to be performed. Three days previous to it, messengers are sent to invite the guests, some of whom perhaps live at a distance. These assemble in some lonely place, in an house large enough to contain cost three fires. At the middle fire the old man performs the sacrifice and hangs up the skin; the other two serve to dress the meat. Having set for twelve flirt and supple sticks, he fastens them into the ground, so as to enclose a circular spot, covering them with blankets. He then rolls twelve red-hot stones into the enclosure, each of which is dedicated to one god in particular. The largest belongs, as they say, to the great God in heaven; the second, to the sun, or the god of the day; the third, to the night-sun, or the moon; the fourth, to the earth; the fifth, to the fire; the sixth, to the water; the seventh, to the dwelling or house-god; the eighth, to Indian corn; the ninth, to the well; the tenth, to the south; the eleventh, to the east; and the twelfth, to the north. The old man then takes a rattle or calabash, containing some grains of Indian corn, and leading the boy, for whom the sacrifice is made, into the enclosure, throws a handful of tobacco upon the red-hot stones, and as the smoke ascends, rattles his calabash, calling each god by name, and saying: "This boy N. N. offers unto thee a fine fat deer and a delicious dish of sapan! Have mercy on him, and grant good luck to him and his family." He then retires to the guests seated around the other fires to dinner. Two men being appointed to stand at the skin, sing and repeat all their dreams and visions, and the words of the bird of prey, till all have eaten their fill. Then another man rises, and taking the calabash, sings his dreams, skipping across the whole length of the house. Finally, the old man, seizing the skin, and extending it upon his arms with the head and horns towards the north, utters a peculiar inarticulate sound, and thus closes the ceremony.
Ch. III.  Indian Feasts and Sacrifices.  43

Besides these solemn feasts of sacrifice they have many of less importance. When sacrifices are made for private parties, they invite guests who do not belong to the family, and who consume the whole dinner, the host and his family being mere spectators.

Two of the missionaries were once present at such a feast, and seated in a corner of the house appointed for them, them, but not understanding the language of the Indians they could only observe the order of the feast. In the middle of the house lay a heap of Indian corn in the ear, around which were placed pieces of boiled deer's flesh upon wooden skewers. The guests sat in solemn silence upon bearskins in rows, according to their families. Then four men went out before the door of the house, and made a short howl in a mournful strain: As soon as they returned, the whole company, consisting of about one hundred persons, joined in a short song. An old man then rofe and sat down at the fire, in the middle of the house, where he was appointed by a woman with melted bears' grease. She first poured it out of a bottle upon his head, and then proceeded to anoint his breast, shoulders, and arms, a general silence prevailing.

Soon after the old man began to pronounce short sentences as oracles, which were heard with great attention. Having returned to his former seat, the whole company joined again in a song. After this, six servants were chosen, each guest drawing a blade from a bundle of grass, fixed which were marked. Thefe placed themselves immediately behind the heap of Indian corn, and upon a sign given by the old man, made a proper distribution of the deer's flesh lying upon it. This being eaten, all joined again in a third song, which was followed by another sign given by the old man; upon which the servants began quickly to throw about the ears of Indian corn among the guests, who scrambled with great haste and alacrity, every one endeavouring to snatch up as many ears as he could. The feast was then concluded with burning the bones.

An Indian will now and then, when hunting quite alone in the woods, offer a sacrifice to ensure success. Having cut up a deer, and divided it into many small pieces, he scatters them about for the birds, when, retiring to some distance, he amuses himself by observing in what manner they devour the prey. If an Indian hunter hears an owl scream in the night, he immediately throws some tobacco into into the fire, muttering a few words, and then promises himself further feasts for the next day.

If they think, that the souls of the dead are enraged, they offer both meat and drink offerings to pacify them. For a meat offering, either a hog or a bear is killed for the feast: It matters not, who are the guests, but the feast is consumed in the dark, neither candle nor fire being lighted. Before the company begin to eat, an old man prepares a meal for the enraged souls, speaks to them, and begs them to be pacified. He then tells the company that the souls are satisfied. Rum is an essential ingredient in a drink offering. Before the guests begin to drink, they walk to the grave, pour some rum upon it, and an old man addresses the soul, as above described; then they must drink the rest of the rum, till not a drop be left. Every woman whose child dies in a foreign land, travels, if possible, once a year to the place of its burial, and offers a drink offering upon its grave.

Sacrifices are likewise made upon more trivial occasions; for, even in case of tooth-ache or head-ache, they imagine that the spirits are displeased and must be pacified. Carver relates, that an Indian chief, who accompanied him on his journey to the falls of St. Anthony, which are taken to be the habitation of the great spirit, offered his pipe, tobacco-pouch, bracelets, and ear-rings, and prayed with great emotion to the spirit to protect him.

In great danger, an Indian has been observed to lie prostrate on his face, and throwing a handful of tobacco into the fire, to call aloud, as in an agony of distress, "There, take and smoke, be pacified, and don't hurt me." This has been construed into a worship of the devil. But our missionaries have not been able to discover any such worship. The Indians abhor the devil, thinking that he is always intent upon doing them some mischief, by means of the white people, and under such apprehensions, an Indian perhaps might endeavor to pacify him and prevent the consequences of his malice.

Dreams are thought to be of great importance among the Indians, and nothing less than revelations from God. But
But as the Bible itself and the experience of the missionary leave it without a doubt that Satan worketh in the children of disobedience (Ephes. ii. 2.), he may certainly influence the dreams of the unbelieving Indians, and some of them seem to bear evident marks of the interference of this evil spirit.

Besides the Indian preachers, as described above, there are deceivers among them, who know how to turn their great tendency to superstitious to their own advantage. Some of them pretend, that they can easily bring rain down from heaven. If such a deceiver sees some tokens of approaching rain after a long drought, he tells the women who tend the gardens and plantation, that for a proper consideration of tobacco or something which he may have occasion for he will soon put an end to the calamity, and grant them rain. Rejoiced to hear this, they gather together where the they can afford, to satisfy him. He then goes to some unfrequented spot, makes a circle upon the ground with a croft in the middle, in which he places tobacco, a pumpkin and some red color; then, sitting down, he begins to sing and scream loud enough to be heard by the whole neighborhood, not ceasing till it rains, and thus frequently persuades even the old and infirm Indians, that he has procured rain by his legendarian tricks. But should the signs of rain disappear, he finds it easy to put the credulous people off to another day.

Another sort of deceivers are called by them night-walkers. These people sneak into the houses in the night, and steal what they can get. The poor Indians will not allow these men to be common house-breakers, but say, that they bewitch the family into a profound sleep, so as not to be discovered.

The most dangerous deceivers among the Indians are the so-called sorcerers. Some are mere boasters, who pretend to great skill and power, with a view to frighten the people, or to get a name, and such there is no reason to fear; But there are among the different tribes wretches enough, whom the devil makes use of as his agents, to commit murder; and and it is an additional misfortune, that these enemies of mankind are seldom known. They are certain that their lives are in danger, as soon as they are discovered to be forfeited. Thus they are very cautious of letting any one in the least observe their destructive art, and avoid being too free with liquor, lest they should betray themselves in a drunken fit.

Both these and the other deceivers, when they grow old, with to instruct others in their arts. They generally chase boys of twelve or fourteen years old for their scholars, whom they deceive by means of apparitions in which they are the actors. The most extraordinary stories are told by these boys, of the spectres they have seen in the woods, when they were alone and full of apprehension. To one of these an old man appears in a grey beard, and says in a soothing tone, "Do not fear, I am a rock, and thou shalt call me by this name. I am the Lord of the whole earth, and of every living creature dwelling therein, of all the fowls of the air, and of wind and weather. No one dare oppose me, and I will give thee the same power. But one shall do thee harm, and thou needest not to fear any man, if thou dost such and such things." Then the apparition begins his instructions in the black art, commonly in terms so ambiguous and figurative, that their true sense can hardly be found. But having received this message in so solemn a manner, the boy's mind ruminates upon it day and night, and as he grows up, he is confirmed in the opinion, that a peculiar power has been imparted unto him, to perform extraordinary exploits. As he can receive no further instructions from any one, he must study the theory and practice of his art by himself: Though he even perceives, that he has been grossly imposed upon, yet he is ashamed to own it, and wishing to preserve the character of an extraordinary person, he continues in his diabolical practices till he grows old, and then in his turn endeavours to deceive young boys, by the same tricks which were played upon him in his youth.
CHAPTER IV.

Of the Dresr, Dwellings, and Housekeeping of the Indians.

The Indians pay great attention to their drees and ornaments, in which indeed they display much singularity, but little art. Their drees is light, and they consider much clothing as a burthen. The men wear a blanket hung loose over both shoulders, or only over the left, that the right arm may be free, and tie or pin the upper ends together. Formerly these coverings were made of turkey feathers, woven together with the thread of wild hemp, but these are now seldom seen. The rich wear a piece of blue, red, or black cloth about two yards long round their waists. In some, the lower seam of this cloth is decorated with ribbons, wampom, or corals. The poor Indians cover themselves with nothing but a bear’s skin, and even the rich do the same in cold weather, or put on a pellicle of beaver or other fur, with the hair turned inward. These are either tanned by rubbing in water, or smoke-dried, and then rubbed till they grow soft.

Some wear hats or caps bought of the Europeans; others go bareheaded. The men never suffer their hair to grow long, and some even pull so much of it out by the roots, that a little only remains round the crown of the head, forming a round crest, of about two inches in diameter. This is divided into two tails, plaited, tied with ribbon, and hanging down, one to the right and the other to the left. The crown is frequently ornamented with a plume of feathers placed either upright or slant. At scafts, their hair is frequently decorated with silver rings, corals, or wampom, and even with silver buckles. Some wear a bandage round their heads, heads, ornamented with as many silver buckles as it will hold.
Ch. IV.

Dress of the Indians.

They bestow much time and labor in decorating their faces; laying on fresh paint every day, especially if they go out to dance. They suppose that it is very proper for brave men to paint, and always study a change of fashion. Vermillion is their favorite color, with which they frequently paint their whole head. Here and there black streaks are introduced, or they paint one half of their face and head black and the other red. Near the river Mulingum a yellow ochre is found, which, when burnt, makes a beautiful red color. This the Huron warriors chiefly use for paint, nor do they think a journey of one hundred miles too long, to provide themselves with it. Some prefer blue; because it is the color of the sky, when calm and serene, and, being considered as an emblem of peace, it is frequently introduced as such in their public orations. Therefore when they wish to show a peaceful disposition towards other tribes or nations, they paint themselves and their belts blue.

The figures, painted upon their faces, are of various kinds. Every one follows his own fancy, and exerts his powers of invention, to excel others, and have something peculiar to himself. One prides himself with the figure of a serpent upon each cheek, another with that of a tortoise, deer, bear, or some other creature, as his arms and signeture.

Some Indians bore a hole through the cartilage of the nose, and wear a large pearl, or a piece of silver, gold, or wampum in it.

They also decorate the lappets of their ears with pearls, rings, sparkling stones, feathers, flowers, corals, or silver cords, after having distended and lengthened them as much as possible.

A broad collar, made of violet wampum, is deemed a most precious ornament, and the rich decorate even their breasts with it. The most singular part of their ornaments is displayed in figures made by scarification, representing serpents, serpents, birds, and other creatures. The operation being performed with a needle, gunpowder is rubbed into the punctures, and as sometimes the whole upper part of their bodies is filled with these drawings, they appear at a distance to wear a harness. Sometimes by these decorations, they acquire a particular appellation, by which their pride is exceedingly gratified. Thus a captain of the troquios, whose breast was all over covered with black scarsifications, was called the Black Prince.

The intent of these ornaments is not to please others, but to give themselves a courageous and formidable appearance. A warrior therefore never dresses with more care and finelinen, than when he goes to attend a council, or to meet the enemies of his country in the field.

An Indian frequently appears in a white shirt with a red collar, put over the rest of his clothes. They are likewise fond of getting a coat or hat laced with gold or silver. The girdles worn by the common Indians, are made of leather or the inner bark of a tree. Their stockings, which reach a good way above the knee, supply the place of breeches. They are made of blue and red cloth without feet. Their shoes are of deer-skin, without heels, some being very neatly made by the women. The skins are tanned with the brains of deer, which make them very soft; some leave the hair upon the skin, and such fur-shoes are remarkably light and easy. The quarters are ornamented about the ankle with small pieces of brass or tin, fastened with leather strings, which make an odd jingling, when they walk or dance.

It is common for them to rub their bodies with the fat of bears or other animals, which is sometimes colored, with a view to make their limbs supple, and to guard against the sting of the musquitoes and other insects. This operation prevents too great perspiration, but it increases their natural dark color, and gives them a greasy and smutty appearance.
A tobacco-pouch is a most essential piece of an Indian's furniture. It contains his pipe and tobacco, pocket-knife, and tinder-box, which he always wears with a small ax and long knife in his girdle. Most pouches are made of the whole skin of a young otter, beaver, or fox, with an opening at the neck. Those who chuse to add ornaments to the tobacco-pouch, fasten pearls in the eye-sockets, or get the women to adorn them with corals. Some wear the claw of a buffalo with a large pendulous pouch of deer-skin, stained with various colors, and neatly worked.

They are fond of a handsome head for their pipe, and prefer those made of red marble. But these are only used by the chiefs and captains, this sort of marble being rare, and found only on the Mississip. A more common sort are made of a kind of ruddle, dug by the Indians, living to the west of the Mississip, on the Marble River, who sometimes bring them to these countries for sale.

As the Indians are all lovers of finery and dress, the married men take care, that their wives adorn themselves in a proper manner. The Delaware men pay particular attention to the dress of their women, and on that account clothe themselves rather meanly. There are many, who would think it scandalous to appear better clothed than their wives. The dresses which peculiarly distinguish the women, is a petticoat, made of a piece of cloth about two yards long, fastened tight about the hips, and hanging down a little below the knees. This they wear day and night. A longer one would be very troublesome in walking through the woods or working in the fields. Their holiday-dresses is either blue or red, and sometimes black, hung all round, frequently from top to bottom, with red, blue, and yellow ribbands. Most women of rank wear a fine white linen shift with a red collar, reaching from their necks nearly to the knees. Others wear shifts of printed linen or cotton of various colors, decorated at the breast with with a great number of silver buckles, which are also worn by some as ornaments upon their petticoats.

The women suffer their hair to grow without restraint and thus it frequently reaches below their hips. Nothing is thought more ignominious in women, than to have it cut off which is only now and then done, as a punishment for disorderly persons. They anoint it with bear's-grease, to make it shine.

The Delaware women never plait their hair, but fold and tie it round with a piece of cloth. Some tie it behind, then roll it up, and wrap a ribbon or the skin of a serpent round it so as almost to resemble a bag-wig. But the Iroquois, Shawanoë, and Huron women wear a queue, down to their hips, tied round with a piece of cloth, and hung with red ribbons. The rich adorn their heads with a number of silver trinkets, of considerable weight. This mode of finery is not so common among the Delawares as the Iroquois, who by studying dress and ornament more than any other Indian nation, are allowed to dictate the fashion to the rest.

The Indian women never paint their faces with a variety of figures, but rather make a round red spot upon each cheek, and redden their eyelids, the tops of their foreheads, and the rim of their ears and temples. They adorn their ears, necks, and breasts with corals, small crosses, little round escutcheons, and crescents, made either of silver or wax pom. Both men and women are fond of silver bracelets. Very few of the Delawares and Iroquois women think it decent to imitate the men in scarifying their skin. Their stockings and shoes resemble those worn by the men, only they wear a kind of clove, made of linen, either with or without fringes.

For their dwellings, the Indians generally choose a situation well supplied with wood and water, and for their plantation of Indian corn, a low and rich soil.
Their villages are therefore generally situated near a lake, river, or brook, yet sufficiently elevated to escape the danger of inundations, which are very common in spring.

Before their acquaintance with the Europeans, their dwellings were nothing more than huts made of bark, lined with rushes, and covered with either bark, rushes, or long reed-grass. The Iroquois and other nations at a distance from the Europeans live still in huts of this description. But the Delawarens have learned the use and convenience of block-houses, and either build them themselves, or pay European workmen for doing it.

An Indian hut is built in the following manner: They peel trees, abounding with sap, such as lime-trees, &c., then cutting the bark into pieces of two or three yards in length, they lay heavy stones upon them, that they may become flat and even in drying. The frame of the hut is made by driving poles into the ground, and strengthening them by cross-beams. This frame-work is covered both within and without with the above-mentioned pieces of bark, fastened very tight with bunt or twigs of hickery, which are remarkably tough. The roof runs up to a ridge, and is covered in the same manner. These huts have one opening in the roof to let out the smoke, and one in the side for an entrance. The door is made of a large piece of bark without either bolt or lock; a stick, leaning against the outside, being a sign that nobody is at home. The light enters by small openings, furnished with sliding shutters.

The difference in the huts of the Delawarens and Iroquois consists in the form of the roofs, the former being angular, and the latter round or arched. The Delaware families prefer living separately, and their houses therefore are but small, but the Iroquois build long houset, with three or four fire-places, for as many families, who are related and live together. A number of these huts standing together is called an Indian town; and if surrounded by palisadoes, a fortification. In building towns, no regular plan is observed, but but every one builds according to his fancy. Nor have the many large towns.

Their huts are neither convenient nor well furnished. They are mostly low, neither divided into rooms, nor floored. The fireplace is in the middle of the hut; around which are placed benches or seats, rudely finished, which serve like wise for tables and bedsteads. The same blanket that clothes them by day, serves for a covering at night, as the bed is a deer or bear-skin, or a mat made of rushes. Some even line the inside of their hovels or huts with the same mats, partly by way of ornament, and partly to keep out the cold.

They hang their store of provisions and other necessaries upon poles, fixed across to the top of the hut. Formerly they kindled a fire by turning or twirling a dry stick, with great swiftness upon a dry board, using both hands. Their knives were made of thin flint, in a long triangular shape, the long sides being sharpened. Their hatchets were wedges, made of hard stones, six or eight inches long, sharpened at the edge, and fastened to a wooden handle. They were not used to fell trees, but only to peel them, or to kill their enemies. Their pots and boilers were made of clay, mixed with pounded sea shells, and burnt so hard, that they were black throughout.

Such knives, hatchets, and large broken pots, are still found in various places where formerly the Indians dwelt. But since the Europeans came into the country, the Indians are provided with flint and steel, European knives and hatchets, and light brass kettles. They make their own spoons, and large, round dishes of hard wood, with great neatness. In eating, many make use of the same spoon, but they commonly sip their victuals out of the dish.

Cleanliness is not common among the Indians. Their pots, dishes, and spoons, are seldom washed, but left for the dogs to lick. The Delawares rather excel the Iroquois in cleanliness; and the Unami and Wawiachtano tribes are much cleaner.
Ch. IV.

Firing.

55

cleaner than the Monfsys. Yet there are some houses and huts among the Iroquois which have a clean and neat appearance, and afford a comfortable night's lodging for an European. The dogs being continually in the house and at the fire, they bring fleas in abundance. Bugs and other vermin are numerous; but it is remarkable that the common fly re-forests much more to the houses of the Europeans than to those of the Indians. About the latter the glow-bug or firefly appears in large numbers in the summer evenings. Their tails are as bright as a red-hot coal, and half a dozen of them put together cast light enough to read the smallest characters. They are most numerous in swampy places, where their swarms appear like innumerable sparks flying to and from.

The Indians keep a constant fire burning in their houses, which consumes much wood. There is pit-coal enough in the country, which in Pittsburg is used both in stoves and smith's shops, but the Indians do not value it, having abundance of wood. Formerly when they had no axes but those made of stone, as above mentioned, they used to kindle a fire around large trees, and to burn them so long till they fell; then by applying fire to different parts of the item and branches, they divided them into smaller pieces for use.

This custom still prevails in some places.

They never think of sparing the forest trees, for they not only burn more wood than is necessary for house consumption, but destroy them by peeling. The greatest havoc among the forest trees is made by fires, which happen either accidentally, or are kindled by the Indians, who in spring, and sometimes in autumn, burn the withered grass, that a fresh crop may grow for the deer. These fires run on for many miles, burning the bark at the roots of the trees in such a manner, that they die. A forest of fir trees is in general utterly destroyed by these fires.

From these and other causes, fire-wood at last begins to be scarce, and necessity obliges them to seek other dwelling-

E 4

places,
MARRIAGES OF THE INDIANS.

Plains, as the Indians cannot bear the trouble of fetching fire-wood from any distant part. Thus the building of a new town is frequently undertaken merely for this reason.

CHAPTER V.

MARRIAGES AND EDUCATION OF CHILDREN AMONG THE INDIANS.

The Delawares and Iroquois marry early in life, the men sometimes in their eighteenth, and the women in their fourteenth year, but they never marry near relations. According to their own account, the Indian nations were divided into tribes, for no other purpose, than that no one might either through temptation or mistake, marry a near relation, which at present is scarcely possible, for whoever intends to marry, must take a person of a different tribe.

With the Iroquois, it is not unusual to fix upon children of four or five years old with a view to future marriage. In this case the mother of the girl is obliged to bring a basket of bread every week into the house of the boy, and to furnish him with fire-wood. The parents of the boy must supply the girl with meat and clothes, till they are both of a proper age. Their marriage however solely depends upon their own free will, for there is never any compulsion.

When a Delaware girl is out of order for the first time, the muft withdraw into an hut at some distance from the village. Her head is wrapped up for twelve days, so that she can see nobody, and the muft submit to frequent vomits and fasting, and abstain from all labor. After this she is washed.
Marriages.

washed and new clothed, but confined to a solitary life for the space of two months, at the close of which she is declared marriageable. Other Indian nations observe fewer ceremonies on this occasion.

If an Indian man wishes to marry, he first sends a present of blankets, cloth, linen, and perhaps a few belts of wampum, to the nearest relations of the person he has fixed upon. If they happen to be pleased, both with the present and the character and conduct of the suitor, they propose the matter to the girl, who generally decides agreeably to the wishes of her parents and relations, and is afterwards led to the dwelling of the bridegroom without further ceremony. But if the other party chuses to decline the proposal, they return the present, by way of a friendly negative.

After the marriage, the present made by the suitor, is divided amongst the friends of the young wife. These return the civility by a present of Indian corn, beans, kettles, dishets, spoons, axes, baskets, hatchets, &c. brought in solemn procession into the hut of the newly-married couple. The latter commonly lodge in a friend's house, till they can erect a dwelling of their own.

Some nations more to the west look upon adultery as a very great crime, and punish it with severity, but the young people among the Delawares, Iroquois, and other nations connected with them, have seldom marriages of long continuance, especially if they have not children soon. Sometimes an Indian forfares his wife, because she has a child to suckle, and marries another, whom he forfares in her turn for the same reason.

The women also forfares the men, after having received many presents, and knowing that they have no more to expect. They then marry another, from whom they may expect more. It frequently happens that the woman forfares her husband, because she never loved him, and was only persuaded by her relations to accept of him for a time, that they might keep his presents. The Indians therefore consider their wives as strangers. It is a common saying among "My wife is not my friend," that is, she is not reme, and I need not care for her.
Marriages.

However, not every Indian is so very indifferent light behavior of his wife. Many an one takes her fulness so much to heart, that in the height of his he swallows a podismus root, which certainly kills him hours. Women also have been known to destroy the for grief, on account of their husbands' treacher-prevent this calamity they make use of a certain plant called beya (a medium between poison and physic), t they ascribe a magic power. They believe, that if it is carried constantly about by one of the parties ensure the love and fidelity of the other. But if found out, the other party is so offended, that the marrenovate immediately dissolved, and no reconciliation can place. Many Indians live very sociably in the state, and keep to one wife. These regular have the most children. Some indeed live per with their wives, merely that they may not be fe from their children. Others keep concubines, and the wives do not suffer them to live in the hot they connive at it for the sake of peace and on acc their children.

But there is no very strong tie between the people in general, not even between the eldest little trifles, or one bad word, furnishes ground for scorn.

Polygamy is permitted among the Delawares and In-but not as common as with other Indian nations, who may keep six, ten, or more wives, and the common as many as they can maintain. A Delaware or an Indian has seldom two, and hardly ever more wives their love of ease renders domestic peace a most

The negroes and Indians intermarry with scruple.
The Indians affect an appearance of great coolness towards their nearest relations. When the children and other kindred go to meet the father of the family, after a long absence, he passes by them with an haughty air, never returns their salutation, nor asks how his children do; for circumstances relating to his own family and kinsmen, seem indifferent to him in time of war. This cool behavior is generally thought a mark of a noble mind, but it would be a great mistake to infer, that they are divested of the feelings of nature.

The housekeeping of the married people is very different in a Delaware and an Iroquois family. The Delaware Indian hunts and fishes, provides meat for the household, keeps his wife and children in clothing, builds and repairs the house or hut, and makes fences round the plantations. The woman cooks the victuals, fetches fire-wood, and labor in the field and garden, though, as to the latter, the husband will assist occasionally.

But in managing the affairs of the family the husband leaves the whole to his wife, and never interferes in things committed to her. She cooks victuals regularly twice a day. If the neglected to do it in proper time, or even altogether, the husband never says a word, but rather goes to some friend, being assured that he shall find something to eat. Nor does he ever offer to put wood on the fire, except he has guests, or some other extraordinary call to do it. If his wife longs for meat, and gives him a hint of it he goes out early in the morning without victuals, and seldom returns without game, should he even be obliged to stay out till late in the evening. When he returns with a deer, he throws it down before the door of the hut, and walks in, saying nothing. But his wife, who has heard him lay down his burden, gives him something to eat. dries his clothes, and then goes out to bring in the game. She may then do with it whatever she pleases. He says nothing if the even gives the greatest part of it to her friends, which is a very common common custom. If the husband intends to go a-hunting, or to take a journey, he gives his wife notice, and then she knows that it is her business to furnish him with proper provisions.

If any dissatisfaction arises between them, the husband commonly takes his gun and walks off into the woods, without telling his wife whither he is going. Sometimes he does not return till after some days, when both parties have frequently forgot their quarrels, and live again in peace.

Most married people understand, that whatever the husband gets by hunting, belongs to the wife. Therefore, as soon as he has brought the skins and meat home, he considers them as his wife's property. On the other hand, whatever the wife reaps from the garden and plantation, belongs to the husband, from which she must provide him with the necessary food both at home and abroad. Some men keep the skins, and purchase clothes for their wives and children, that they may not be in want. The cows belong to the wife, but the horses to the husband, who generally makes his wife a present of one for her own use.

All this proves that the Delaware women live as well as the situation of an Indian will permit. But the women are not so well treated among the Iroquois. A wild Iroquois is proud of his strength, courage, and other manly virtues, and treats his wife with coolness, contempt, and often with abuse. He considers every occupation but that of a warrior or warrior in a deplorable point of view, and therefore leaves every other consideration to his wife. Thus the women have business enough upon their hands. The wife must not only do all the work in the house and in the field, but make fences, keep the house in repair, and in general, perform all kind of drudgery. In travelling she must carry the bundles, and sometimes her husband's gun, and when he has shot a deer, the wife must convey it home.

The Indian women are in general of a very strong bodily constitution, and seldom want any assistance in child-bearing. They
Ch. V. Education of Children. 61

They have no midwives, but there are clever and experienced women enough, who are able to give both assistance and advice in time of labor. When the time approaches, they prepare every thing necessary both for themselves and the child, nor do they deflect from their usual employment in the house, till about an hour or two before their delivery. Some very round women are delivered when alone in the forest, and are capable of conveying the new-born infant home.

After the birth, the infant is immediately laid upon a board covered with moss, and wrapped up in a skin or piece of cloth, little arched pieces of wood being fastened to the sides of the board, to hinder the babe from falling off; for when the mother is engaged in her household work, she hangs this rude cradle upon some peg, or branch of a tree. But this practice gets more and more out of fashion.

Most mothers fuckle their infants till they are two or more years old. If they cannot do this, soup made of Indian corn supplies the place of milk. Though they marry very young, they have seldom more than five children. Their love to them is very great, and the favor of the parents is gained by nothing so easily, as by carefllness, or giving something to their little children. The mothers generally carry them in a blanket fastened upon their backs. The ancient pernicious custom of setting the infant upright upon a board, to which its feet were fastened with thongs, and of carrying the board with a strap upon their backs, is almost entirely abolithed. The many instances of children being destroyed by this practice have made it universally detested.

The children are always considered as the property of the wife. If a divorce takes place, they all follow her. Thosé indeed that are grown up, may stay with the father, if they please. Both parties are very desirous of gaining the love of their children, and this accounts for their conduct towards them. They never oppose their inclinations, that they may not not lose their affection. Their education therefore is not much attended to. Their children have entirely their own will, and never do any thing by compulsion. The parents are very careful, not to beat or chastise them for any fault fearing lest the children might remember it, and revenge themselves on some future occasion. Yet many well-bred children are found among them, who pay great attention and respect to their parents, and are civil to strangers. This is certainly a consequence of the mild treatment they receive, for the contrary generally produces bitterness, hatred, and contempt.

They do not spend much upon the dresses and equipment of their children. Boys go naked till they are six years old. The first piece of dress they receive is a narrow slip of blue cloth passing in a loose manner between their legs, and fastened by a strap round their bodies. But the girls wear a light coat as soon as they can walk.

The father generally gives the child a name, either in its sixth or seventh year, and pretends that it has been suggested to him in a dream. This is done at a sacrifice, in a song and they call it "praying over the child." The same ceremony is performed, when an adult person receives a name of honor in addition to the former. But if it is left to the mother to give a name, she uses little ceremony, and calls it after some peculiar mark or character in it, for instance, the Beautiful, or the Great E., if they do not love it, they change a disagreeable name for it.

As the girls grow up, the mothers endeavour to instruct them in all kinds of work, first taking them as assistants in the housekeeping, and by degrees making them acquainted with every part of a woman's business. But the boys are never obliged to do any thing; they loiter about, live as they please, and follow their own fancies. If they do mischief to others, they are gently reproved, and the parents rather pay twice or three times over for the damage done than punish them for it. As they are defined for hunttime and warriors, they exercise themselves very early with bows and arrows, and in shooting at a mark. As they grow up, they acquire a remarkable dexterity in shooting birds, squirrels, and small game. When the boy arrives at a proper age, he receives a fowling-piece or rifle-barrelled gun. The first deer he shoots, proves the occasion of a great solemnity. If it happens to be a buck, it is given whole to some old man, who makes a feast of it for all the old men in the town. During this repast, they give good counsel to the boy (who is merely a spectator), regarding the chase and all the circumstances of his future life, exhorting him above all things to severe old age and grey hairs, and to be obedient to their words. They then join in prayer to God, to grant him long life and happiness. If he first happens to kill a doe, he gives it to some old woman, who treats the old women in the same manner.

Sometimes young boys are prepared in a most singular manner for the station they are intended to fill in future, with a view to form a judgment of their capacity. They are made to fast so often and so long, that their bodies become emaciated, their minds deranged, and their dreams wild and extravagant. Frequent questions are put to them on this occasion, till they have had, or pretended to have had a dream, declared to be ominous. The subject being minutely considered and interpreted, they are solemnly informed, what will be their future destination. The impression thus made upon their minds is lasting, and the older they grow, the more earnestly they strive to fulfill their destination, considering themselves as men of peculiar gifts, far exceeding all others. By virtue of these extraordinary revelations, they become physicians, hunters, rich men, forcers, or captains, according to the tenor of the dream, or in other words, they then willingly conform to the mode of life, planned for them by their parents and relations. In their private life, they live without control, proud of their liberty, and following their own inclinations. In this the parents delight, and most fathers boast of the the independence of their sons' mind. By their instructions and example the young people are taught from their infancy to suppress their passions, and this is done in so effectual a manner, that the proofs they exhibit of their command of temper are truly astonishing.

When the parents see their children provided for, or able to provide for themselves, they no longer care for their support, nor do they even think of having a good inheritance for them. For every Indian knows, that whatever he leaves at his death, is divided among his friends.

If a woman becomes a widow, the relations of the deceased take every thing belonging to him, and give it to their friends, without keeping a single article. They act thus, because they wish to forget death, and are afraid left the smallest part of the property of the deceased should remind them of it. Thus the children have no more claim upon any inheritance, than the widow and other near relations. But if a dying Indian leaves his gun or any other part of his furniture to a particular friend, the legatee is immediately put in possession, and no one disputes his right. Whatever the husband has given to his wife during his lifetime, remains her property. Therefore we need not wonder that a married Indian pair should not have their goods in common: for otherwise the wife would be left wholly destitute after her husband's death, and the husband would lose his all, when his wife dies.

According to the ancient rule, a widow should not marry again within a year after the death of her husband: for the Indians say that he does not forfake her before that time, and then his soul goes to the mansions of departed spirits.

She must however endeavour to live by her own industry, and commonly suffers great want, especially if she has young children. She is not permitted to purchase any meat, for the Indians are superstitiously persuaded, that their guns would fail, and prevent them from shooting any more deer, if a widow should eat of the game they have killed.
killed. But now and then a kind friend will venture to transgress the rule, and give her some meat. As soon as the first year of her widowhood is past, the friends of her deceased husband clothe and provide for her and her children. They also propose another husband, or at least tell her, that she is now at liberty to chuse for herself. But if she has not attended to the prescribed rule, but married within the year, they never trouble themselves about her again. The same is observed, with respect to a widower, by the friends of his deceased wife; for they still consider him as belonging to their family.

If he has remained a widower one whole year, they generally propose a woman according to their mind, that he may soon marry again, and prefer a fitter of the departed, if one be living.

I will further observe, that the family connexions of the Indians are commonly very extensive, on account of their frequently changing their wives.

CHAPTER VI.

Food, Agriculture, and Breeding of Cattle among the Indians.

The common food of the Indians consists of meat, fish, all leguminous pulse and garden fruit. They eat almost all animals they take by hunting, but deer and bear are their favorite food.

Neither the Iroquois, Delaware, nor any nations in connexion with them, eat their meat raw, but frequently without salt, though they have it in abundance.

Both near the Ohio and the Muskingum are remarkably good salt springs. They generally burst out near a small brook, brook, or upon a sandy island formed in it. But the indolence of the Indians is such, that they rather buy salt from the Europeans at a very high price, than take what God has given them. Their meals are not served with great cleanliness, and confit chiefly of one dish. They eat when they are hungry, without any fixed time for it. In roasting they fasten the meat to a spit, made of hard wood.

They are fond of mussels and oysters, and such who live near an oyster-bed will subsist for weeks together upon them. They also eat the land-tortoise, which is about a span broad, and rather more in length; and even locusts are used for food. These come frequently in large swarms, covering and destroying even the bark of the trees.

The principal pulse of the Indians, is the so-called Indian corn (Zea Mays*). That cultivated by the Iroquois is a variety, differing from that planted by the Delawares on the river Muskingum. The former ripens sooner than the latter, which probably would never ripen in a colder climate. This is the chief produce of the Indian plantations. They首席 low and rich grounds near a river or brook, which spontaneously yield plentiful crops for many years. But when the strength of the soil is exhausted, they remove their plantations, for they know nothing of the use of manure, and have land enough.

In most places they must first clear the land of trees or brushwood. The former they destroy by stripping off the bark around the stem. Their plantations are surrounded with high fences, chiefly to keep off the horsetails, which feed in the woods without a keeper.

The time for planting Indian corn, is when there is no further expectation of frost, and the Indians judge of this by observing the hazel-nut (Corylus avellana) in bloom. The culture of Indian corn costs the women much trouble, for the richness of the soil produces abundance of weeds. They used formerly the shoulder-blade of a deer, or a tortoise.

* The Latin names are taken from Linnaeus.
shell, sharpened upon a stone, and fastened to a thick stick, instead of an hoe; but now they have iron spades and hoes. The corn grows about eight feet high, with a stalk about an inch in diameter, and when unripe, is full of a sweet juice like sugar.

The Delawares and Iroquois dress the Indian corn in twelve different ways: 1. They boil it in the husk, till soft and fit to eat; or, 2. Parboil it, and having rubbed the husk off with sharp keys, wash and boil it over again. 3. They soak the whole ear in hot ashes, as it is taken from the stalk. 4. They pound it small, and then boil it soft. 5. They grind it as fine as flour by means of a wooden pestle and mortar, clear it from the husks, and make a thick pottage of it. 6. They knead the flour with cold water, and make cakes about a man's breath, and an inch thick. These they inclose in leaves and bake in hot ashes, putting live coals upon them; and use them as bread. 7. They mix dried bilberries with the flour, to give the cakes a better relish. 8. They chop roasted or dried deer's flesh, or smoked eels, into small pieces, and boil them with the corn. 9. They boil the grits made of it with fresh meat, and this is one of their most common meats, with which they eat the bread described above. 10. They roast the corn in hot ashes till it becomes thoroughly brown. Then they pound it to flour, mix it with sugar, and press it down forcibly into a bag. This serves for citron. 11. They take the corn before it is ripe, and let it swell in boiling water. It is then dried and laid by for use. The white people buy it in this state to make soup of, or soak it again, and use it with oil and vinegar as salad. 12. They roast the whole ear, when grown, but still full of juice. This is a well-flavored dish, but wastes much corn. They therefore like to have their plantations at some distance from their dwellings, that they may not be tempted to waste so much, or at least increase the difficulty of getting it. They likewise plant a species of pulse, called ground-nut (arachis hypogea), because the root only is eaten. When they are boiled, they take almost like chestnuts, but cannot be eaten raw.
In some places they plant the common bean (Phaseolus vulgaris), which is generally eaten with bear's-beth.

Potatoes are originally a North American root, and are said to have been first brought to Europe by Sir Walter Raleigh. They are cultivated by fome.

They have four different sorts of pumpkins (Cucurbita pepo), of which bread is made by the nations more to the westward; the largest of them is hung up by the Indians for winter use, as it will keep several months in that state. Melons grow by culture only.

Cabbage, turnips, and other garden stuff, are now very common, the Indians having received the seeds from the Europeans.

Agriculture is more attended to by the Iroquois than the Delawares, but by both merely to satisfy their most pressing wants, for they are even satisfied with those eatable roots and roots which grow without culture, especially potatoes or parsnips. Of the latter they make a kind of bread.

They prefer their crops in round holes, dug in the earth at some distance from the houses, lined and covered with leaves or grass. They commonly keep the situation of these magazines very secret, knowing that if they are found they must supply the wants of every needy neighbor, as long as any thing is left. This may occasion a famine, for they are so lazy, that they will not plant at all, knowing that more industrious cannot refuse to divide their store with them. The industrious therefore not being able to cultivate more from their labor than the idle, by degrees control their plantations. If the winter happens to be severe, as the snow prevents them from hunting, a general famine may ensue, by which many die. They are then driven by hunger to drefs and eat the roots of grass or the inner bark of trees, especially of young oaks.

The country is plentifully covered with plants, trees, and fruits, which bear fruits. Strawberries grow so large and in such abundance, that whole plains are covered with them as with a fine scarlet cloth. They are remarkably well flavored.
Ch. VI. Food, Agriculture, &c.

Gusberries (Ribes grossularia), black currants (Ribes nigrum), blackberries (Rubus fruticosus), raspberries (Rubus idaeus), and bilberries (Vaccinium myrtillus), grow in great plenty; the latter chiefly upon the hills. Red currants (Ribes rubrum) are cultivated chiefly in gardens. There are two sorts of rasberries; the one grows in swampy places upon a short stem, not as high as bilberry bushes, which is our common ryberry (Vaccinium oxycoccus), the other upon a small reed.

The chokberry-tree (Ribes nigrum Pennsylvanicum) bears small black berry, the juice of which is so exceedingly ignant, that it has the most disagreeable effect upon the oat when swallowed, from which its name is derived.

Mulberry trees (Morus rubra) grow to a great height, and has a brown fruit, which the turkeys feed upon eagerly, as do also upon the leaves that drop in autumn.

Vines (Vitis vinifera) are numerous, and grow remarkably high and long in low grounds. By their tendrils they frequently climb up the highest trees, and defend from their roots to the ground. The grapes have a four taste, high lands the shoots are flender and short, being frequently disturbed in their growth by the Indians setting to the brush-wood; but their grapes are sweeter, and may be made of them. The bears go often in search of the leaves, and always chase the beast and sweetest grapes.

Among the different species of cherry-trees, the cluytter (Prunus padus) is remarkably prolific. These cherries are black, about as large as currants, and grow in clusters. They are not edible, but impart a delicious flavor and high to brandy. The wood of this tree is well suited for inl work. The red cherry tree (Prunus Canadenfis) grows above eight or ten feet high, is also very prolific, bears its fruit in clusters. They are seldom eaten, their resembling that of allum. The sand cherry (Prunus ma) grows only in sandy ground. The tree is about four or five feet high, and the cherries crowd the branches in such abundance, that they weigh them down to the ground.

F 3

They
They have a delicious smell, but are no larger than a rictueball. They are preferred to other cherries for maraschino cherry brandy. Besides the above-mentioned, there is another species of cherry in great plenty, chiefly growing on banks of the Mulkingum upon an high and stout tree, wood of which is red, and very proper for cabinet work.

The plum tree (Prunus domestica) is common. The Ind prefer those bearing red and green plums, both of which have a good taste and agreeable smell.

Peach trees (Amygdalus Persica) grow in some places in great abundance; as also wild Citrus (Podophyllum tatum). These grow upon a spig not above a foot in height, and have an agreeable taste, between sour and sweet. The root is a deadly poison, which will kill in a few hours.

Crabs (Malus lycifera) grow in great plenty, and Indians being very fond of sharp and sour fruit, eat them abundance. The fruit of the papaw-tree (Carica papaya) bears a beautiful fruit, in form and size resembling a mid-sized cucumber, having a yellow skin, an agreeable smell, and two or three kernels like almonds.

Of the common chestnut (Fagus callas) there are four woods. The fruit is rather smaller than the chestnut of Europe, but sweeter and more palatable. When they ripe, the Indians, to save themselves the trouble of gathering, hew down the tree. They may be eaten raw, but commonly boiled, and make a rich dish. Sometimes they are roasted like coffee-beans, and a kind of beverage is made of them, nearly resembling coffee in color and taste, by a laxative nature. They have another kind of chestnut which is large, but not fit to eat.

Pink smooth (Fagus Pumila) is a shrub of about two yards in height, bearing a flower nearly resembling that of the chestnut-tree, but smaller. The fruit is of the chestnut kind, oval, pointed at both ends, with a dark brown shell, all tasting like a very sweet hazel-nut.

The common walnut-tree (Juglans Regia) grows mostly in low valleys and in a rich soil. It grows large and high, sp is its branches remarkably wide. The nuts have a thin shell, and the kernel is very palatable. Besides this, there are two species common in this country, called the white (juglans alba) and the black walnut (juglans cinerea), deriving their names from the color of the wood, though, strictly speaking, the former is not white, but grey. The latter is of a dark brown, almost violet, and is used by cabinet-makers for tables, book-cases, and other furniture. The nuts of both have a hard shell, and the kernel is oily, but seldom eaten. The hickory nut is a species of walnut (juglans alba). One sort of hickory has a rough bark and white wood, of a fine grain, and full of juice. The nut is enclosed in a thick, hard shell, and has an agreeable taste. But the other sort of hickory with a smooth bark bears a bitter nut, from which an useful laxative oil may be extracted. The Indians gather a great quantity of sweet hickory nuts, which grow in great plenty in some years, and not only eat them raw, but extract a milky juice from them, which tastes well and is nourishing. Sometimes they extract an oil, by first roasting the nut in the shell under pot-ashes, and pounding them to a fine mass, which they boil in water. The oil swimming on the surface is skimmed off and used in their cookery.

The butter or oil-nut tree (juglans nigra) grows chiefly in meadows, in a warm soil. The stamens exceed three feet in circumference, has many branches, and the leaves resemble those of the walnut. The nut also has a shell like a walnut-shell, but it is softer, considerably longer and thicker, and contains a much larger kernel, full of sweet-smelling oil. The inner bark of this tree makes a good purple stain, but is said to vary its shade with the month in which it is peeled off.

The brazil-nut (corvulus avellana) is exactly like that of Europe.

The Delawares change their dwelling-place too often to cultivate orchards, but among the Iroquois none are found. Neither of them know any thing of flower-gardens.
No fruit-tree is so much esteemed by the Indians as the maple (acer saccharinum), of which they make sugar. They have two species, the soft and the hard maple.

The sap of the latter is remarkably sweet. The wood has beautiful veins, and is used in cabinet work. It grows chiefly about springs, upon an eminence, and its flower is red. The soft maple yields more sap, but not of so sweet a taste. Nor are the veins of the wood so beautiful. It grows chiefly in rich meadows and valleys, and has a white flower, flat stem, and fewer branches than the hard. The leaves are larger, and of a dark green color. The wood is split with more ease, though very tough and hard. The largest of these trees is about two or more feet in diameter. Those of a middle size, young and still growing, yield the most sap. The Delawares call it the stone tree, on account of the hardness of its wood, but the Iroquois, sugar tree. The sap is found in the greatest plenty and perfection in spring, which is about February on the Ohio and Muskingum, and March in the more northern countries. Then the season of sugar-boiling commences, though near the Muskingum, sugar is boiled both in spring, summer, and winter, in case of need. The method of proceeding is as follows:

Each family provides brass kettles for boiling, and a number of smaller and larger wooden troughs or ditches, made of bark, for receiving the sap. When every thing is prepared, an oblique incision is made in the tree, which is renewed twice or thrice during the time of its running. A thin wedge of about three or four inches broad being forced into the lower part of the incision, a funnel made of bark is introduced, by which the juice is conveyed into the wooden troughs or ditches.

The sap flows most plentifully, when it freezes at night, and the sun shines in the day. At night it commonly ceases to run, when the weather is either warm or rainy, or when it has not frozen for a night or two. The state of the weather determines the length of the flowing season to be one or two months. Towards the end of it the sap begins to flow once or twice in great quantities both by day and night; but after that, 'it is not so good, and only fit for treacle. The sap, which is of a brown color, is put into brass kettles, and, without any further addition, boiled upon a slow fire, till it becomes as thick as honey; then more is added and boiled down, which becomes of a still darker color. Out of these kettles it is poured into broad wooden dishes of about two inches in depth, and stirred about in them till it is cold, by which the sugar is granulated, and becomes as fine as the West Indian. If they have no dishes of this kind, they let it cool in the kettles, and form it into cakes, which, when cold, are very hard. This sugar is used by the Indians either to sweeten their victuals, or in the place of bread: and it is thought more wholesome, and sweeter than our common brown sugar.

Sugar-boiling is chiefly the employment of women, and they find it very lucrative. A kettle holding between sixty and seventy quarts, with two of a smaller size for ladies, will boil with ease near two hundred pound of sugar in one day, besides a considerable quantity of treacle. There is seldom any want of sap, for the maple is uncommonly full of it. Instances have been known, of one tree producing above three hundred quarts of good sap for sugar, and as much more for treacle. About thirty-five or forty quarts of sap make one pound of sugar; thus about eight pound of sugar, and as many of treacle, may be collected from one tree. In common these trees will last eight or nine years, and the sap flows, even when the limbs are cut all round.

Tobacco (nicotianum tabacum) is originally an American plant, and was not known in Europe before the year 1584. The Indians consider it as one of the most essential necessaries of life. The species in common use with the Delaware and Iroquois is so strong, that they never smoke it alone, but mix it with the dried leaves of the fumac (thus plumum), or with another herb, called by them digalima, the the leaves of which resemble bay leaves, or with the bark of a species of willow, called by them red wood.

The common drink of the Indians at their meals nothing but the broth of the meat they have boiled, or spirit water. But they likewise prepare a kind of liquor of dr bilberries, sugar and water, the taste of which is very agreeable to them.

The wild Indians have a most inextinguishable inclination to spirituous liquors, and use them to excess. Brandy, and particularly rum, with which, alas! the Europeans have made them acquainted, destroy more lives than all their wars.

Breeding of cattle is still less attended to by the Indians than agriculture. They would rather hunt game in forests, than tend cattle at home. Some indeed have begun to keep black cattle to get milk and butter, but most Indians are satisfied with dogs, pigs, and horses.

Their dogs, especially those among the Delawares, of the wolf kind: When irritated, they show their teeth but will never attack a wolf, though furiously set on. Pigs do not differ from those of Europe. The horse is a very favorite animal with the Indians. They are never used in husbandry, but only for riding, and are not well fed. They are commonly lent, with a bell about their neck, in the meadows or forests to seek their own food; and return sometimes by night only, to lick the earth, impregnated with urinary salts, in the neighbourhood of the huts. If Indians want to ride, they must first go to the forests to catch their horses. Each Indian knows the sound of his own horse, and the horses the call of their master, and if he brings them corn, they are easily taken.

Grafs grows in great abundance in spring, summer, and autumn, both in the open country and in the forests. Rich foils it grows in some places so high that a man on horseback can but just reach the top of the stalks. When it is withered, the Indians set it on fire, both to make room for the new crop, and to destroy young sprouts of the Th
There are also mushrooms of different kinds, which are so agreeable to the horned cattle, that they are hardy to be kept from differing in search of them. Many springs are impregnated with common salt or salt petre, and both black cattle and horses resort to them in numbers.

Beside the common horse-fly, there is a species which gives great usefulness to horseflies and cattle of all kinds. They even attack men, penetrate through the skin, and suck so much blood, that they swell to the size of a hazel-nut, and then fall off.

The Indians take but little pains to provide store of winter-provision for their cattle, for the snow is seldom deep, and the weather generally mild. Thus the cattle can always find food, especially in low grounds, where the grass remains green, and begins to grow plentifully towards the end of March, or beginning of April. A species of winter-grass grows even in winter around the springs, which is much relished by the cattle. But in woodlands, the horses find little more than the small branches of young trees, chiefly of sassafras (Sassafras albidum), which grows there in abundance; except a species of green moss, growing upon the bark of soft trees, and much resembling hay in appearance.
is rendered so quick, that in hunting they see objects at an amazing distance. In detecting and pursuing game, they almost exceed the best-trained dog, in following its course with certainty. They run so swift, that if a deer does not fall upon the first shot, they throw off their blanket, and frequently fail to overtake him.

Their contrivances for decoying and securing the game are innumerable. They study this from their infancy, and many remain whole years in the woods by way of practice.

Formerly the chief weapons used by an Indian hunter were bows and arrows, armed at the point with a longish, sharp stone of a triangular shape. Even to this day, many of the west and north-west tribes make use of no other weapons.
They have the advantage of the gun in not making the game so shy. The Delawares and Iroquois are now very expert in the use of rifle-barrelled guns. The Delawares, when at home, practice shooting at a mark. They are not unacquainted with the use of the bow and arrow, but never employ them but to kill such game as are not worth powder and shot. In purchasing fire-arms and powder, a good hunter uses particular caution, to have both of the very best quality.

Before an Indian sets out for a long hunt, he usually shoots one or more deer, and keeps a feast of sacrifices, inviting the old men to assist him in praying for success. Some bathe and paint before they set off, but the most superstitious keep a fast both before and during the season. When they fast, they taste nothing, but are neither gloomy nor dissatisfied.
They say that fasting peculiarly helps them to dream, and in dreams they pretend to be informed of the haunts of the game, and of the best method of appeasing the wrath of the bad spirits, during the time of hunting. If the dreamer fancies that he sees an Indian, who has been long dead, and hears him say, "If thou wilt sacrifice to me, "thou shalt shoot deer at pleasure," he immediately prepares a sacrifice, and burns the whole or part of a deer, in honor of the apparition.

Besides
Ch. VII.

Hunting.

Besides this ceremony, most hunters endeavour to procure a hunting beifōn, to which they ascribe the power of procuring them success. The beifōn is a preparation made by old men, who are no more able to hunt, consisting of roots, herbs, and certain seeds, sold by them at a high price. There are several sorts, but every one is ingenious to get the beef; if it should even cost him the greater part of his property.

One sort of beifōn is taken inwardly, and occasion a violent vomiting, but this is not in common use. According to their opinion the beifōn will prove mischievous, unless every ceremony annexed to its use is attended to with the most suspicious exactness. If a huntsman shouts nothing for several days, he swallows a small dose, and observes the rules prescribed to him in the strictest manner. If another day passes without success, without doubting the efficacy of his beifōn, he ascribes his ill luck to some other cause, frequently to the presence of a missionary. Some falsely pretend, that they can deprive the deer of their smell, and bring all the game they wish for within gunshot.

When a whole party goes out to hunt, they chafe the most expert for their captain, particularly if he is a member of the council. He must watch over the due observance of the ceremony, usual in hunting, for instance, that no one leaves the party, till the seal is at an end. If one has shot a deer, but another has followed and killed it, the skin belongs to the fir, and either the half or whole of the meat to the later.
If several take aim at once, but they cannot determine, which of them killed the game, the skin is given to the oldest of the party, even if he did not shoot with them, and he is then fain to have killed the animal. Old men therefore, though no more able to shoot well, generally get their share of skins, if they only shoot now and then, though they do not hit the mark. The flesh is always divided into equal shares, but the old men are first served. They have in general, but the Unamis in particular, a custom, that when a huntsman has shot a deer, and another Indian joins him, or only
only looks at a distance, he immediately gives him the whole animal, and goes in pursuit of another.

The Indians commonly stay three or four weeks, and often several months, at their hunting places. During the rainy season, the inundations are so sudden, that they are sometimes obliged instantly to take to their boats, and much game perishes in the low grounds. Some who do not chuse to join a hunting party, go either alone, or take their wives and children with them, and build bark huts in the wood, as a place of rendezvous. When these single hunters kill a deer, they take the skin and as much of the flesh as they can carry; the rest they hang upon a tree for the use of such who pass that way. The meat brought home is either immediately eaten, or roasted and laid up in store. The prime pieces are cut off and stuck on skewers into the ground on that side of the fire towards which the smoke is driven, being frequently turned round. When they are well done, they are taken off, and when cold, put into a bag, or hung upon a cord, and hung in the air.

Autumn is the best season for hunting, comprehending the months between September and January, the game being then fat, and their skins in perfection. They chiefly hunt deer.

The North American deer (cervus elaphus) are red from May to September; when they cast their coat, and nature provides them with a grey and very close fur for the winter. They have an acute smell, and shed their horns in January. In running, their tail, which is about a foot long, stands upright, and the inside being white, is seen at a great distance. They generally bring forth in June.

White deer are seldom seen in these parts. These have generally in summer some red, and in winter some grey spots. The Indians call a white deer the king of the deer, and believe that the rest flock about, and follow him.

Further north, especially about Onondago and the great lakes, the deer are much larger than on the Mazakingum; and about about two hundred miles to the south-west, they are much smaller.

In former times the Indians killed only as much game as they wanted for food and clothing, as the dress both of the men and women was made entirely of skins. These animals of course were then very numerous every-where. But now, when a large buckskin sells for a $$1$$ an eighth dollar, the game is pursued for the sake of trade, and a clever huntsman will shoot from fifty to one hundred and fifty deer in one season; and consequently they must decrease very fast in number.

The Indians prefer hunting deer in large companies. Having surrounded a considerable tract of country, they let the dry leaves and grasses on fire. The poor animals fly towards the middle to escape the flames, and the hunters closing upon them, by following the fire, kill them with certainty, so that hardly one escapes. As the principal object in shooting them is their skin, the flesh is left in the forest, and devoured by the wild beasts and carnivorous birds.

The North American Elk (cervus alces) is a much larger but more timid animal than the deer, almost equal in size and bulk to an horse. They are not met with near the river Ohio and Muskingum, but said to be in great numbers farther north. The elk is seen now and then in the country of the Iroquois, come from Canada.

The moose deer does not differ much from the elk in figure, except that its legs are longer and its tail shorter. The Delaware and Iroquois hunt neither elk, moose deer, nor buffaloes. The Buffaloes (bos bison) are taller than the common oxen. Their horns are thick, short, and black. Their heads are broad, with much hair on the forehead, hanging over their eyes, which, with a long beard, gives them a frightful look. They have a bunch upon their backs, covered with long hair, or rather with a soft down, of a brown or mouse color, mixed with the same long hair, which clothes their whole body. Their legs are remarkably short. They are afraid of men, and a single dog will chase a whole herd, but but when wounded, they attack their enemy with fury. A female buffalo is shot, the calf will stand quietly till the huntsman has skinned its dam, and then follow him into the hut. Buffalo-beef is of a good taste, but the Indians feel great value on the skin.

These animals appeared some time ago in great numbers on the banks of the Muskingum, but as soon as a count begins to be inhabited, they retire, and are now only few near the mouth of that river. But on the banks of the Sioto and further south, they are said to feed in large herds.

When the season for hunting deer is past, the bear-hunt begins, and is continued from January until May.

The Bear, common to North America (ursus arctos nigro) is quite black, has short ears, a thick head, a sharp mow very short tail, and large strong paws. It climbs the high trees, in search of grapes, chestnuts, and acorns, and is very fond of honey, which renders its flesh remarkably juicy and relishing.

There is likewise a kind of bear, much larger than the common, with much hair on their legs, but little on the bodies, which appear quite smooth. The Indians call it the animal, the king of the bears, because the others are willingly to follow it.

All North American bears are carnivorous. Therefore the flesh of game left by the Indians in the forest, is to the welcome repast. The larger species is remarkably vicious, and in the country of the Iroquois, they seize upon women and children, and even upon men unarmed. Towards the end of December, the bears, being extremely fat, retire to their winter haunts. These they prepare either hollow trunks of trees, caves, or the thickest part of the forest. Most of them forake their cover in the beginning of spring but if they have young, not till May. During this period, they are said to eat nothing, but live on their own fat.

No Indian will shoot a bear during the season of hunting deer, but when this is over, they immediately prepare for the
They are remarkably expert in finding out the haunts of these animals. If the bear will not leave his retreat in a hollow tree, they cut down the tree, and commonly kill him with the first shot. The Iroquois use wooden traps to catch these bears, whose hiding-places are in the swamps. The Indians value bears on account of their flehmen, which is juicy and well flavored, nor does their fat grow soon rancid. Their skins are no great object for trade, being very cheap, and they rather keep them to fit or steep upon, for which their long hair renders them peculiarly adapted. The white people buy the fat of the bears, and sometimes use it instead of butter, or oil for salad.

The Beaver of North America is of a dark brown color, and not different from that found in Europe. The amazing capacity of these animals, displayed in building their dwellings, in their whole economy, and the value of their hair or down, are so well known, that a circumstantial account would in this place be superfluous. They are caught in nooses, nets, and iron traps, or killed with clubs. The Indians prepare a sweet-smelling oil, by which they decoy them into their traps. They were formerly found in great numbers on the Mississippi, but are greatly decreased by the destruction made amongst them. Though the skin is the most valuable part of the beaver, yet the Indians frequently make a meal of their flehmen, especially of their fishy tail. Some Indians will never suffer the dogs to gnaw beaver bones, lest the spirits of the beavers might be enraged, and spoil the chase in future.

The beaver-hunt is undoubtedly the most advantageous for the Indians, on account of the high price of their skins. There is therefore no season in the year, in which these animals are not pursued. The beaver-hunt is principally attended to by the Iroquois, and the deer-hunt by the Delaware.

It may probably be acceptable to have a short account of some other animals found in these parts. Some of them are hunted Quadrupeds.

Part L

Hunted by the Indians; partly for their worth, and partly to account of the mischief they do.

Quadrupeds.

The Panther of North America (Felis discolor) is of the size of a large shepherd's dog, about four feet long, with small short ears, a thick head, like a cat, short legs, long claws, and a long tail. The skin is of a grey color; mixt with reddish hair. Its cry resembles much that of a chil but this is interrupted by a peculiar bleating like that of goat, which betrays it. It gnaws its prey like a cat, and its flesh is eaten by many, and the skin furnishes a very warm covering.

The panther lives in thick woods, and frequently climbs trees to lie in wait for hogs, deer, and other animals. He possesses astonishing strength and swiftness in leaping at seizing its prey, but if it misses its aim at the first spring, never attempts a second. When it has killed an animal, devours but a small part, and when again press'd by hunger seeks a new game. When hunted, even with a small dog it never attempts any defence on the ground, but leaps in the air, from which it darts upon its enemy. If the first shot misses, the hunter is in imminent danger. They do not attack men in common, but if hunters or travellers approach a covert, in which a panther has its young, their situation is perilous. Whoever flies from it, is lost. It is therefore necessary for those threatened with an attack, gently to withdraw, walking backward, and keeping their eyes fixed upon it, and even if they miss their aim in endeavouring to shoot it, to look the more steadfastly at it. Indian courage and presence of mind is required to do this, but many an one has saved his life by this expedient.

The most terrible enemy of the deer, elk, and moose, is the Cuguar (Felis concolor), in size about as big as a wolf. It seizes its prey, either from an ambush, or it climbs a tree and watches till one of the above animals approaches fo shelter, Ch. VII. Quadrupeds. 89

A shelter, when it darts upon its prey, seizes its throat, and throws it down; then winding its long tail round its neck, devours it with ease. The only means for the poor animal to save itself, is immediately to run towards a lake or river, when the cuguar leaves its hold, being extremely averse to water. The bears are much afraid of it, and even fly from its carcase.

The Mountain-cat (Felis catus ferus) resembles in shape a common cat, but is much larger, having reddish or orange-colored hair, with black streaks. It is very savage, and will even attack deer, leaping upon their necks like a cuguar, and sucking their blood. They generally pursue hogs.

The North American Wolves (Canis lupus) are in size smaller than those of Europe: grey, and sometimes black. They are very numerous, but as their skins are not much valued, the Indians pursue them merely as noxious animals; for now and then they break into their hunting huts, steal their game, or tear their deer-skins. They attack men but seldom. The Indians even tame them, and use them as pointers. They are terrible enemies to deer, and sometimes go out in pursuit of these innocent animals in large troops, howling dreadfully.

There is a species of Wild bear (Ursus ursus) not so large as tame pigs, but otherwise the same in appearance, and much esteemed by the Indians.

On the banks of the Ohio and Muskingum, red, grey, and black foxes are numerous; on the Mississippi, silver-colored are met with.

The Raccoon (Ursus lotor) is somewhat larger than a common cat: it has a pointed nose, and makes use of its forepaws, both to convey its viands to its mouth, and to dig up small roots out of the sand, when it cannot get acorns or chestnuts. Its hind legs resemble those of a bear. It is fattest in autumn and winter, when it lives in hollow trees, like a bear, without seeking food. In a severe winter it retire for two whole months, otherwise only for four weeks. Its flesh is wholesome, and tastes much like that of a bear; and its hair is useful to hatters.
The Otter, or Minx (mustela lutra Canadensis), is very mon, and if closely pursued will attack dogs, and even in summer it lives upon fish, but in winter upon barl field fruits. Its flesh is unwholesome, and never eaten in a famine. Sometimes the otter has been known to a long journey over land, crossing from one brook another.

Another species of otter lives in the same man but its peculiarity consists in a fur, of a deeper black any other animal, so that it has become proverbial America. Its tail is round, and without hair. It chiefly in the neighborhood of the springs of rivers, smells of musk.

The Porcupine (hiftrix criptata) is never seen near the kingum, seldom near the Ohio, but frequently in the cot of the Iroquois. It lives in hollow trees, and climbs pretty nimbly. The Indians eat it with great n its flesh tastes like pork, and is commonly fat. American porcupine differs from that of other countries shape, and in the length of its quills. It is about the of a common dog, in shape something like a fox, b head resembles a rabbit. Its quills are of a dark brown t largest being about the thickness of a straw. The its weapons, and as it cannot run swiftly, it always turn back towards its enemy, and no dog attacks it with punity.

The Opossum (didelphus opposum) is about a foot lon a greyish white color, and carnivorous. If it finds a deer, it creeps into the carcasse, and devours it. It c trees, and sleeps hanging to a branch by its tail. If a approaches it unawares, it never attempts to escape; but down as dead, not moving a limb, though handled and about; but when again left to itself, creeps off sly soons its enemy is retired to some distance. The it has a bag under her belly, in which she carries her young they grow too large for this receptacle, and then beg run after her. If she meets with a fallen tree in her pa or walks round, or lifts her young one by one over and then proceeds on her journey. When pursued, is takes refuge in a tree, and hangs upon the branches; where its enemy dares not venture to The flesh of this creature tastes like pork, and is some white people, but not in general by the \textit{C}oati (viverra naia) is somewhat smaller than a the legs much resemble those of the beaver, but its shapes like a badger, and its head like that of a fox, at the ears are short, round, and bare. It climbs their fruits, especially nuts, which it conveys to its in its fore-paws. The Indians think it good food, in the nut season.

\textit{Badger} (ursus meles) burrows in the ground, and grafs, water-melons, and pumpkins. It chews the when pursued, if far from its hole, climbs trees for its flesh is relished by the Indians.

\textit{Nighting}

\textit{Racoon, or Skunk} (viverra putorius), is rather than a common ferret. Its fur is shining, of a dirty inter mingle with black spots, and its tail long and at that of a fox. Its common haunt is the thicket.

gentle and mild countenance, but goes out of its in creature whatever, and whoever approaches too ill rewarded for his curiosity. For when in fear, and, it ejects from its hinder parts a moisture, instead, upon its pursuer, to the distance of several of the whole atmosphere for near an hundred paces chuck so offensive, that no human creature can bear one minute, and exceeding every thing nauseous animal creation. Coatis infected by it must be long while in fresh soil, before the bad smell va-and the wearer must bathe and wash himself all over, can appear in company. If it touches the eye, it the greatest pain, or even utter loss of sight.
when the skunk has thus befuddled, runs about as if cruelly beaten, and rolls on the ground

\textit{G} 3   to
to get rid of the pain or stench. The flesh of this ani is wholesome and well-flavored, if the bag containing stinking moisture be carefully extracted. But if in forming this operation one drop is spilt, the whole ho and every thing in it is immediately pervaded to an inte rable degree. This creature is very troublesome when it gets into cellars and florehouses, for no one will venture to defy it away by force, as its stench would do infinitely more maje than its depredations.

There is a small wild animal in the country of the I quois, called Martin (muñecas marpes), but probably be longing to the Sable tribe (muñecas zibellins). Their furs be much valued, the Indians catch them in wooden traps; fall the skins to the white people.

The Harci in these parts (lepus timidus) are small and numerous, being continually pursued by birds and beasts prey. Towards the north they are of the same size as th in Europe, and sometimes found with a snow-white fur.

The Ondabra, Zibet (castor zibethicus), or Mufa-rat, named from a great quantity of odorous matter found in body, is not much larger than a water-rat. It is also cal by some the beaver-rat, its appearance somewhat refembl that of a beaver. Its tail however is not proportions broad, but oval. It builds its dwellings with nearly the fi are as the beaver, chusing the neighborhood of a ri though able to live entirely upon dry ground. Its foo leaves and roots in winter, and strawberries, raspberries, other field-fruit in summer. This animal does much maje to mill-dams by its burrowing.

There are several sorts of Squirrels in North America which the grey squirl (ciurus niger, cineresus, vulgari the largest, and the red, the smallest in size. Both thes are met with; but black squirrels are everywhere inu numbers. Their flesh is tender, and eaten by the Inc cafe of sickness, but not as common food.

The ground squirl (ciurus glis) lives under ground, some what smaller than a common rat. They do |
Ch. VII.  Serpents.  87

Serpents.

abuse to the Indian corn, pumpkins, and water-melons. When the Indian corn is ripe, they lay in a good store of it for the winter, with as many hazel-nuts, chestnuts, and acorns, as they can get. Their storerooms are frequently found to have several compartments, each containing one kind of fruit.

The flying squirrel (sciurus volans) has a thin membraneous continuation of the skin of the sides and belly, by which its hind and fore-legs are connected. This supports it in leaping or flying from one tree to another; if the distance be not too great. But it cannot raise itself from off the ground.

Serpents

Abound in the countries of the Delawares and Iroquois, with great variety. The most dangerous are the rattlesnakes (crotalus horridus), of which there are two sorts, black and yellow. The latter are the largest, being when full grown nearly six feet long, and nine inches in circumference. Their skin is beautifully marked. The back is brown, intermixed with a reddish yellow, and crossed by a great number of jet black streaks, diversified with spotted tails of gold. Their belly is of a light blue. The black rattlesnake has the same variety of streaks, but of a darker shade. Both kinds have two small very sharp teeth in the upper jaw, which they draw in and out with great swiftness and force. These have a small bag at the root, which discharges a poisonous juice, when they bite. The rattles at the end of their tails, from which these serpents derive their name, are rings of a horned substance, connected together like the links of a chain, one being added every year, till they have about twenty. When the rattlesnake flits, these rings rattle and betray him. They feather attack passageways, but never go out of their way, lying quiet, till they perceive danger; then they rattle with their tail, coil themselves together, with their heads erect in the centre, and in this form dart two or three times with great fury at their enemy. Their bite immediately occasions a fever, with a cold shivering, the wound begins to swell, and the swelling spreads in a short time over the whole body. In hot weather their bite is sometimes attended with instant death, but the Indians are so well-s quainted with the means of cure, that there are but 6 instances of death occasioned by the bite of this serpent. beast, bitten by a rattlesnake, may recover in twenty-four hours with proper management. If neglected, death is inelitab Pigs are excepted from the dreadful effects of their bites, th will even attack and eat them. It is said, that if a rattl is irritated, and cannot be revenged, it bites itself, and d in a few hours. This animal is said to possess anot peculiar property, viz. that of gazing with fixed eyes on a bird or squirrel, and by a kind of fascination, stupey them in such a manner, that the poor creature falls from bough, and becomes an easy prey to its enemy, who by ti ing it all over, and covering it with a kind of flimsy encrulates its passage down its throat. The rattlesnak habit rocky, mountainous, and uninhabited places, and extremely prolific. Towards the end of the year they er into their holes, and twist themselves together, having to pearance but little life. About the time of their revivals spring, many die, and they have been found lying dead large heaps, infecting the air with an intolerable stench.

S 4
Our missionaries have discovered a small species of the r attle-snake, near the river Muskingum, of hardly one foot length. No serpent is found in these parts in such numb as the rattlesnake.

Many other kinds of serpents are found in the Indian count of different sizes, colors, and properties; black, yellow, or per-colored, green, and variegated. Some can climb all and are said to enchant birds and squirrels like the rattl snake. Some are supposed to emit a poisonous breath, a perhaps the magic power of the rattlesnake confits men in this property. Others are strong enough to seize up the largest birds of prey, when attacked by them, a s to squeeze them to death, twirling their bodies about them.

Some live in the water, and prey upon fish. They: not all poisonous; perhaps such only being armed w poxi Lizards, Frogs, &c.

poison in whom there is a want of strength. Most of them first cover their prey with slime, and then swallow it whole, by slow degrees, and seemingly with pain.

All serpents cast their coat in spring, and then appear in their greatest beauty. The new skin of the large black serpent is a fine shining jet.

There are but few Lizards (laccetra) in the country.

Of the Land-tortoije (testudo coriacea) there are seven or eight species of various colors. The smallest are the most beautiful, but their bite is counted venomous.

The largest American Frog is the Bull-frog (rana boans). It inhabits rivers and large brooks. They are about six times as large as the common frog, and receive their name from their croaking, which resembles the bellowing of a bull, but is far more penetrating. A few bull-frogs will make a noise, almost too much for human ears to bear, especially at night.

The common frog (rana pipsiens) is brown, does not croak, but has a note, like a short whittle. In spring they are heard all night. The Iroquois catch them at night by the light of a torch, and eat them either fresh or dried. Green frogs are but rarely met with in rivers and brooks.

The Tree-frog lives upon trees, either cleaving to the bark or creeping into the crevices. Their color so exactly resembles that of the tree, to which they attach themselves, that they are hardly to be distinguished from it. In some places they resemble in such numbers in summer, that the ears of passengers are almost runned with their croaking.

BIRDS:

The common Eagle (falco leucocephalus) has a white head and tail, and builds its nest in the fork of some lofty and thick tree. It lays the foundation, with a great quantity of branches, repairing it every year. The strength and courage of this bird are remarkable. Every morning it goes out in search of prey, and returns to the nest with birds, squirrels, squirrels, snakes, and fishes, for its young. Fifth now a then prove destructive to them: For in attacking large fi it sometimes cannot disengage its talons soon enough, b is drawn under water and drowned. The eagle is par cularly fond of young game, but when hungry, will pick muscles, and carrying them to a great height in the air, dr them upon a rock, in order to open them. This species the eagle is numerous; but there is another, which our m tionaries have seen nowhere but on the banks of the Ol and Muskingum. The Indians call it the forked eagle (fal zureaus) from its tail being forked. It soars to an altiti ing height. If it approaches the dwellings of the Indi they always look upon it as a token of change of wealt or rain. It feeds upon snakes and other creatures like t white-headed eagle, but is continually on the wing duri its repast. It builds upon high trees, but in as conceale manner as possible.

The Crane (ardea iurus) is commonly found upon la plains, and near to rivers. When hit by a shot, it atta its pursuer, and has great power in striking with its wi
The Indians eat its flesh, but not in common.

Wild Swans (anos cygnus) are numerous both on the Ol and Muskingum. According to the account of the Indi their flesh tastes like that of a bear, and is fat. In t countries bordering upon the great lakes, a very large spe of swan is found, called the Trumpeter, from his voice imbled the sound of a trumpet.

The Pelican (pelicanus onocrotalus) has a large bag ha ing from its nether jaw, which is the receptacle for the f it gathers for its young. As they are generally blue when drawn out, this may have given rise to the fable of t pelican's feeding its young with its own blood, drawn fr its breast.

Wild Geese (anos anser ferus) appear in spring and autum and remain long in the country. Some continue during t winter, others only during the summer. Most of them pass in a warmer latitude towards winter, and go to the north Ch. VII.

Birds.

98

\[\text{nanner, where they build in the neighborhood of the great trees, and return in autumn with their young.}

\text{Wild Turkeys (maleagris gallopavo) flock together in autumn in great numbers, but disperse in the woods towards spring. They are larger than the tame turkeys, and commonly perch so high upon the trees, that they cannot be shot but with a ball. In winter their plumage is of a shining black but changes in summer to a light brown, with white spots upon the wings. Their eggs are much sought after, and relished by the Indians. There is a species of wild turkeys, which are not eatable, their flesh having a most disagreeable flavor.

Owls are in great number and variety, some large, others small, but all very noisy in the woods at night. The large whir owl (Strix nyctea) and the little owl (Strix pascarina) go in quest of prey even at mid-day.

The Fish-hawk or Osprey (falcari halietus) feizes upon its prey with astonishing velocity. They say, that when it hovers over the water, it poises, or elevates the fish toward the surface, by means of an oily substance contained in its body. So much is certain, that, if a bait is touched with this oil, the fish bite greedily, that it appears as if it were impossible for them to relist.

The Heron (ardea Americana) has long legs, large wings, and a lean body.

There are two other birds of prey, which live upon fishes, but I cannot find their names. One is larger than an eagle; the other small, and builds its nest in the earth, digging its way into steep banks, and forming avenues to its nest, just wide enough to creep in.

The Night-hawk or Goat-fucker (caprimulgus Europaicus), called also night-swallow, is rather smaller than the common hawk, flies extremely swift, and is seldom seen but in the dusk of the evening, when it frequently pursues the traveller, commonly flying about his head. These birds flock together, and fly very high in the air before a thunder storm; towards evening they approach the dwelling-houses, perching upon the the trees, and singing with a mournful note, till toward midnight. If one of them happens to perch upon the roof of a house, the superstitious Indians believe, that it forebodes forest great misfortune. Their appearance in spring may alway be considered as a certain sign that the frost is over.

The hawks, ravens, crows, and pigeon-hawks, are very common.

Pheasants (phasianus Colchicus) are not valued by the Indians, and the woods would swarm with them, had they not so many destructive enemies among the birds of prey. They multiply very fast, one hen laying above twenty eggs at a time. In winter they shelter themselves from the birds of prey under the snow, and run thus a considerable way from one place to another.

The Wild Ducks (anas ferus) are birds of passage, like the wild geese, but there are some kinds in America that stay there during the summer season. One kind builds its nest in hollow trees, hanging over the water, and when its young are hatched, it throws them into the river, and swims off to some other part.

The Loon (columbus) is larger than a duck, but not eatable. It is noted for its swiftness in diving, and therefore difficult to shoot. The Indians make pouches of its skin, large enough to hold their pipe, tobacco, flint and steel, knife, &c.

The Partridges (tetra perdix) are small. They are mostly found in cultivated grounds; their flesh is tender, and of a fine flavor.

A few green Parrots (psittacus) are seen in the woods in summer, but are in greater numbers further to the south.

The white Gull (larus) is frequently seen near rivers and lakes.

The Wild pigeon (columba migratoria) is of an ash grey color. The cock is distinguished by a red breast. In spring they take their passage to the north, and in autumn return to the south. In some years they flock together in such numbers, that the air is darkened by their flight. Wherever they alight, they make as much havoc among the trees and garden-garden-fruits as the locusts. The noise they make is so intolerable, that it is difficult for people near them to hear, or understand each other. In the year 1778 they appeared in such great numbers, that the ground under their resting-places was covered with their dung above a foot high, during one night. The Indians went out, killed them with sticks, and came home loaded. They delight in shooting these wild pigeons, and sometimes kill thirty at a shot. At nights, a party of Indians frequently fall out with torches made of straw or wood, and when they get among the birds, light them. The pigeons being dazzled by the sudden glare, are casually knocked off the branches with sticks. Such a party once brought home above eighteen hundred of these birds, which they killed in one night in this manner. Their flesh has a good taste, and is eaten by the Indians either fresh, smoked, or dried. When the Iroquois perceive that the young pigeons are nearly fledged, they cut down the trees with the nicks, and sometimes get two hundred young from one tree.

The Turtle-dove are smaller than the wild pigeons, and always fly in pairs.

The Mocking-bird (turdu polyglottus) is somewhat larger than a thrush, and in great numbers. Its song is much like that of a nightingale. The latter is seldom seen in America. But this mimicks the notes of other birds, and even the barking of a dog, and mewing of a cat.

The Wippowill is grey, smaller than a turtle-dove, and generally found in corn-fields. It has received its name from the sound of its voice, which is heard all night long.

The Blue-bird is so called from its color, which is a beautiful blue. It makes its appearance in spring before any other summer bird.

There is a bird in these parts, called by the Indians, the bird of the Great Spirit, and probably a species of the bird of paradise. It has a beautiful shape, and is as large as a swallow. Its neck is a light green, and four or five feathers, three times the length of its body, variegated with gold at purple, extend from its tail.

Snipe, woodpeckers of different sorts and colors, thrust with red breasts, swallows, starlings, cat-birds, finches, tom-tits, and wrens, are everywhere found in great numbers.

The Colibri (trochilus mellifogus) is the most beautiful of all American birds, and considerably smaller than the wre. The beauty of its plumage is beyond description. Of species of these birds has a crest upon its head of the most splendid colors, its breast is red, and the belly white; its back, wings, and tail, are of the richest light green, which intermixed with tints of gold, cover the rest of its body. Flies like a bee about the flowers of the field, and with the perching about them, sucks their honey, which is its only food. This has given it the name of the honey-bird. As flies very swift, and makes a buzz in the air by the rustling of its wings, it has also received the name of humming-bird.

FISHING.

I am now to describe one of the most favorite diversions of the Indians next to hunting, namely, that of fishing. Little boys are even frequently seen wading in shallow brooks, floating small fishes with their bows and arrows.

The Indians always carry hooks and small harpoons with them, whenever they are on a hunting party; but at certain feasts of the year they go out purposely to fish, either alone or in parties. They make use of the nearest and lightest canoe made of birch-bark, as described above, for this purpose and not only venture with them into spacious rivers, but even into the large lakes, and being very light, the way do not break into them as easily as into European boats. They caulk them with the resistless bark of a species of elm which they sift pound, to prepare it for use. Another kit of canoes are made of the stems of large trees of light wood.
chiefly cypress. These stems are excavated chiefly by fire, and finished with an hatchet. They look like long troughs, and are of various sizes.

There is a particular manner of fishing, which is undertaken in parties, as many hands are wanted, in the following manner: When the Shad-fish (clupea alofa) come up the river, the Indians run a dam of stones across the stream, where its depth will admit of it, not in a strait line, but in two parts, verging towards each other in an angle. An opening is left in the middle for the water to run off. At this opening they place a large box, the bottom of which is full of holes. They then make a rope of the twigs of the wild vine, reaching across the stream, upon which boughs of about 10 feet in length are fastened at the distance of about two fathoms from each other. A party is detached about a mile above the dam with this rope and its appendages, who begin to move gently down the current, some guiding one, some the opposite end, whilst others keep the branches from falling by supporting the rope in the middle with wooden forks. Thus they proceed, frightening the fishes into the opening left in the middle of the dam, where a number of Indians are placed on each side, who standing upon the two legs of the angles, drive the fishes with poles, and an hideous noise, through the opening into the above-mentioned box or shed. Here they lie, the water running off through the holes in the bottom, and other Indians stationed on each side of the shed, take them out, kill them and fill their canoes. By this contrivance they sometimes catch above a thousand and eighty fish in half a day.

In Carolina the Indians frequently use fire in fishing. A certain kind of fish will even leap into the boats, which have fire in them.

Among those fishes, with which the rivers and lakes in the countries belonging to the Delawares and Iroquois are most plentifully stocked, the following deserve to be mentioned:

The
The Eagle-fish has no scales, and its flesh tastes well. In the river Muskingum they are small, but very large in the river Ohio.

There is a fish much resembling the eagle-fish in shape for which I can find no name. It has an enormous head, formed much like the bill of a goose, broader, and about six inches long. With this it penetrates into the sand to seek its food. Its mouth is below its head.

Another (lophius vespertilio) nearly resembling the eagle-fish, has four short legs, short fins, a wide mouth, and is about a foot and an half in length.

The Buffalo-fish is thus called both by Indians and Europeans, on account of its being heard sometimes to bell in the water. Its length is about a foot and an half, or even two feet, and its breadth five or six inches. It has a curved back, prickly fins, a narrow mouth, and a small head, in which two white bones are found, flat on one, and a little convex on the other side. It has no teeth, but at the entrance of its throat there are two strong flat bones with grooves, exactly fitting each other. With these it can crack the hard muscles, which are its chief food, and force to bits the bones in angling for it. But the Indians commonly pierce this fish with an iron prong, of their own making. If any one should venture to put his finger into its mouth even when appearance half dead, it would crush it to pieces.

The largest fish in the river Muskingum is the Sturgeon measuring about three or four feet in length.

Salmon (salmo fario) are deemed the best and most valuable fish caught in these parts. They grow to a very large size, and have red spots like trout. They are caught in great ease in autumn, when they ascend the rivers and brooks, but the salmon-fishery is attended to during the whole summer season.

Trout (salmo fario) are found in great plenty in all the brooks. Some of these caught in Lake Superior are said to be of peculiar excellence, and to weigh above fifty pounds.
In winter they are hung in the air to dry, and will freeze so hard in one night, that they keep as well as when salted.

Eel (murrena anguilla) are seldom caught in the rivers Muskingum and Ohio. But in the great lakes, the Indians catch them in baskets, and get frequently some thousands in one night, which they dry in the air. They are generally very fat.

The Electrical Eel (gymnotus electricus) possesses a peculiar electric quality, in so much that if any one touches it, or merely the water which immediately surrounds it, he is instantly seized with a strong electrical shock; but it may be safely caught with silken nets or lines. All other fishes avoid it, except a few species of crabs, upon which its electrical quality seems to have no effect.

The Cat-fish (gilurus catus) is about eighteen inches long, of a light brown color, without scales, having a large round head like a he-cat. Three or four sharp and strong horns of about two inches in length, grow upon its head, its fins are bony and very hard, and its weight is commonly five or six pounds. The flesh of this fish is very rich, and in taste resembles an eel.

The above mentioned Shad (clupea alofa) weighs about four pounds, and when pickled is not unlike an herring in flavor.

The Rock-fish is large, and some are found to weigh above ten pound. It has strong bones, and its flesh is white, of an agreeable taste.

Pike or Jack (esox lucius) grow to an astonishing size in the river Ohio.

In some places Carp (cyprinus carpio) are also found.

The Black-fish, called thus by the Indians, has large, brown scales, a small head, and a small, round, soft mouth with no teeth in it. Its shape is not broad, but round. It is reckoned one of the best flavored.

The River-tortoise of these parts is a species different from that found in Pennsylvania, which has a hard shell. The shell of this is quite soft, and its head small and pointed.
like a sea-tortoise. The Indians shoot them, for they not easily caught in any other way, as they seldom venture out of the water upon the banks of the river.

Large Crabs are found in all rivers, which have the bent of the tide. The mode of catching them in use among the Indians, is to tie a piece of meat to a string of twisted hair which they throw into the stream. The crabs lay hold of the meat, and are easily drawn out.

In the spring of the year 1756, two seals (phoca vitulina) came up the river Susquehannah to Wajomick, about four hundred miles from the sea, and were shot by some Indians. They could not sufficiently express their astonishment at the sight of these unknown animals. At length a council was summoned, to consider whether it would be proper to leave them or not; when an old Indian rofe and observed, that God had sent them, they could not but be good to them. They approved of his opinion, made a feast, and found them a very palatable dish.

CHAPTER VIII.

Trade of the Indians. Their Mode of Travelling, Dancing, and other Amusements.

The goods, sold by the Europeans to the Indians, consisted chiefly of the following articles:

Cloth, linen, ready-made shirts, blankets, cottons, mantoes, thread, worsted, and silk, lace, powder and a rifet-barrelled guns, wampom, knives, colors, wire, kettle, silver plate, and other buttons, buckles, bracelets, needles, rings, looking-glasses, combs, hatchets; other tools. For these they exchange bear, otter, racoon, fox, wild-cat, and other skins, &c.
Ch. VIII.  Trade.

As the Delawares are the best huntmen, they have consequently more intercourse with the European traders, who, in time of peace, bring their wares very frequently into the Delaware towns, and carry on a far more considerable trade with them than with the Iroquois and other Indian nations.

Most goods have a fixed price; yet an Indian is often tempted to purchase an article at a very exorbitant price. But if in a short time he should repent of his bargain, he may return it, and the fixed price is repaid.

The Indians cannot easily deceive a trader: but they are greatly pleased, if they can purloin, or in any manner deprive a trader of his goods. They are fond of buying upon credit, promising to pay when they return from hunting. But if on their return they find other traders in the country, they barter with them, and trouble themselves no longer about their creditors. If the latter remind them of their debts, they are offended; for to pay old debts seems to them to be giving away their goods for nothing.

When the Indians suspect a war approaching, they keep it secret, and take as many goods upon credit as they can get. For as soon as the war breaks out, all debts are cancelled, and the poor traders are the first in danger, not only to lose their property but their lives, nor do they even dare venture too soon among them, after peace is re-established. In the late Indian war about the year 1763, there being a general appearance of peace, a numerous body of traders ventured to go with a great quantity of goods into the country of the Hurons. The latter heard of it, and sent a party of warriors to meet them; but perceiving that the traders were too powerful for them, they had recourse to the following stratagem: They told the traders, that the war being broke out aforesaid, a large body of warriors had set out to kill and plunder them; but that they, moved with compassion, came with all haste to prevent it, and to point out a mode by which they might escape with their lives, viz. that they should suffer themselves to be bound and kept by them. as prisoners. When afterwards the other troop, whom the declared to be very near at hand, should come, and G that they were prisoners, they would do them no harm.
Then they would escort them with safety into their village and not suffer them to lose any of their goods. The traders foolishly believed them: they suffered themselves to be bound, and even assisted in binding each other, but no soon had they done this, than they were all murdered by their pretended friends. The Hurons enriched themselves with the spoil, and boasted every-where of their address in deceiving the white people.

The most ruinous part of the Indian trade is that of rum.

In peace, and especially about the time of their annual G crests, the dealers in rum infect the country, abusing the simplicity of the Indians, from the shameful desire of again. For when they once get into the practice of drinking, they will sell all they have, for nothing is so useful or pocious which they will not part with for rum. Of this millionary faw a remarkable instance in Shemokin on the Sufqueannah. A dealer in rum, placing himself upon spot of ground where many Indians were assembled, with small barrel, into which he had put a straw, invited any or to come and drink gratis. An Indian man approached with pentfire mien, and flow steps; but suddenly turning about ran off precipitately. Soon after, he returned and did so fame. But the third time, he suffered himself to be feduce by the trader to taste a little. He had hardly tasted it, b fore he began to barter all the wampum he had for a dish.
After this, he parted with everything he had, even with his gun, and the blanket he wore, to purchase more.

They have frequently been moved by sorrow and remor for the loss of what was most useful and valuable to them to entreat the chief magistrates of the Europeans to prohib
the importation of rum into their country. But these proh hibitions are of little avail; for if even the rum-traders are kept back for a time, the Indians will go in search of the

as
and many of their own nation, especially the women, carry on this traffic.

The repeated resolutions and orders of their own Chiefs and Captains, prohibiting the importation of rum, have had no better effect in preventing this evil. The lawgivers themselves are often the first to transgress, and the Indians are cunning enough to find means of procuring it. For example, they appoint a sacrifice of rum, in which nothing but rum is used, and as the Chiefs never hinder any thing which bears the appearance of an act of devotion, they cannot prevent them from getting it.

In trading among themselves, they make no scruple of receiving each other in the most shameful manner. The Indian trader demands an exorbitant price, well knowing that unless the buyer were in great distress, or fully intent upon purchasing the bargain, he would much rather deal with an European. Wampum supplies the place of money, being of as much value to them as gold, silver, and jewels are to the white people. The Cherokee's, who of late have had much intercourse with the Delawares, carry on a petty brisk trade with a kind of tobacco-pipe heads, of a black color, light weight, and remarkably neat workmanship.

When the Indians are going on a journey, they pretend to be careful about the weather: yet in their prayers they frequently ask for a clear and pleasant sky. The food they take with them, is the flour of Indian corn, which they either dry, or mix with sugar and water. This makes a cooling and nourishing draught. They also boil it into a kind of soup.

They never take bread of Indian corn for a long journey, for in summer it will spoil in three or four days, and is unfit for food. As to meat, they find it everywhere in the forest. Formerly they carried fire with them, using a kind of fungus for this purpose. But now they are generally provided with an European tinder-box. They are never in great haste in travelling, for they seem every-where at at home in the forests. They seldom forsake their sleeping place very early, first eating a hearty meal, and examining their clothes, which often want mending, before they start. This is very troublesome to Europeans, who are straightened for time, or wish to be soon at their journey's end, and yet it is by far the best to let them have their own way, lest they should grow frettful; for their assistance as guides is most sentially necessary. But when they have once started, they will seldom stop, till after sun-set, when they seek a night lodging in some convenient place. If it rains, they pitch some trees, and in a very short time build an hut of bark, rather a roof fixed upon four poles, flung into the ground under which they may sleep dry.

We have already observed, that they travel through the woods for days together, without any trace of a path, and yet never go astray. Difficulties never prevent them. If they meet with rivers and brooks, in which the waters are high, that no European would judge it possible to pass over, they are not intimidated, but swim across the most rapid current with great strength and dexterity.

If they travel in company, they have all things in common. They usually appoint one to be their leader, and the young men hunt by the way. If they kill a deer, they bring it to the rendezvous, lay it down by the fire, and expect, that the leader will distribute it among the whole party. When the chiefs travel, they generally take some young men with them, to hunt for them.

The thickness of the woods, and the various kinds of plants and long grafts, which entangle the feet of a traveller, render a journey in these countries very troublesome. The musquitoes are also a great torment, in passing through the woods. The Indians defend themselves at night from their attack, by lying in the smoke of their fires.

In some parts, bands of robbers infest the woods, who attack and plunder travellers; nor do they even spare their own countrymen. They commonly consist of persons expelled peled from their respective tribes, on account of some enormoous crime, which rendered them infamous. In the country of the Iroquois and farther north, where the winters are severe with much snow, the Indians are provided with snow-shoes, which enable them to walk over the deepest snow. These shoes are made of hoops, rounded in front, wide in the middle, and running to a point behind. The soles consist of small thongs of deer-skin, woven like a net with wide meshes, so that the snow may easily pass through. Towards the fore-part of the shoe, near the middle, is a cross piece of wood, with two small holes at each end, through which leather straps are drawn. By these straps it is fastened to the foot, which rests upon the cross wood, the longer part of the shoe dragging behind. On the banks of the Muckegan, where there is less snow, such shoes are not in use, and therefore the Delawares are not so well fitted out for a winter's journey as the Iroquois. The feathers in use among the Indians, are made of two thin boards, fastened sideways together, about two feet broad, and six long. They are best upwards in front, and have little hand-rails on each side.

If a single Indian has occasion to pass a river or bay, he builds a canoe: taking a long piece of bark, of proportionable breadth, to which he gives the proper form, by fastening it to ribs of light wood, bent so as to suit his purpose. But if there are more in company, they make a large canoe, as above described, ingeniously constructed of pieces of bark, carefully sewed together. Large canoes do not easily overet, being broad-bottomed: they will carry a great weight, but seldom last longer than one year. Formerly they were in common use, but are now only made in case of necessity, the Indians being furnished with proper tools, with which they build boats with ease. If the voyage is expected to be long, many Indians carry every thing they want for their night's lodging with them, namely, some slender poles, and rush-mats, or birch-bark.
When the men are at home, they amuse themselves with diversions of various kinds, in which the women join them as much as their time will permit.

Dancing is their most favorite amusement. All solemn meetings are celebrated with a dance, nor does a night pass, in which there is not a dance in one family or other, to which the young people of both sexes resort with eagerness.

The Delawares and Iroquois have different modes of dancing. The common dance is held either in a large house, in an open field around a fire. In dancing they form a circle, and always have a leader, whom the whole company attend. The men go before, and the women close the circle. The latter dance with great decency, as if engaged in the most serious business; they never speak a word to the men, much less joke with them, which would injure their character. They neither jump nor skip, but move one foot lightly forward, and then backward, yet so as to advance gradually, till they reach a certain spot, and then retire in the same manner. They keep their bodies straight, and their arms hanging down close to their bodies. But the men shout, leap, and dance with such violence that the ground trembles under their feet. Their extreme agility and lightness of foot is never displayed to more advantage than in dancing. Their whole music consists in a single drum. This is made of an old barrel or kettle, or the lower end of a hollow tree, covered with a thin deer-skin, and beat with one stick. Its sound is disagreeable, and serves only to mark the time, which the Indians, when dancing even in the greatest numbers, keep with due exactness. When one round is finished, they take some rest, during which the drummer continues to sing, till another dance commences. These dances last commonly till midnight.

Another kind of dance is only attended by the men. Each sires in his turn, and dances with great agility and boldness, extolling his own or his forefathers' great deeds in a long
Ch. VIII. Amusements.

song, to which the whole company best time, by a monotomous rough note, given out with great vehemence at the commencement of each bar.

Some dances held upon particular occasions differ much from the above. Of these the chief is the dance of peace, called also the column or pipe-dance, because the column or pipe of peace is handed about during the dance. This is the most pleasing to strangers, who attend as spectators, its appearance being peaceable, and not so dreadful as the formor. The dancers join hands, and leap in a ring for some time. Suddenly the leader lets the hand of one of his partners go, keeping hold of the other. He then springs forward, and turns round several times, by which he draws the whole company round so as to be enclosed by them, when they stand close together. They disengage themselves as suddenly, yet keeping their hold of each others' hands during all the different revolutions and changes in the dance:
which, as they explain it, represents the chain of friendship. A song, made purposely for this solemnity, is sung by all.

The war-dance, held either before or after a campaign, is dreadful to behold. No one takes share in it, but the warriors themselves. They appear armed as if going to battle. One carries his gun, or an hatchet, another a long knife, the third a tomahawk, the fourth a large club; or they all appear armed with tomahawks. These they brandish in the air, to signify how they intend to treat or have treated their enemies. They affect such an air of anger and fury on this occasion, that it makes a spectator shudder to behold them. A Chief leads the dance, and sings the warlike deeds of himself or his ancestors. At the end of every celebrated feat of valor, he wields his tomahawk with all his might against a post fixed in the ground. He is then followed by the rest, each finishing his round by a blow against the post.
Then they dance all together, and this is the most frightful form. They affect the most horrible and dreadful gestures, threatening to beat, cut, and stab each other. They are however
however amazingly dextrous in avoiding the threat of danger. To complete the horror of the scene, they bore dreadfully as in actual fight, so that they appear as madmen. During the dance they sometimes found a of life, made of reed, which has a thrill and disfigured note. The Iroquois use the war-dance even in time of peace, with a view to celebrate the heroic deeds of Chiefs in a solemn manner.

The sacrificial dance is held at the solemnization of sacrifices. The Indians are naturally given to gambling, and they freight their arms, furniture, clothes, and all their use, to gratify this passion. The chief game of the Iroquois and Delawares is snow, which indeed originated with them. The dice are made of oval and flattened plum-stones, painted black on one, and yellow on the other side. Two persons can play at one time. They put the dice into a box, which is raised alternately by each gambler, and struck the table or floor with force enough to make the dice rise and change their position; when he who has the greater number of the winning color, counts five, and the first who has good fortune to do this eight times, wins the game.

The spectators seem in great agitation during the game and at every chance that appears decisive, cry out with vehemence. The gamblers distort their features, and if unsuccessful, mutter their displeasure at the dice and the spirits who prevent their good fortune.

Sometimes whole townships, and even whole tribes play against each other. One of the missionaries happened to be present, when two Iroquois townships, had got together a number of goods, confuting of blank cloth, shirts, linen, &c. gambled for them. The game lasted eight days. They assembled every day, and each inhabitant of each township toiled the dice once. The being done, and the chance of each person noted to see they parted for that day. But each township offer a sacrifice in the evening, to ensure success to their pa
This was done by a man going several times round the fire, throwing tobacco into it, and singing a song. Afterwards the whole company danced. When the appointed time for the game was at an end, they compared notes, and the winners were away the spoil in triumph.

Carts, skittles, and foot-ball, were introduced among them by the Europeans.

CHAPTER IX.

The Indians here spoken of have in general a greater number of diseases than the Europeans, which is chiefly owing to their manner of living, especially in hunting, for they do not walk leisurely through the woods, to some distance upon their game, but run with such swiftness and perseverance that they even weary the deer, and sometimes follow it to the distance of ten miles from their huts.

Besides this, they lift and carry burdens without the least thought or caution about the consequences. An Indian makes nothing of dragging a deer of one hundred or one hundred and fifty pound weight home, through a very considerable tract of forest; at least he affects not to feel its weight, even when it is evident that he is quite exhausted. Sometimes they fall from morning till late at night, and then, making a sudden transition from hunger and want to the greatest plenty, they gratify their voracious appetites without constraint. The painful consequences of these irregularities are too visible in old age.

The women carry every thing on their heads, fastened by a thong round their foreheads. By means of this, they frequently support above an hundred weight, the load being placed so as to rest also upon their backs. This may be the cause of the frequent pains and stiffness of the neck and back, with which the old women are so frequently afflicted.

The most common diseases among the Indians are the pleurisy, weakness and pains in the stomach and breast, congestion, rheumatism, diarrhea, bloody flux, agues, and inflammatory fevers. Epilepsy and madness are not frequent. Floodings are common among the women, even in old age.

The small-pox was brought by the Europeans into the country, and is one of the principal causes of their dislike to them. For they detest and dread this disease more than any other, and are never more destitute of courage and prudence, than when it appears among them. They leave their nearest relations to die in the woods, and content themselves with bringing them a little food and drink. The patients themselves appear in despair, and know not how to support life with patience. Most of them die before the small-pox appears.

For some time past the venereal disease has also made its appearance among them. They charge the Europeans with having introduced also this plague.

The Indians are in general bad nurses. As long as a man can eat, they will not own that he is ill; and never pronounce his case dangerous, until he has entirely lost his appetite. If a patient is become sore, from long lying, they put him upon a bed of straw or hay near the fire, and make a hole under him to serve as a bed-pan. A thin soup of pounded Indian corn without butter or salt, is the common diet of the sick. Such as do not approve of this regimen eat and drink what they please, though dangerously ill.

Their general remedy for all disorders, small or great, is sweat. For this purpose they have in every town an oven situated at some distance from the dwellings, built either of flakes and boards covered with sods, or dug in the side of a hill, and heated with some red-hot stones. Into this the patient creeps naked, and the heat soon throws him into such a profug.
prostrate sweat, that it falls from him in large drops. As soon as he finds himself too hot, he creeps out, and immediately plunges himself into the river, where he continues about half a minute, and retires again into the oven. Having performed this operation three times successively, he smokes his pipe with composure, and in many places the cure is complete.

The women have either an oven for their own use, or do not attempt this mode of cure.

In some places ovens are constructed large enough to receive several persons. Some chuse to pour water now and then upon the heated stones, to increase the steam, and produce a more profuse sweat. Many Indians in health, make a practice of going into the oven about twice a week to renew their strength and spirits. Some pretend by this operation to prepare themselves for a business which requires mature deliberation and artifice.

If the sweat does not answer in removing the disorder, other means are applied. Most Indians believe, that no medicine has any efficacy, unless administered by a professed physician, which many persons of both sexes pretend to be. They have learnt their art either by instructions received from others, or by experiments made with different herbs and plants. Old men, who can hunt no more, commence physicians, in order to procure a comfortable livelihood. One is acquainted with the virtue of herbs, another with that of berries; but they seldom know how, and when, to suit the medicine to their patient's case, and thus many fall victims to their ignorance. They generally make a secret of their knowledge, which commonly perishes with them. Some however leave it as an inheritance to their children or friends, by instructing them before their death.

An Indian physician never applies his medicines without accompanying them with mysterious ceremonies, to make their effect appear supernatural. He thinks this the more necessary, because his patient believes his illness to proceed from from an invisible agent. He therefore prepares and herbs with the most singular ceremonies, and them up, invokes the aid of the Great Spirit, with whom he pretends to live in great intimacy. He also acquires directions and advice with various germetric enigmatical expressions. He pretends to drive the forces that have brought on the disorder, into the defers, to bind him fast. For this reason he demands the obedience to his prescriptions, and frequently employs a patient with great emphasis, that whoever defies his medicines, must infallibly perish.

These physicians also affect, that they have received a commission from above to exercise their art; a power was imparted to them to heal the sick. is frequently played off with success, when their reputation is on the decline. They require an eno If a patient sends for a physician, his fees must make no mean appearance, when he enters the house; it is but small, the patient must not expect either medicine, or many ceremonies, and even the medical deemed of great efficacy. Therefore if he is not enough himself, his relations frequently make us sufficient. The physician then proceeds in good gocs a grave and solemn countenance, pronouncing great confidence the name of the disease, of a pittate nature and origin, and foretells the event. He then to prescribe the diet, and the particular sacrifices for the occasion, and lastly produces his medicines. The patient begins to recover, he attributes it to the curiosity of his physician, but if he should grow worse, he employs a second, third, and fourth, reduced to the last degree of poverty.

In disorders peculiar to females, the female know many very powerful modes of cure. In which though not frequently, yet sometimes happens, very ready in administering the most efficacious at Diseases and their Cure.

If mothers cannot suckle their children for want of milk, they prepare a very wholesome substitute. But they also keep their knowledge a profound secret.

The ceremonies, used by the Indian physicians in performing their cures, are various. Many breathe upon the sick, pretending that their breath is wholesome, and afterwards sip a certain liquor made of herbs out of their mouth, over the patient's whole body, disjointing their features, and turning dreadfully. Sometimes the physician creeps into the oven, where he sweats, howls and roars, and now and then grins horribly at his patient, who is laid before the opening, frequently feeling his pulse. He then pronounces sentence, and foretells either his recovery or death. One of the missionaries happened to be present, when an Indian physician had put on a large bear-skin, so that his arms were covered with the fore-legs, his feet with the hind-legs, and his head was entirely concealed in the bear's head, with the addition of glass eyes. He came in this attire with a cask in his hand, accompanied by a great crowd of people into the patient's hut, fingering and dancing, when he grasped a handful of hot ashes, and scattering them into the air with a horrid noise, approached the patient, and began to play several legerdemain tricks with some small bits of wood, by which he pretended to be able to restore him to health.

The common people believe that by the rattling of the cask, the physician has power to make the spirits discover the cause of the disease, and even to evade the malice of the evil spirit who occasioned it. Notwithstanding the Indians are convinced of the imposture practised upon them, yet they continue to employ the physician, fearing the consequences of his hidden art to destroy them by poison. They are therefore consulted in all cases, both internal and external. Yet many a patient is saved by the good advice of a kind neighbor, after having employed several physicians without success.

An
An Indian is now and then obliged to become in this business, even against his inclination. For if a patient expresses a particular confidence in him, and perils in asking his and assent, he is fearful of refusing, lest the confidence that might be some time or other fatal to him. If he is rather fortunate enough to cure his patient, his fee is as great as that of the most skilful practitioner.

In dangerous cases, their treatment is remarkable and violent, as they suppose that a violent disorder requires a violent cure. They are acquainted with various external remedies for inflammatory fevers, and are capable of foreign medicine. They do not expect his recovery, and experience frequently justifies their conjectures. In internal diseases, which the Indians are least acquainted with, they generally prefer the advice of an European physician, for whom they have great respect. Even the Indian physicians end their treatment as much from them as they can. When I joined the English against the French in 1756, the disease was introduced among them, for which they knew no remedy. But having seen several persons cured by European surgeons, they soon made the trial themselves, and were successful in it.

One great fault of their physicians is, that they know how to proportion the strength of their medicines to the patient's constitution. External injuries they treat very well, and especially are well skilful in healing bruises and wounds. They also extract splinters, pieces of iron balls, so carefully that the wound is not enlarged by the operation. They are perfect masters in the treatment of fractures and dislocations. The former occur less frequently than the latter. If an Indian has dislocated his foot or when hunting alone, he creeps to the next tree, and one end of his strap to it, fastens the other to the dill limb, and lying on his back, continues to pull till reduced.
Ch. IX. DISEASES AND THEIR CURE. 113

In burnings and chilblains they use a decoction of beech leaves, as a speedy and successful remedy. A warm poultice, made of the flour of Indian corn, is laid upon all boils and impostumens, till they are ripe, when they are opened with a lancet. In letting blood, a small piece of flint or glass is fastened to a wooden handle, and placed upon the vein; which they strike, till the blood gushes out. Teeth are drawn with a common pair of pincers, and if the patient moans or cries out during such uncouth operations, he is heartily laughed at by the physician and the company present.

Rheumatism is considered by them as a mere external disorder. They therefore prescribe nothing inwardly, but世上 those parts of the body where the pain is most violent. In cupping, they make small incisions on the skin with a knife, upon which they place a small calabash, and for a lamp use a piece of lighted birch-bark. Some indeed take medicines inwardly, which often effect a radical cure. If a decoction of two or three different roots will not answer, they make a composition of twenty various sorts. Yet bathing and sweating are considered as the most powerful remedies. Some apply the bark of the white walnut to the part affected, by which the pain is frequently removed, and an eruption produced in some part of the body. It is extremely acrid, and occasions a pungent pain on that part of the skin to which it is applied, which afterwards appears as if it had been seared. For the head-ache they apply a small piece of this bark on the temples, and for the tooth-ache, on the cheek, near to the tooth affected. A strong decoction of it used warm to a fresh wound, is an excellent styptic, and prevents a swelling of the parts. But after it has been applied for a day or two, it must be changed for a decoction of the root of sarsaparilla, which is of such a healing quality, that the wound closes in a short time.

The Indians are remarkably skilled in curing the bite of venomous serpents, and have found a medicine peculiarly adapted adapted to the bite of each species. For example: The leaf of the rattlesnake-root (Polygala Senega) is the most efficacious remedy against the bite of this dreadful animal. God has mercifully granted it to grow in the greatest plenty in parts most infested by the rattlesnake. It is very remarkable that this herb acquires its greatest perfection just at the time when the bite of these serpents is the most dangerous. The Indians are so well convinced of the certainty of its antidote, that many will suffer themselves to be bitten for glads of brandy. The leaves are chewed, and immediately applied to the wound, and either some of the juice or little fat or butter is swallowed at the same time. To occasions a parching thirst, but the patient must not suffer to drink. Virginian Snake-root chewed, ma also an excellent poultice for wounds of this kind. decoction of the buds or bark of the white oak (Frank Carolina) taken inwardly, is said to be a certain remedy against the effects of this poison. Salt has lately been found to be a powerful antidote; and if immediately applied to wound, or dissolved in water, and used as a lotion, no danger is to be feared. The fat of the serpent itself, rubbed on the wound, is thought to be efficacious. If the cure be neglected, the consequences are terrible. But even those are cured by the above means, have a certain annual fascination of the dreadful symptoms felt when first bitten.

The flesh of the rattlesnake dried, and boiled to a boil is said to be more nourishing than that of the viper, of service in consumptions. Their gall is likewise used as a medicine. The same means are applied for the recovery of cattle that have been bitten, and their efficacy appears even sooner than in men.

The skin, shed annually by the rattlesnakes, is dried pounded fine by the Indians, who use it internally, for many purposes. A decoction of the bark and root of the hawthorn (aralia spinosa) is used as a purifier of the blood. The Indians make up their medicines in very large draughts; if their apparatus does not make a formidable show, it should thought of little or no effect; and the medicines being much distilled, may be taken in large potions without injury.

I will here insert a brief catalogue of some official plants used among the Indians.

The Tooth-ache tree (Zanthoxylum clava Herculis) resembles the ab, and is thus called, because the Indians use its wood as a remedy against tooth-ache.

The Tulip-tree (Liriodendron tulipifera) grows in Pennsylvania, and all the southern provinces, and is one of the tallest and stoutest trees. The stem is frequently seven yards in circumference, and is used for boards, boats, dishes, spoons, and cabinet-work. Its flower has a magnificent appearance, but the fruit gives it that particular name, which resembles a tulip closed. Some Indians consider the fruit, and the butt of the roots, as a powerful specific against agues.

Dyssod (Cornus florida) is neither tall nor bulky. Many believe its virtues to be the same as those of the Peruバン bark.

Wild Laurel (Laurus nobilis) grows in abundance in low rich grounds: The berries are smaller than those of the common laurel, but have nearly the same taste. The wood has a strong aromatic smell and taste, and the Indians prepare a medicinal draught from it.

Saffron (Laurus saffras) rises sometimes to more than thirty feet in height; but in general, and particularly in northern latitudes, seldom exceeds that of a common shrub. The bark and root is preferable to the wood itself. The flowers serve for tea, and the Indians also use the berries as a medicine.

The Canada Scurvy-leaf (Sambucus Canadensis) resembles the elder, and bears a small berry of a reddish hue and aromatic smell. A decoction of the wood or buds is an excellent remedy in agues, and the Indians use it likewise for inflammations.

The Poison-ash (thus vernix) is remarkable for poisoning some persons at a distance, when the wind carries its exhalations towards them; although others may touch, or even chew its bark and leaves without the least prejudice. Its poison... poison is not deadly, but produces a swelling of the who body, with an eruption, which, when ripe, resembles the small-pox. The Indians cure it by drinking saffron-tea, using a false made of cream and marshmallow.

Wintergreen (pyrola umbellata) has a white flower. The berries are red, as large as floes, smooth and round, and ripe in winter under the snow. The Indians eat these berries as a stomachic.

A species of Liverwort is considered as an efficacious remedy in consumptive disorders.

Virginian Poke (phytolacca decandra) is a large herb, with leaves about six inches long, and two broad, bearing a berry, called by some pigeon-berry, the pigeons being extremely fond of them. Applications of the roots to hands and feet are used as stimulants in fevers.

Tulap (convolulus jalappa) grows in abundance in Indian country, and is prescribed as a purgative. In rheumatism of the legs they roast the roots, then slit and apply them to the soles of the feet as hot as the patient can bear.

Sphenium is used not only as an emetic, but also as an antidote against the bite of serpents.

Sarsaparilla (smilax sarsaparilla) grows in great abundance in the country of the Iroquois. The root is used in medicine, and its virtues are well known.

Canadian Sanicle (anicula Canadensis), a tincture of its root prepared with brandy is applied to wounds. A species of Scabious (scabiosa succisa) commonly called Devil’s-bit, on account of the singularity of its root, is used as a medicine.

Bloodwort (anguinaria Canadensis). The root of a plant when broken, emits some drops of the color of blood which is a strong and dangerous emetic.

Cuckow-pint (arum maculatum) has a root like a small bulb when taffled it inflames the tongue by its pungency, leaving a tingling sensation, without affecting any other part of the mouth. When dried it loses this power, and is made use of in complaints of the bowels.
Virginian Snakeroot (aristolochia serpentaria) is excessively bitter, and much in use among the Indians as a fudorific and stomachic.

Ginseng (panax quinquefolium), a plant brought first from Corea to Europe by way of Japan, grows wild in North America. In China and other countries in Asia, this root is esteemed an universal remedy, in every kind of disorder. When chewed, it is an excellent stomachic. Formerly it was very dear, and sold in Holland for twenty-five florins a pound. But about thirty years ago a merchant in North America received a commission to send a large quantity of this root to London. He employed some Indians to collect as much as they could get, for which he rewarded them handsomely. Its price of course was greatly lowered, when found in such plenty.

One of the most favorite medicines used by the Indians is the Felli oil (petroleum) exuding from the earth, commonly with water. It is said that an Indian in the small-pox, lay down in a morass to cool himself, and soon recovered. This led to the discovery of an oil-spring in the morass, and since that time many others have been found both in the country of the Delawares and the Iroquois. They are observed both in running and standing water. In the latter the oil swims on the surface, and is easily skimmed off. But in rivers it is carried away by the stream. Two have been discovered by the missionaries in the river Ohio. They are easily found, by the strong smell they emit, and even those in rivers and brooks may be smelt at the distance of four or five hundred paces. The foil in the neighborhood of these springs is poor, cold, loamy, or covered with sand. Neither grass nor wood thrives in it, except fome small crippled oaks. It does not seem to proceed from a vein of coals, for no coals have been as yet discovered in the neighborhood of the springs, but strata of sand-stone only. And in the neighborhood of the coal-pits, on the banks of the Muskingum, not the least sign of an oil-spring has hitherto been discovered, though the Indians have made the most diligent search.

This
This oil is of a brown color, and smells something like When the Indians collect it from a standing water, they throw away that which floats on the top, as it smells stron ger than that below it. Then they agitate the water vigor ously with a stick, the quantity of oil increases with the mo tion of the water, and after it has settled again, the oil is skimmed off into kettles, and completely separated from the water boiling. They use it chiefly in external complaints, es pecially in the head-ach, tooth-ach, swellings, rheumatic dislocations, &c. rubbing the part affected with it.

Some take it inwardly, and it has not been found to harm. It will burn in a lamp. The Indians sometimes use it to the white people at four guineas a quart.

One of the most melancholy causes of painful disord ers and sudden deaths among the Indians is the use of poison.
There is no want of poisonous herbs and trees for this pur pose, and their noxious qualities are very different. One kind of poison operates by slow degrees, but brings on cer tain death in three or four months. Another fort cases a lingering illness, which may last a year or longer, but not be removed by any means whatever. A third species of poison kills in a few hours, but its effect may be pre vented by a timely vomit. This is generally taken by those Indi nians who destroy themselves.

The Nantikoks instructed the Delawares and Iroquois in preparing a peculiar kind of poison, which is capable of destroying whole townships and tribes, with disorders as infective as the plague. The Nantikoks, who were wretched inventors of this art, have nearly destroyed their own nation by it. They pretend that this method is efficacious, unless a company of murderers unite in their design. The Delawares have attempted to extir pate this shocking evil, but in vain, and they are therefore always in danger of poison.

The forcerers are supposed to occasion certain uncon scious deaths. The Indians pretend, that a skilful forcerer can kill a man in the space of twenty-four hours with pois
poison, merely by the black art, even at a distance of four or five hundred miles. Others are said to have the power of causing a long and lingering disorder by witchcraft. As soon as their physicians suppose the patient to be bewitched, they know not how to proceed. But if they perceive, that the patient merely imagines himself bewitched, they encourage his suspicions, that they may have the reputation of counter-acting even the power of magic, in case their medicines succeed in removing the complaint.

The Indians say that their poison and witchcraft has no effect upon the white people, because they eat so much salt in their victuals. But this is merely a pretence for deception, as there are instances of Europeans having fallen victims to their skill in poisoning.

Immediately after the death of an Indian, the corpse is dressed in a new suit; with the face and shirt painted red, and laid upon a mat or skin in the middle of the hut or cottage. The arms and effects of the deceased are then piled up near the body. In the evening soon after sunset, and in the morning before day-break, the female relations and friends assemble around the corpse, and mourn over it. Their lamentations are loud in proportion to the love and esteem they bore to the deceased, or to his rank; or the pains he suffered in dying; and they are repeated daily, till his interment.

The burying-places are at some distance from the dwellings. The graves are generally dug by old women, as the young people abhor this kind of work. Before they had hatchets and other tools, they used to line the inside of the grave with the bark of trees, and when the corpse was let down, they placed some pieces of wood across, which were again covered with bark, and then the earth thrown in, to fill up the grave. But now they usually place three boards, not nailed together, into the grave, in such a manner that the corpse may lie between them. A fourth board being laid over it as a cover, the grave is filled up with earth. Now and then they procure a proper coffin.
Indian Burials.

They used formerly to put a tobacco-pouch, a tinder-box, tobacco and pipe, bow and arrows, gun, powder, and shot, skins and cloth for clothes, paint, a small of Indian corn or dried bilberries, sometimes the hatchet, and other furniture of the deceased, into the g sheet. If the departed spirits would have the same and occupations in the land of the souls. But this custom almost entirely abolished in the country of the Delaw and Iroquois.

If they have a coffin, it is placed in the grave and then the corpse is carried out, lying upon a linen cloth full in view, that the finery and ornaments, with all the feasts left by the deceased, may appear to advantage, and accompanied by as great a number of friends as can be brought. It is then let down into the coffin, covered with the cloth, and the lid being nailed down, the grave is up with earth. During the letting down of the corpse women let up a dreadful howl, but it is deemed a shame for men to weep. Yet in silence and unobserved, they can refrain from tears. At the head of the corpse, while it lies towards the east, a tall post is erected, pointing who is buried there. If the deceased was the Chief of his tribe or nation, this post is only neatly carved, but not painted. But if he was a captain, it is painted red, and his head glorious deeds are portrayed upon it. This is also done honor of a great warrior, his warlike deeds being exhibited in red colors. The burial-post of a physician is hung small tortoise-thells or a calabash, which he used in practice.

After the burial the greater part of the goods left by the deceased are distributed among those who assisted in burying him, and are not related to him. The rest is given to strangers present, each receiving a share. Such distribution consequently cannot be expected at the funeral of children or very poor people.

After the ceremony is over, the mother, grandmother, other near relations retire after sunset, and in the mor Ch. IX. Indian Burials.

first degree of mourning in a widow consists in her sitting down in the ashes near the fire, and weeping most bitterly; she then rises and runs to the grave, where she makes loud lamentations, returning again to her seat in the ashes. She will neither eat, drink, nor sleep, and refuses all consolation. But after some time the sufferers herself to be persuaded to rise, drink some rum, and receive comfort. However, the must attend to the second degree of mourning for one whole year, that is, to dress without any ornaments, and wash herself but seldom. As soon as she appears decent, combs and anoints her hair, and washes herself clean, it is considered as a sign that she wishes to marry again.

The men alter neither their dress nor manner of living during the mourning.

The Nantikoks have this singular custom, that about three, four, or more months after the funeral they open the grave, take out the bones, clean and dry them, wrap them up in new linen, and inter them again. A feast is provided for the occasion, consisting of the best they can afford.

When an Indian of rank dies, embassies are frequently sent from very distant Indian tribes, to condole with the relations. The ambassadors deliver their message with the most ceremonious solemnity, and wipe off the tears with their rens. When a Chief is in mourning, no complaint is sought before him, and no advice asked in any affair of state; even the most important embassies from other nations cannot be attended to by him, till the mourning is over, and he is comforted. This is commonly done by delivering a string of the bases, and addressing him to the following effect: "We bury the remains of the deceased, and cover the grave with barks, that neither the dew of heaven, nor rain, may fall upon it. We wipe off the tears from your eyes, and take all sorrow from your heart. We put your Indian Burials.

"heart in good order, and make it cheerful, &c." The mourning is then over, and he enters again upon his office.

But when rich Europeans intend to comfort a Chief, they not only give a string of wampum, but wrap the corpse in a large piece of fine linen; laying another piece upon the grave, and wipe the tears from his eyes with silk handkerchiefs. This means, they make him a present of linen and silk.

When a Chief dies, an embassy is sent by the neighbors to assure the whole nation of the share which they take in his calamity.

When the Cherokees sent a formal and numerous embassy to the Delawares in Gofchachguenk to renew their alliance with them, Njlawatwees, the first in rank among the Delaware Chiefs, was dead. The ambassadors therefore halted about two miles below the town, and sent word that they had arrived thus far. The day after some captains went down to bid them welcome and to give them joy on their arrival. In the speech made upon the occasion they said:

"We extract the thorns from your feet, which you had got on the journey; we take away the sand and gravel between your toes, and the wounds and bruises made by the briars and brushtwood, we anoint with balsamic oil, we wipe the sweat off your faces, the dust off your eyes, and cleanse your ears, throats, and hearts from all evil, which you have seen or heard by the way, or which has entered into your hearts." A string of wampum having been delivered in confirmation of this speech, the captains accompanied by a large number of Indians, conducted the ambassadors to the town. On entering, the Cherokees saluted the inhabitants by firing their pieces, which was answered in the same manner by the Delawares. Then the first ambassador began a song, during which they were brought to the council-house, every thing being prepared for their reception.

All being seated, the first ambassador of the Cherokees expressed his sorrow at the death of the Delaware Chief, and and the share he took in the general national mourning. He said; "I wrap up his remains in cloth, I bury them, and cover the grave with bark. I wipe the tears off the eyes of the weeping nation, clear their ears and throats, and take away all forrow from their hearts." He then confirmed his speech by delivering a string of wampum.

After this a pipe of tobacco went round among the chief ambassadors of the Cherokees, and as many captains of the Delawares, and the ceremony closed with a feast. The day following the subject of their embassy was taken into consideration.

CHAPTER X.

Historical Account of the Indians since the Arrival of the Europeans. Political Constitution of the Delawares and Iroquois.

Most of the Indian nations, which our missionaries have visited, inhabited formerly that part of the East coast of North America, which now belongs to the Thirteen United States, from which they have been driven by the European settlers. The Indians relate, that, before the arrival of the Europeans, some prophets pretended to have received a divine revelation, from which they foretold, that a people would come to them from a country beyond the great Ocean, and even pointing out the very day of their arrival. They further relate, that upon seeing a ship arrive on that day, they addressed their countrymen, "Behold, the Gods come to visit us." Upon their landing, the white people were adored by the Indians, to whom they made presents of knives, hatchets, guns, and other articles. But the Indians, not not knowing their use, kept them carefully, wore them about their necks on solemn festival days, and even dipped and offered sacrifices to them.

In the beginning it appeared as if the Europeans and Indians would live peaceably and quietly together. In the year 1781 there were still some very aged Indians living in the banks of the Muskingum, who were present when the first houses were built in Philadelphia. They related that the white people treated the Indians at that time with great kindness, so that they appeared to be but one nation. But when the Europeans began to settle along the navigable rivers, and extended their agriculture and commerce over great part of the country, the deer retired into the woods, and the Indians followed them. At last the Europeans began to attack the few Indians, who remained in their towns, and obliged them to retire.

Thus the arrival of the Europeans occasioned the gradation of many nations. One nation crowding into the other, drove it out of its settlement, or jeffined its territory. During all these changes the Iroquois remained molested in their country, where they live to this day. Delaware Indians lived formerly in the country about Philadelphia, extending towards the ocean, in the Jerseys, about Trenton, Brunswick, Amboy, and other places. According to an account, they made continual inroads into the town of the Cherokees, who then lived on the banks of the Delaware and its branches. Sometimes a party of Delaware Indians, stealthily and undiscovered in the nocturnal dances of the Iroquois, and falling upon them unawares, murdered many of them.

The wars between the Delawares and Iroquois were very violent, and of more ancient standing. According to the account of the Delawares, they were always too powerful for the Iroquois, so that the latter were at length convinced that they continued the war, their total extirpation would be inevitable. They therefore sent the following message to the Delawares: "It is not profitable, that all the nations sh
CH. X. Historical Account of the Indian Nations. 225

"be at war with each other, for this will at length be the ruin of the whole Indian race. We have therefore considered of a remedy, by which this evil may be prevented.
One nation shall be the woman. We will place her in the midst, and the other nations who make war shall be the man, and live around the woman. No one shall touch or hurt the woman, and if any one does it, we will immediately say to him, 'Why do you beat the woman?'
Then all the men shall fall upon him, who has beaten her.
The woman shall not go to war, but endeavour to keep peace with all. Therefore if the men that surround her beat each other, and the war be carried on with violence, the woman shall have the right of addressing them, 'Ye men, what are ye about, why do ye beat each other? we are almost afraid. Consider that your wives and children must perish, unless ye desist. Do ye mean to destroy yourelves from the face of the earth?' The men shall then hear and obey the woman."

The Delawares add, that not immediately perceiving the intention of the Iroquois, they had submitted to be the woman; The Iroquois then appointed a great feast, and invited the Delaware nation to it, when, in consequence of the authority given them, they made a solemn speech, containing three capital points: The first was, that they declared the Delaware nation to be the woman in the following words:
'We dress you in a woman's long habit, reaching down to your feet, and adorn you with ear-rings;' meaning, that they should no more take up arms. The second point was thus expressed: 'We hang a calabash filled with oil and medicines upon your arm. With the oil you shall cleanse the ears of the other nations, that they may attend to good, and not to bad words; and with the medicine you shall heal those, who are walking in foolish ways, that they may return to their senses, and incline their hearts to peace.' The third point, by which the Delawares were exhorted to make agriculture their future employ and means of subsistence, was thus worded: 'We deliver into your hands
tion. At length they obtained permission from the De to live upon their land, under their protec‘tion, as called nephew in common with the Mahikans.

The Shawanoce now call the Delawares gran
All the nations, in league with the Delawares, joi alliance of the latter with the Shawanoce, by which are so secure, that no nation will easily venture to att Shawanoce. Afterwards they lived for some time forks of the Delaware, and then in Wajomik on th quannah, where they greatly increased in numbers.
time after they moved to the western branch of th and thence to the Ohio above Great Iland.

Their increased population, and the strong conf between them and the Delawares encouraged them gratify their warlike disposition, and to commence he against the Cherokees. The latter proved often vié and pursued the Shawanoce into the country of de lawares, killing some of the latter. This brought on war between the Delawares and Cherokees. The Ch had always been a powerful people, but had many am among the nations, and of these the Delawares were to be dreaded. They were therefore the first to peace, and sought their friendship in particular, acnun ing them to be their grandfather. By their mediatialso obtained a peace with the Six Nations. This ha 1768. The Shawanoce remained for some time Ohio, then moved to Logtown, and thence to the Sioto. But in 1780 the troops of the Congres laid away, and destroyed their towns, on account of th quent incursions into the settlements of the white and the murders they committed. Thus they were elled to seek a dwelling further to the west.

The numbers in this and other Indian nations; easi s certain. For the Indians themselves are ignora of this subject, or are unwilling to give account, for they would have the Europeans to beli they are a very numerous and powerful race.
Before the arrival of the Europeans, their numbers were far greater than at present; for some of the nations are now reduced to a few hundreds. But as they have different languages, they must be still considered as separate nations. A nation, able to raise one thousand warriors, is considered as strong by the Indians. The Chippeways, who are about fifteen thousand in number, are accounted the most considerable.

Their decrease is owing to intemperance, drunkenness, poisons, irregular marriages, and the many wars they carry on, not only with the Europeans, but with each other, at their instigation. The small-pox may likewise be deemed a principal cause of it.

Yet small as some Indian nations are, each remains separate from the rest, without intermixing with their neighbors, from whom they endeavour to distinguish themselves as much as possible. Even in forsaken dwellings, the Indians can discover what nation the former inhabitants were, by the manner in which the pots or beams are placed.

Most nations are divided into tribes, each forming a separate republic within the state. The first tribe of the Delawares is called the large Tortoise; the second, the Turkey; the third, the Wolf.

The land inhabited by the Indian nations has no fixed boundaries. The country in which a nation first settled, became its property without dispute. But when one nation drives out another, the conquerors claim the land taken in war as their due and lawful property, even though they do not inhabit it. Thus the Mohegans in Florida do not inhabit the country, formerly possessed by the Shawanese, but they consider it as belonging to them by right of conquest.

Each nation is careful to ascertain its own district, and will suffer no encroachments, on account of hunting. They willingly receive such nations as have been expelled by others, as this increases their strength and influence; and are always sorry to lessen their numbers by emigration.

Part I.

Detached Indian families living among the white people on the banks of rivers, and on that account called Indians, are generally a loose set of people, like our gypsies. They make baskets, brooms, wooden spoons, dishes, and sell them to the white people for virtuals and cloth.

The Delawares and Iroquois, like all other Indians, have no regular political constitution. They know no giftocracy, law, or restraint. This they call liberty, and to them, nothing, which they value more. Each of them can move and settle where he pleases. Some families retire into a solitary place, to avoid being anno... drunkards. Others live alone, in order to carry on profitable traffic in rum, more to their own advantage.

The building of a town is not undertaken by the consent of a Chief, or by the unanimous vote of the Council, but by a few individuals, who agree amongst themselves.

Each nation, however, considering itself as a unit... has a kind of government of their own chieftainship. Chieftains appointed in every Indian nation, and, though not officially called kings by some, are in fact nothing more than the most respected among their equals in rank.

The Delaware nation being divided into three tracts, the three principal Chiefs, of whom the Unami is first in rank, and consequently the first man in the nation. Each Chief has his counsellors, who are either experienced warriors, or aged and respectable fathers of families. These constitute the council, appointed to watch over the welfare of the tribe. In matters regarding the whole, the three Chiefs and their counsellors send representatives to attend a general council.

The Chief must always be a member of that tribe to which he belongs, but is not chosen by his own tribe, but by representatives of the other two tribes. The latter, with their representatives, meet at an appointed place, then move on in procession with singing, towards where the election is to take place.
Ch. X. Political Constitution of the Indian Nations.

The two Chiefs having entered the council-house at the east-end, and seated themselves around two or three fires, the inhabitants of the town bid them welcome; after which, one of the Chiefs opens the business by explaining the aim of their meeting, and mentioning the name of the Chief elected. He then proceeds in a singing tone, "We wipe the tears off your eyes, clear your ears and throats, remove all sorrow and mourning on account of the death of the late Chief from your heart, and comfort you," after which he solemnly declares the Chief elected to be Chief of the tribe, and places him upon the seat of his predecessor. He then exhorts the young people to be obedient to their new Chief, whenever he shall require their attendance, confirms his speech with two belts, and receives a solemn promise from the young people, that they will fulfill their duty. He likewise addresses the wife of the new Chief, who is attended by several women, and admonishes her, as the representative of her whole sex, to be obedient and subject to the new Chief, which she promises in the name of all the women. Finally he lays before the new Chief the duties of his office; regarding the preservation or re-establishment of peace; admonishing him not to meddle with affairs of war, and to keep his people from its continual attendance to the welfare of his nation, and willingly to bear their remonstrances, if he should commit a fault. The new Chief promises to act in strict conformity to these injunctions. All these speeches are sung, and confirmed by belts. Thus the new Chief enters upon his office, by consent of the whole nation, and whoever obtains the office of Chief in any other way, is not regarded.

A Chief, duly elected, and solemnly invested with his office, is beloved and respected by his people, who safely confide in his measures. If he is intelligent and skilful enough to gain the esteem and affection of the Captains and the people, the former support his authority, and assist him in every possible way. A Captain is the Chief's right hand. He must undertake every thing committed to him by the Chief, even at the hazard of his life, for his duty as Captain requires this of him. But if he is either wounded or killed by the enemy, the whole nation joins in revenging his death.

But a Chief ought above all things to secure the good-will of his counsellors, for without their assistance he becomes a mere cypher. The Chief Netawatwees used to lay all affairs of state before his counsellors for their consideration, without telling them his own sentiments. When they gave him their opinion, he either approved of it, or slated his objections and amendment; always alleging the reasons of his disapprobation. Thus he kept them alive, and maintained great respect.

The rich are likewise considered as principal supporters of the Chiefs, as they can furnish them with wampum upon an emergency. Upon extraordinary occasions, a voluntary contribution of wampum is made by the whole tribe of nation. The usual expenses are defrayed from the treasury cheif of the council, which is never suffered to be empty. Both this and the archives of the council are under the care of the Chief.

A Chief is indeed empowered and obliged, with the advice of his counsellors, to keep good order amongst his tribe, and to decide in all quarrels and disputes; but he dare not venture to command, compel, or punish any one, as in that case he would immediately be forsoken by the whole tribe. Every word that looks like a command is immediately rejected with contempt by an Indian, proud of his liberty. The Chief must endeavour to rule over his people merely by calm reasoning and friendly exhortations. Sometimes he cannot succeed, even with the best intentions, and must have recourse to artifice. He is even then not confide together in his counsellors. He is therefore cautious, and endeavours to gain by flow degrees, what cannot be effected at once. The Chiefs are in general friendly, courteous, hospitable, affable men, kind to all, and their house is open to every Indian. Even strangers, who come on business put up in the Chief's house, and are accommodated with the best

The ambassadors of other nations always speak of the Chief, but if their number is too great, they may not be allowed to separate their house, and provided with every thing they require. The Chief is empowered to prevent proceeding from the use of spirituous liquors, and their importation, but they are seldom either insensible enough to do their duty in this respect, or capable of sobriety. The duty of the Chief is that of keeping the people from any unnecessary dispersion. But if he loved nor respected, the Indians appear like a shepherd. Without proof for his own maintenance, for no one is disposed to supply his wants. But as he has so many houses, who require a great quantity of provisions and other Indians furnish him with game, he affords his wife in her plantations. The Chief intends to pay a visit to another Chief, and he sends his message: "Smoke, as I smoke, and look towards my dwelling, then thou shalt come towards thee on such a day." The pal duty of the first Chief of the Delawares is the peace and covenants made between them and the Indian nations and the Europeans. He is on a kind of correspondence with them, with whom he has acquaintance with their disposition towards them. He also sends embassies, but generally with the consent of the two other Chiefs. If the Europeans should disagreeable message, the Chief's answer will not be explained, and against the law of the land. The Chief is admonished by his people; but but for any misdemeanor, which may prove injurious to the commonwealth; for instance, if he should suffer the people to commit outrages, or murders, which may be laid to the charge of the whole nation, and involve them in a war or it he should not do everything to prevent it in the first instance; he is reprimanded by the two other Chiefs, with a solemn ceremony of solemnity used at his installation, and must promise to fulfil his duty better for the future. If he continues to neglect it, they all forswear him, and his power is at an end.

The strings and belts of wampum, and the great for which were in possession of the Chief by virtue of his office, are carefully preferred by the council after his death, until a new Chief is appointed.

The sons of Chiefs cannot inherit their father's dignity being considered as strangers on account of their mother but a grandchild, great-grandchild, or nephew, may succeed him. In general, some person, who lived in intimacy with the deceased Chief, and is well acquainted with the affairs of the state, is chosen his successor; and among the Iowas this is law. But with the Chippewas, the son of Chief has a legal right to succeed his father.

Affairs of importance are always laid before the council and without its consent, no proposal can be put into execution. The council-house is either the house of the Chief which is commonly large and roomy, or a building erected for that purpose. The counsellors are called together by servant, and each sits down upon the ground, around a fire, provided with pipe and tobacco. Women are admitted to the council, and a few only are allowed to present to hand the victuals and keep up the fire, which is esteemed a great honor. Provisions must always be in place in the council-house; for eating and deliberating take turns. Above all, the strings and belts of wampum must placed in due order, for whatever is said without being confirmed by them, is vain, and without effect. They are used to this custom, that when they communicate the ten of a message, merely in private conversation, they cannot do it without something in their hands, either a strap, a thud, or a straw.
Ch. X. Political Constitution of the Indian Nations.

Cool deliberation always precedes a speech in the council. The principal Chief opens the debate by a speech, setting forth the subjects, upon which he defers the advice and opinion of the Council, in plain and explicit terms, commonly strongly expressed, but now and then in a more disguised manner. These speeches are always in a figurative style. For instance, if they wish to express the re-establishment of peace between two nations, they say: "We make a road, extending above five hundred miles through the wood; we cut out the thorns and bushes, remove all the trees, rocks, and stones out of the way, transplant the mountains, plow the road with sand, and make every thing so clear and light, that one nation may look towards the other without any interruption." Each counsellor has full liberty to utter his sentiments without restraint, and having made his speech, he sits down. The solemn speeches of the Delawares are characterized by much animation, and a pleasing flow of words. The behavior of the speakers is perfectly consistent with the dignity of the assembly, and the importance of the subject. No one interrupts the speaker, but all sit silent and attentive as if engaged in an act of devotion. No stranger can be present at their councils, without a solemnity of respect.

When all have spoken, one of them is called upon to sum up the principal parts of the different speeches, in a concise manner. This is done extempore, and the necessary amendments proposed, every subject being carefully brought into a short and comprehensive a point of view as possible.

No guests are admitted to any consultation, if the early promulgation of it might lead to doubtful consequences. Otherwise every one may be present as a hearer; but the women must stand without.

If a Chief thinks it unsafe to mention from what quarter he has received the message under consideration, he says, that that some one rote out of the ground, as he was sitting by the fire at night, who, delivering a string or belt of war pom, had whisper’d into his ear, and then retired again in the earth.

In general the Chief does not speak in council, but has his own speaker, to whom he communicates his sentiments, and leaves him to explicate upon them. The speaker has seldom the time to prepare or arrange his subject, the different heads being only briefly named, or left for him to collect from the conversation of the Chiefs. He must then be able to quicken the whole in a speech, well arranged and uniting rupted, which requires a clear and open understanding; faithful memory, experience in the affairs of the state, knowledge of the figurative language, and of the terms pecu lar to their mode of delivery.

The Indian speakers aspire to a certain elegance of expres sion in their public speeches, which is directed more the rules of ancient custom, than those of oratory. You men, defined for this office, are admitted as hearers in council, and to a familiar intercourse with the Chiefs, as instruct them faithfully.

They are first employed as ambassadors, to give them opportunit of exciting themselves, in speaking in pub-still they are qualified to speak forth as speakers in cou-Though in affairs of the whole nation, nothing can be done without the consent of the council, yet even then the per cannot be compelled by force to do any thing against in cination. For though the council should determine ut something of great advantage to the tribe or nation, yet cant a member has full liberty to assent in putting it into execu or not.

The Delawares are celebrated for their courage, peace disposition, and powerful alliances. For almost all the nations living in their neighborhood are in league with them, especially the Mahikan, Shawanoef, Cherokeees, Twees, Wawiahtanas, Kikapus, Mohkos, Tukachich, Chippeways, Ottawas, Putewoatamen, and Kaakaskias.

thee call the Delawares, Grandfather. The Delawares have never been at war with any of them, excepting the Cherokees, as above mentioned, and have even maintained their friendship with the warlike Hurons. Their political views seem to center in an endeavour to gain and preserve the good-will and friendship of other nations. They treat all strange Indian visitors with great honor and hospitality, that they may return with a proper impression of their good character. Of late years they have amazingly increased their reputation, through the good management of their late Chief Niatawnees. This wise man spared no pains to conciliate the affections of all his neighbors. He sent frequent embassies to his grandchildren, admonishing them to keep peace, and proved in truth, a wise grandfather to them.

Thus much of the Delawares. We will add a few remarks concerning the Iroquois or Six Nations.

An Iroquois has such an exalted idea of his greatness and liberty; that he will admit of no equal in rank, but the king of England, he being a sovereign, and the English in general, only subjects. However, the English governors frequently take the liberty of addressing the Chiefs of the Iroquois in their public transactions to this effect: "We and you are brothers, but the king of England is our and your father;" and they condescend to put up with it.

The chief passion of the Iroquois is for war, to which they are trained up from their infancy. There are few Indian nations, excepting the Hochelaga, living at a great distance, against whom they have not carried on very cruel wars, and of long continuance. Ever since the year 1650, they have had frequent wars with the French.

The political constitution of the Six Nations nearly resembles that of a republic. Each of them is independent of the other, or, as they express it, have their own fire, around which their Chiefs, Captains, and Counsellors assemblé, to take the particular concerns of their nation into deliberation. But they have a large common fire, burning at Onondago, to to which the Great Council, consisting of all the Chiefs of the Six Nations, resort.

In the year 1735, August Gottlieb Spangenberg, a bishop of the United Brethren, spent several weeks in Onondago, and frequently attended the great council. The council house was built of bark. On each side six seats were placed, each containing six persons. No one was admitted beside the members of the council, except a few, who were particularly honored. If one rote to speak, all the rest sat in profound silence, smoking their pipes. The speaker uttered his words in a singing tone, always rising a few notes at the close of each sentence. Whatever was speaking to the council, was confirmed by all with the word "Ne," or "As.

And at the end of each speech, the whole company joined in applauding the speaker by calling "Hob." At noon, two men entered, bearing a large kettle filled with meat, upon a pole across their shoulders, which was first presented to the guests. A large wooden ladle, as broad and deep as a common bowl, hung with a hook to the side of the kettle, with which every one might at once help himself to as much as he could eat. When the guests had eaten their fill, they begged the counsellors to do the same. The whole was conducted in a very decent and quiet manner. Indeed now and then one or the other would lie flat upon his back to rest himself, and sometimes they would stop, joke, and laugh heartily.

All public business between any nation and the Iroquois, must be brought to the great fire in Onondago. To attempt to gain over, or bribe one or the other member of council, would be highly dangerous to both parties. Bribes would raise the jealousy of the whole assembly. If presents are made, they must be divided among all in equal shares. This is an inviolable article of their confederacy, the transgression of which would weaken their union. As they know that their whole strength lies in harmony, they punish every thing tending to subvert it with the greatest severity. Thus bribery hilarity avails as little as a threat. In general their government is severe, but founded upon good principles. They have likewise agents amongst other nations, to watch over their own interest.

The Six Nations made themselves so respected by the English and French, that these two nations vie with each other in seeking and renewing their alliance with them. The Indians call a treaty of peace and its confirmation, polishing the chain of friendship, taking the rust off, and making it bright and shining. Both nations received their deputies with great pomp and solemnity, and made them rich presents. The English on such occasions frequently bought large tracts of land from them, and secured the purchase by a deed of sale, signed by the Chiefs of the Iroquois in the Indian manner. All these transactions were public, and every one was admitted. When the English governor made any proposal, deferring the opinion of the Indians, their usual answer was: "We have comprehended the meaning of our "brother, the governor; we will now confer it among our "sires, and when our answer is ready, notice shall be given "to the governor, that we may meet again." If they accepted of the terms, the payment agreed upon was delivered to them in exchange for the deed of sale. This consisted chiefly in a certain quantity of Spanish dollars, besides which, a present was added of blankets, guns, powder and shot, hatchets, knives, looking-glasses, colors, &c. These articles were divided among the Six Nations, so that each received a proportionate part, which was afterwards distributed to the people by their respective Chiefs.

The Iroquois are particularly attentive to the education of young people for the future government of the state; and for this purpose admit a young boy, generally the nephew of the principal Chief, to the council and solemn feast following it, and even to the feast given by the English governor.

Each nation has its principal, and each tribe its particular Chief. The Iroquois require a Chief to be, if not the best, at least, a very skilful hunter, and to be liberal of his gain. He must also be a good physician, and able to advise: affix the sick in every circumstance. It is his duty to care of orphans, to harbor strangers, and to keep good order in the town. But as he has no more power of compulsion than a Delaware Chief, he must keep up his reputation by prudent, courteous, and winning behavior.

Most of the nations, living beyond the United States, are more or less connected with the Iroquois. Some, called brothers, as the Hurons; others cousins, which implicates the degree of subordination. From the latter, they expect in and then a tribute of wampum; they point out the place their dwelling, and even dispose of their land at pleasurable prices. They even once fold a piece of land, formerly belonging to the Delawares. The latter having never been conquered by the Iroquois, refused to agree to the bargain, and would not quit their dwellings; upon which the Iroquois threatened to murder them all, if they remained upon it, and thus drove them away by force. They willingly permit their cousins dwell upon their land, and amongst them, but they are not admitted members either of the great or special council. When an Indian of the Six Nations goes to war, and meets with a cousin, he makes him carry his bundle. This is therefore more feared than beloved by their neighbors.

In the year 1756, ten nations living west of Philadelphia entered into an alliance against the Iroquois. They were supported by the French, then at war with the English. A peace was concluded between the two latter powers they still kept up their confederacy, and have probably beenfenced the power and influence of the Iroquois.

The political constitution of the Mahikans, Shawano, Cherokees, Hurons, and others, resembles a great measure that of the Delawares.
Ch. XI. Indian Manner of making War.

In the late war between Great Britain and her Colonies, most of the Indians took part with the English. The consequence was, that in the year 1779, the Iroquois were entirely driven from their country by the troops of the Congress. Their towns were all destroyed, and they thus experienced a fate which probably had never before befallen them.

---

CHAPTER XI.

War among the Indians, and Ceremonies attending the Establishment of Peace.

According to the most authentic testimony of the oldest Indians, their wars were formerly carried on with much greater fury, and lasted much longer, than in the present times. Some were even hereditary. The ruins of former towns are still visible, and several mounds of earth show evident proofs that they were raised by men. They were hollow, having an opening at the top, by which the Indians let down their women and children, whenever an enemy approached, and placing themselves around, defended them vigorously. For this purpose they placed a number of stones and blocks on the top of the mound, which they rolled down against the assailants. On these occasions great numbers of both parties were killed, and generally buried together in one large hole, and covered with earth. These graves are still visible in many places, and their antiquity may be known by the large trees which grow upon them.

The offensive weapons formerly in use were bows, arrows, and clubs. The latter were made of the hardest wood, not quite the length of a man's arm, and very heavy, with a large round round knob at one end. Their weapon of defence was shield made of the tough hide of a buffalo, on the co:
cave side of which they received the arrows and darts the enemy, but this is now entirely laid aside by the Del-wares and Iroquois, though they still use bows, arrows, ar clubs of war. They now arm the knobs of their chll with nails and pieces of iron. They formerly ufed gur merely for pleasure on festiva days, but now they a become excellent marksmen, both in war and hunting When they attack an enemy, they take several balls in the mouths, ready to load again, or hang them in a pouch roun t heir necks. They likewise make ufe of an hatchet and lot knife.

The army both of the Delawares and Iroquois consists all their young men, among whom there are even boys fifteen. The warriors are under the command of the ca tails, especially in times of war, and do nothing witho their consent. They neither leave the troop, nor go i hunting, and as they know that their life and honor in great measure depends upon the prudent conduct of th captain, they obey him with pleasure.

A Captain among the Indians, is what we should call commander or general. He has several subordinate office in proportion to the number of troops under his commar
The rank of Captain is neither elective nor hereditary.
T
first occasion to this appointment is generally a dream, en in life, which a young man or his friends interpret as definy for the office of Captain. He therefore endeavo attain to the necessary qualifications for this dignity, a prove his prowess by feats of valor. The Indians reck prudence, cunning, resolution, bravery, undauntednes, e specially good fortune, to be the qualifications, witho which no one can aspire to so distinguished an office. If leader, who has not yet the rank of Captain, has the go fortune, not to lose a man of his troop in fix or seven engas ments, and to bring prisoners and trophies of victory to t camp; he is declared a Captain without further ceremor

But if he loses men, and cannot replace them with prisoners; his authority is at an end, and he dare not think of the office. If an Indian loses his home, or one of his近邻 in war, whom he highly valued, he gives an hatchet and piece of wampum to a leader, who wishes to become a Captain, and directs him to go and take a prisoner, to supply the part of the deceased, and comfort the afflicted family. If he is fortunate in his exploit, he immediately hangs the belt round the prisoner's neck to denote, that he shall be received into a family, and upon delivering him over to his employer, receives the belt as a reward, or token of remembrance of the valorous deed which paved his way to the rank of Captain. But if he is unsuccessful, his attempt is considered as the temerity of an unskilful fellow, and he cannot hope for the appointment. Thus, as good fortune must chiefly decide in this promotion, there are not many Captains. There are however a few in each tribe.

To begin war is called by the Indians, to lift up the hatchet. They always pretend to have the most just and important reasons for it; among which, they chiefly urge the necessity of revenging injuries done to the nation: but the honor of being distinguished as great warriors, is no small motive. This operates principally with the Iroquois, for they know of no greater merit than to kill or take a great number of enemies. The Captains are capable of preserving these two leading principles, on the minds of their people, with all the force of warlike eloquence:—"The bones of your murdered countrymen," say they, "lie uncovered; they demand revenge at our hands, and it is our duty to obey them: Their spirits loudly call upon us, and we must satisfy them. Still greater spirits, watching over our honor, inspire us with a resolution to go in pursuit of the murderers of our brethren. Let us go and devour them! Do not sit inactive! Follow the impulse of your heroic valor! Anoint your hair! Paint your faces! Fill your quivers! Make the woods echo with your voices! Comfort the spirits of the deceased, and revenge their blood!"
"blood!" &c.—Inflamed by such exhortations, they seize their arms, found the war-whoop, and pant with impatience to imbrue their hands in the blood of their enemies, and then act together against their common enemy, as if once foul inspired them.

If a whole nation is going to engage in a war, their previous considerations are circumspect and slow, and they carefully weigh all the proposals made, comparing the probable advantages or disadvantages that may accrue to the State.

A Chief cannot begin a war without the consent of his Captains: nor can he accept of a war-belt, but under the condition of its being considered by the Captains. He must endeavour to preserve peace to the utmost of his power. But if the Captains are unanimous in declaring war, he is obliged, as it were, to deliver the care of his people, for the present, into their hands, and to lay down his office. His influence tends greatly either to prevent or encourage the commencement of a war. For the Indians believe, a war cannot be successful without the consent of the Chief and the Captains' endeavour, on that account, to live in harmony with him.

If war is determined on, and they wish to ensure the alliance of any nation in league with them, they notify it sending a piece of tobacco, or by an embassy. By the they intend, that the Captains shall smoke their pipes consider seriously, whether they will take share in the war or not. The embassy is entrusted to a Captain, who carries a belt of wampum, upon which the aim of the embassy is described by certain figures, and an hatchet with a red hand. Having previously informed the Chief of his commission, proceeds to lay it before the council: he first lays the hatchet down upon the ground, and then delivers a long speech holding the war-belt in his hand. He closes his address, desiring them to lift up the hatchet, and delivering his blessing. If this is complied with, nothing more is said, and this is considered as a solemn promise to lend every assistance.
Indian Manner of making War.

Iheth the hatchet is lifted up, nor the belt accepted, atidore concludes, that the nation chuses to remain and returns home. Some Indians declare war, by red hatchet to the nation they intend to attack. a dangerous commissiou, and frequently attended death of the messenger. The nation challenged in ner is often so infinitely enraged, that, without their Captains, a small party sets out to wield a hatchet, or with a red lance or dart to pierce the heart of man belonging to the nation that sent the chal f they wish to provoke their enemy to the last deisfigure the body of the slain, as if they would they do not look upon them as men. But the and Delawares, and the nations connected with not declare war by a formal message; but rather a small party, seize the first man they meet, belong- nation they intend to engage, kill and scalp him; re his head with an hatchet, which they leave in it, rar-club, painted red, upon the body of the victim. formal challenge; in consequence of which, a Capt e insulted party takes up the weapons of the mur-d hastens into their country to be revenged upon he returns with a scalp, he thinks he has avenged f of his own nation.

Preparations for war are soon made: they do not h baggage; a bundle of citron, as described above, of pounded Indian corn and maple sugar, is all the they want. Besides this, the Captains and others befand to preserve themselves from stab and thot. ar 1774, the Shawanoose carried their war-befon le, among the ranks, in the battle they fought with; people: but the befon-bearer himself was thot; Indian army routed, and the befon became a prey nquerors.

The most necessary preparations for war, is to paint to red and black; for the most horrid appearance is sight the greatest ornament. Some Captains fast, L. and attend to their dreams, with a view to gain intel-li of the event of the war. The night previous to the mathe army is spent in feasting, at which the Chiefs arfent; either a hog, or a couple of dogs are killed.
flsh, in particular, is said to inspire them with the true of war: even women have been seen to partake of this and to eat dog's flesh with great greediness. Now an warrior is inclined to make a solemn declaration of bi like inclination: he holds up a piece of dog's flesh in f all present, and devours it, pronouncing these words: "w " will I devour my enemies!" After the feast, the Capt-all his people begin the war-dance, and continue till day-when they are quite hoarse and weary. They generally all together, and each in his turn takes the head of the hog hand. Spectators are admitted, and may even join
. Then the Captain marches through the town, people following in a single row. When they reach th of the street, they fire their pieces, and the Captain the war-long. As both their friends and the wom-erally accompany them to the first night's encampthey halt about two or three miles from the town, dan war-dance once more, and the day following begin march.
They have commonly a long and tedious march in enemies land, and their provisions are soon exhausted.
are therefore obliged to spend some days in hunting, camp is formed without any regularity, and they pitch tents, as each finds most convenient. As long as th in a country where they fear no attack, they take no p tion. They dig into the woods to hunt; but return place of rendezvous exactly to the time appointed. T has any precedence during the march, not even the C They divide their provisions in equal shares, even if man should get only one morsel of bread or meat.

Sometimes they set out in small parties of ten or t in company, that they may not suffer so much for w provisions. The Captain is very attentive to every m his troop, being answerable for all. If but a few are weary, he orders all to halt, till they have recovered. The chief excellence of a Captain consists in knowing how to form an attack, so as to kill or take many enemies, and lose none, or but a few of his own men. The Indian warriors profess astonishing perseverance and patience, encounter incredible dangers, and live upon the most mean fare. For as soon as they enter the enemies country, they can hunt no longer, for fear of being betrayed, and though they have always provisions for some days, yet being frequently under the necessity of hiding themselves for fear. I weeks in the woods, before they can venture to attack the enemy, they suffer incredibly from hunger and other inconveniences. Before they make an attack, their chief concern is to reconnoitre every part of the country. With this view they dig holes in the ground, preferably in a hillock, covered with mud, in which they keep a small charcoal fire, from which they watch the motions of the enemy, unobserved. If they seek a prisoner or a scalp, they venture even in the day-time to put their design in execution. They crouch behind some thorny tree, and creep flyly around the item, so as not to be received by a passenger. As soon as he has turned his back, they kill him either with one shot, or leaping upon him, cut in down with their hatchets. In either case they seldom miss their aim. They then retire precipitately, thinking themselves well rewarded, even with one scalp only, for all noble, distresses, and danger sustained on the march. But in case of an attack upon a whole family, or town, they prefer the night, when their enemies are in profound sleep. During the day they behave with the greatest caution, not even whispering to each other, but explaining their meaning only by signs and looks, creeping about upon all fours to gain intelligence. When the night fixed for the attack sets in, they all lie flat upon the ground in perfect silence, waiting the first sign given by the Captain, upon which they creep along till within gun-shot of their enemy. Upon a second sign given, they leap up all together, discharge their their pieces, and then fall upon their enemies with hatchets and clubs. They kill, scalp, and take prisoners as many as they can find; set fire to the houses, and never lay a finger on plunder. Having thus obtained their aim, they fly back with the utmost speed into the woods, to which they have alreadymarked the nearest road, and take no rest till they think themselves safe. To avoid being pursued, they disguise their foot-marks as much as possible, as they would easily be traced by Indians. But if, in spite of all their caution they are closely pursued, they kill the prisoners, scalp the and disperse in the woods, in order finely to escape into their own country with more ease. They generally suffer excessive hunger and fatigue by the way, living upon the bark of trees, wild herbs and roots.

Even in open war, they think it more honorable to fight the enemy by stratagem than by combat. They examine their situation, and if they find that a surprise or ambush would expose them to danger, they retire. But if they feel secure, they lurk behind trees, hedges, or rocks, fire up the unwary foe, and hide themselves again. The Europeans were unacquainted with this mode of fighting, suffered greatly it in former times.

The cruelty of victorious Indians is without bounds: when they have quenched their thirst for blood, they return to their native country. The wounded are treated with great tenderness, and the means applied seldom fail in restoring them. Those who are dangerously wounded, are carried the rest, and none left to perish, without the greatest necessity. They even carry off their dead, or at least their scalps, left that should fall into the hands of their enemies: which makes it hard to determine how many have been killed in this way.

All the slain of the enemies are, if possible, scalped. Though these operations take place on the neck of the victim, cutting hair with the left hand, and twisting it very tight together, in order to separate the skin from the head. Then they cut it all round with a sharp knife, and tear it off. This operation was performed with a view to make it difficult for the enemy to identify their relations, and for the same reason they never give the names of their enemies.
Indian Manner of making War.

This is often performed in a minute, and under certain circumstances is fatal, but not always. The scalp is painted red, placed upon a red pole in token of victory, to the great satisfaction of the whole nation, and carefully preserved in memory of their courage and prowess, in avenging the cause of their country.

They like to carry off their prisoners alive, but bound, till they are no more in fear of their pursuers. In the night they are fastened to the ground, with their arms, legs, and necks bound to large stakes, and for greater security, a cord passes from them to a free Indian, who immediately awakes if they attempt to move. Yet, notwithstanding these precautions, they sometimes escape. The European prisoners are immediately born after the manner of the Indians, and their heads and faces painted red, so as hardly to be distinguished from the Indians themselves. If any dispute arises between two warriors about a prisoner, he is immediately killed, to put an end to it.

Prisoners are not ill treated, as long as they are in the hands of the warriors, but fare with them alike. But they have so much the more to suffer in the towns of the vicious people. The warriors, upon their approach to their own country, repeat the death-whoop, according to the number of scalps, trophies, or prisoners in their possession. Upon this signal, men, women, and children ran out to meet them, placing themselves in two rows, the warriors step forward into the midst, with the scalps of the prisoners, and force the latter to dance for the amusement of the spectators. An house or potl is then thrown in the village, to which they are ordered to go. As soon as they set out, the people begin to strike at them with sticks, clubs, hatchets, or their fists. If they gain the house or potl, though ever so bruised and bloody, they are perfectly safe. Indians acquainted with this barbarous custom, escape great part of these cruelties, by running towards the mark with all their might. Female prisoners are frequently removed by the women, who take them between their ranks and carry them to the town.
Indian Manner of making War.

The warriors then take good care of their prisoner and dress their wounds, and when their meals are over the prisoners first, not from compulsion, but it may look well, and do honor to the triumph they in passing through all the towns of their nation, till arrive at their own home.

Before the warriors proceed, the prisoners are led the amusement of the inhabitants. They often fit bells, or deer-claws, to the feet of one of them, a rattle during the dance, presenting him with a p small stick. He takes as many as he pleases, and the rest. These determine the number of short dance to perform; which he does with great alacrity, to the of a calabash filled with small stones, and marking After each round, he relates one of his heroic deeds, livers a tick. Thus he continues to dance and stories, till all his sticks are spent. Though the sp should not understand his language, yet they guess his by his looks and gestures. Sometimes the p are compelled to sing the death-song, which is as I go to death, and shall suffer great torture; but endure the greatest torments inflicted by my enem becoming courage. I will die like a valiant man, to those heroes, who have died in the same This ceremony is performed in every town, through wh mutt pafs. When they at length arrive at the residen conqueror, many of the prisoners are received into the to supply the places of the slain, or of relations is ceased, and are immediately considered as member nation. Without this custom, many Indian tribes have been exterminated long ago. But their true c suffers a visible change by the naturalization of foreign The new inhabitant meets with the best treatm wounds are dressed, and he is well clothed. I food in the house is given him, and all the fami gaged in comforting and encouraging him. Female are generally given to men, and well treated: boys are either received into families, as servants, or fold to the Europeans. If prisoners, thus admitted into families, behave well, they have every thing they want, nor are they put to much labor, which in general is little regarded by an Indian. But if they run away, and are taken, their lives are in danger. Even the nation to whom the runaways belong, will not always receive them, but treat them as ungrateful beings; they therefore turn out vagrants, and infest the woods. Indian names are given to European prisoners, upon their reception into Indian families, to perpetuate the memory of the most beloved among the slain or deceased. Many of them find the manner of living among the Indians so well suited to their inclinations, that upon an exchange of prisoners being made, they refuse to return to their own country. But should the pardoned stranger lose the good-will of the widow of the deceased, she soon puts him to death, that he may become servant to her first husband in the land of spirits.
Ch. XI. Indian Manner of making War. 151

Those unhappy prisoners who are condemned to die, may sooner or later expect to suffer the most excruciating tortures, and a lingering death. The Indians flock to these executions from all parts, as to some great solemnity, with a view to gratify their cruel and revengeful disposition. The poor victim is fastened naked to a stake, placed at some distance from a large fire. His body is sometimes painted black, and his head ornamented with raven feathers. One plucks his nails out by the roots, another bites one of his fingers off, thrusting it into his tobacco-pipe, which he offers to the sufferer to smoke. Others crush his fingers and toes between stones, or scourch his skin with red-hot irons, or torches. Some with their knives cut pieces from his body, rubbing salt into the raw flesh. Then they deitil, with a view to prolong his tortures, which sometimes continue three or four days. Sometimes they compel him to dance round the stake, mangled and burnt as he is, tied by a short rope. Should he happen to cry or show any sign of pain, he is despoiled and detrified by his tormentors; but if he remains unconcerned, concerned, his bravery is extolled. At length, being tied insensible by excess of pain, an end is put to his life by a stroke of the tomahawk, and the mangled body thrown into the fire.

This inhuman method of treating captives is partly in use among the Iroquois and Shawanoes; and the latter are but lately given several horrid proofs of their cruelty. Indian warriors commonly bear the most dreadful torments, without any marks of concern, and die without daunted, singing the great deeds done by them to their enemies with provoking defiance. Some endeavor still more to enrage their tormentors by their valediction, that they may the sooner dispatch them.

Now and then a condemned prisoner is released from captivity. Some years ago, a young Shawanoes Indian woman was rescued by the Cherokees, and condemned to die. He was tied to the stake, and every preparation made for his execution, when a Cherokee woman arrived with a present of goods, and throwing them down at the feet of the terrified prisoner, begged for his release on the pretext that she was a widow, and would adopt the captive as her son. Her request was granted, the captive was delivered over to her, and on the same day was lowered and the village was well dresses. His protection so much upon his fidelity and devotedness to her, that he submitted him to visit his family and friends in his own home. He proved faithful, and no persuasions and entreaties of relations could prevail upon him to forsake her. It is instances of their refusing the most considerable offers to release a condemned captive from their grasp that the English merchants offered good amount of several hundred dollars, as a ransom for the captive, without any effect.

It has been frequently said that the savages despise prisoners. It may indeed have been a custom now with some; and some converted Indians have of accord confessed to our missionaries, that they had but it is not general. The Delawares and Iroquois never so do it. Formerly they have been known in the height of their fury to tear an enemy's heart out of his body, and devour it raw; but at present this is seldom or never practised.

When one Indian nation wishes to persuade another to join in a war against an Indian or European enemy, they send a captive to that nation, with these words, "We send you this prisoner, to make some broth," and frequently gain their aim. The prisoner is not devoured, but executed without mercy.

Since the Delawares and Iroquois have ventured to make war with the Europeans, their wars among each other have been less frequent. With the white people they gain greater advantages, take more prisoners, and more scalps, and can soon make peace with them, than with the Indians.

At present almost all Indian nations join in a war against the white people.

Even if a nation should remain neutral, some of the common people will not rest satisfied, but join the warvion. This was the case in the war between England and her colonies. The Delaware Chiefs had in the beginning resolved to be neutral, and exhorted their people daily, not to suffer themselves to be perfused to take share in the war.
The nation in general remained firm in this resolution, and neither entreaties nor threats could prevail upon the Chiefs to depart from it. Yet several Delaware Indians went to join the army.

The Indians need not much provocation to begin a war with the white peoples; a trifling occurrence may easily furnish a pretence. They frequently first determine upon war, and then wait a convenient opportunity, to find reasons for it:
now are they much at a loss to find them.

It has occasioned much surprize, that notwithstanding the prevailing fear of the Six Nations, left the Europeans should become too powerful, they have told them one tract of land after the other. Some thought it was done, merely for the fake of the presents offered by the purchasers. But experience has shown, that this selling of land proved the best pretense for a war. For when the white people had settled upon the purchased territory, they drove them away again. They have frequently continued their hostilities against the white people even during the settling of the peace, or renewed them soon after. In such a critical juncture, the Europeans cannot sufficiently guard against the Indians, especially against the Iroquois. They will treat a white person, who is ignorant of their designs, with all apparent civility, and give him victuals and drink, but before he is aware, cleave his skull with an hatchet.

Some years before the war broke out between England and her colonies, the Shawanoes began to be very troublesome and some white people were obliged to fly the country. On of them separating himself from his companions, got among a party of Iroquois, in sight of a Delaware town, who gave him victuals, and then murdered him. The character of the Delawares is not so treacherous. If they once shah hands with a white man, and speak friendly to him; he may judge himself safe, and trust their fidelity.

In times of war, the Indians generally fall first upon the defenceless farmers, and thus spread terror and dread on the whole neighborhood, the inhabitants of which, immediately forsaking their houses and plantations, cattle and furniture, fly for their lives. They make no distinction between the different European nations, but exert their cruelty upon all, without respect to innocence, age, or sex. In war with Europeans, every human being with a white ski is considered an enemy. A messenger of peace must not expect to be treated according to the rights of nations, to which his person is rendered sacred. They seldom pard a white man, if he even lays down his arms, and submi himself a prisoner. Once they formed a small fort, an rook between forty and fifty Europeans, men, women, and children, without losing a man. This easy victory ought to have inspired them with lenity, but they murdered the greatest part of them in cool blood, dashing even the childr to pieces against the trees. The Iroquois have more especially been guilty of these barbarities.
CH. XI. Indian Manners of Making Peace. 155

They never make peace till compelled by necessity. But as soon as terms of peace are proposed, the Captains lay down their office, and deliver the government of the state into the hands of the Chiefs. A Captain has no more right to conclude a peace, than a Chief to begin war. If peace is offered to a Captain, he can give no other answer than that he will mention the proposal to the Chief; for, as a warrior, he cannot make peace. If the Chief inclines to peace, he exerts his power again, takes the hatchet out of the hands of the Captain, and desires him to sit down; that is, to make a truce. The latter is then obliged to cease from all hostilities, and to keep his men quiet. But the Chief, knowing that this state of inactivity is not agreeable to the Captain, generally chuses him to be the deputy at the ensuing treaty. This is most willingly accepted, for the Captain acquires by this commission an accession of honor and respect.

An embassy of peace, as in general every other embassy, is never committed to one man only. Two or more are always nominated. Sometimes fifteen or twenty persons are chosen ambassadors, according to the strength of the nation in treaty with the other. But one of them is appointed head of the embassy, and it is he that fettes the preliminaries, makes speeches, and delivers the firings and belts of wampum. His companions attend in silence, and now and then reminding him in case he should forget any part of his commission.

Such an ambassador must not only be an intelligent man, nimerally respected, but he ought to posses great strength of body to endure the fatigue connected with his employ. When he receives his commission in council assembled, every article to be explained to the other party is dictated to him more than once, and he is called upon to repeat it over and over again, till he can pronounce it without hesitation.

When
When a speedy peace is required, the ambassadors travel day and night, which they easily do, with rep the road, as they are able, even in a dark night, to drift the most obscure path through the woods, hardly difi by an European eye.

Such an embassy carries the pipe of peace before answering to our white flag of truce, and the respect to it is such, that an insult offered to the bearer is a crime of the most heinous kind, which the Great will surely revenge. This pipe is used only in making or settling alliances. The French call it colonnet, and commonly a large head of red marble, three inches dee fix or eight inches wide. But the red color being the of war, it is daubed over with white clay, or chalk. pipe is made of hard black wood, four foot long, and round with a fine riband, neatly decorated with white by the women, who endeavour to display their art best advantage. Sometimes ornaments are added, as porcupine quills, with green, yellow, and white feathers.

The ambassadors begin their songs and dances, upon approach to the town of the opposite party, and are ti vited to the dwelling of the head-Chief, where they li conveniently, as long as the negotiations last.

The meeting is opened by the head-Chief or Pre who smokes for a short time out of the pipe of peace it has been devoutly turned towards the heavens and this ceremony is of such importance, that no En governor or ambassador can make peace with the J without it.

Afterwards the pipe is handed about among all the ambassadors and members of the council, when each takes it up very cautiously, and smokes for a short This ceremony being performed, the first man of the basy or speaker opens his commission, commonly in the pompous Indian style. He does not appear inclined to any submission, though his nation is perhaps driven brink of ruin. All his oratory is displayed to convince the opposite party that it is their interest, not only to make a true, but to establish a lasting peace. The speaker ought to be well acquainted with every thing relating both to the state of his own people, and to that of the other nations; and to be able to give every one the title due to him. He begins by delivering a string or belt of wampom, and his first address is commonly as follows: "Brother (Grandson, Father, &c.) I bring this string of wampom, to clear your eyes, that they may see keenly; to clear your ears, that they may hear well; and with it I smooth your throat, that my words may glide down easily; for I do not come in vain, &c." He then propounds the main subjects of his discourse, in short sentences, confirming each of them by a string or belt of wampom. Having fulfilled every part of his commission, he adds, "Now I have done."
Ch. xi. Indian Manner of making Peace.

If the strings and belts are handed about in the assembly, and considered attentively; it is a proof that the message is well received. The answer is then given with the same solemnity. The ambassadors having withdrawn, the message is duly considered, each string or belt reviewed, the answer agreed upon, and the strings and belts necessary for its confirmation placed in order. Then the ambassadors are again called, and the president, or any other speaker appointed by the council, holding a string of wampom in his hand, addresses them in the following manner: "Brother (Cousin, or Grandfather), this string of wampom bids you welcome. I will extract the thorns out of your feet, which you have got on the journey; I will cleanse your feet from all dust gathered by the way; and I will remove the weariness occasioned by the journey, that your knees may recover their firmness and strength, &c." Then follows the rest of the answer, expressed in short sentences, and confirmed by strings and belts, delivered to the head of the embassy. The treaty being closed to the satisfaction of both parties, a hatchet painted red, or a war-club, is buried in the ground, in in token of a cessation of all hostilities on each. They make use of the following expression to signify stability of the peace thus concluded: "Upon a hatchet we will plant a tree, which shall grow and reach unto heaven, &c." All the firings and exchanged on the occasion are carefully preferred by party.
Indian Manner of making Peace.

But if the message is not well received, the president not accept the tokens of confirmation, and though the ambassadors lay them down upon the ground before his person, push them away with his stick, and no one dare touch them, but the person who brought them, which is considered as a great reproach to him. The same mode of refusal is observed in case a nation is called to join in a war, or to agree to any thing disagreeable to them.

When the ambassadors return home with the refusal, the Delawares throw the belt or string of wampum thus rejected into the council-house; and there it lies till some old wise man takes it away.

If two Indian nations enter into a treaty of alliance, a belt of peace is exchanged between them, which is then cut into the pipe of covenant. It is carefully preserved, and generally lighted in council whenever any thing occurs relating to the ally, and each member smokes a little out. This reminds them in the most expressive manner of the covenant, and the time of its establishment. When the covenant is renewed, the principal ceremony is an exchange of the belts of friendship, which are often from ten to thirty in number. The principal belt is white, with black streaks down the sides, and a black spot on each end. These two nations are denoted, and the white figure in the middle signifies, that the road between them cleared of all trees, brambles, and flones, and that no hindrance is removed, to make way for perfect safety. These ceremonies are always attended with dance and song as every belt is accompanied by a speech, they cont...
Ch. XL. Indian Manner of making Peace.

continue many days. At the concluding speech, the Indians generally make use of this expression, that their friendship shall last as long as the sun and moon give light, rise and set; as long as the stars shine in the firmament, and the rivers flow with water.

END OF PART I.

PART II.

CHAPTER I.

Establishment of a Mission among the Indians in North America by the Brethren.

To preach the Gospel to the Heathen, especially to the nations described in the preceding Part of this work, with an intent that the fruits thereof should remain, was an attempt attended with no small difficulty. Yet as early as the year 1727, which was soon after the restoration of the Unity of the Brethren, they began to take the conversion of the Heathen in general into the most earnest consideration, believing themselves called by God to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ to heathen nations, and especially to such, who till then had been left totally ignorant, and whose instruction was not attended to by any other denomination.

After much serious deliberation, the first missionaries from the Church of the Brethren were sent in the year 1732 to Investigation of the Mission.

St. Thomas, an island in the West Indies, under Da governent. Others went in the year following to Gr and their labors were crowned by God with succe, be seen at large in the history of these missions.

Not long after, the Brethren had an opportunity of ducing the Gospel to the Indians in North America, when the Elector of Saxony expelled the folk of Schwenkfeld from his dominions, such of them as ever since the year 1725 in Bertheladof (a large vil Upper Lufatia, belonging to Count Nicolas Lewis von zendorf and Pottendorf), resolved to go to Georgia in America, and the Count endeavored to procure a fre and kind reception for them, from the trustees of nies in Georgia residing in London. They there Upper Lufatia in 1734, but upon their arrival in Ga changed their minds, and went to Pennsylvania. En the trustees of Georgia, not willing to break off their ments with Count Zinzendorf, offered to grant him of land in Georgia, to be cultivated by the Brethren. offer was accepted, the Brethren hoping by these become acquainted with the Creeks, Chikafaw, and the Indians, and some Brethren resolved to go thither purpose. The first company set out from Herrnhut November 1734, conducted by the Brethren John T and Anthony Seyffart, attended with the best with prayers of the whole congregation.

Count Zinzendorf gave them written instruclio which he particularly recommended, that they shou mit themselves to the wise direction and guidance in all circumstances, seek to preserve liberty of con avoid all religious disputes, and always keep in vi call, given unto them by God himself, to preach the of Jesus Christ to the Heathen; and further, that the endeavor as much as possible to earn their own br promise was likewise given that, as soon as they ha in Georgia, an ordained minister should follow th
They met in London with the Rev. Augustus Gottlob Spanenberg, late Theologus Adjunctus of the University of Hall in Saxony, who had been dismissed from that place on account of some misunderstandings between him and other divines of that university, almost in the same manner as Counsellor Wolf had been dismissed some time before.

Upon this Mr. Spanenberg went to Herrnhut, and not only became a member of the congregation of the Brethren, but aslifted in the ministry. He was then commissioned to treat in London with the trustees of Georgia and General Oglethorpe, then governor of that province, concerning the voyage of the Brethren and their settlement in that country. The worthy General procured the money necessary for their equipment and other expenses, and the trustees granted them houses in the town of Savannah, with a piece of ground, till they could clear and cultivate a district given them on the river Ogeeche, and form a settlement upon it. Mr. Spanenberg accompanied them thither, and this first colony arrived in Georgia in the spring of 1735; their number was afterwards increased by a larger company that followed in summer, conducted by David Nitschman. These Brethren settled in the town of Savannah, and God blessed their industry in such a manner, that, in a short time, they not only procured a sufficient maintenance for themselves, but even repaid the money advanced for them in London, and were also enabled to serve their poor neighbors. With the trustees in Georgia, they bore the character of peaceful, quiet, and pious people, not seeking outward advantages, but merely the salvation of the Heathen. It appeared so evidently advantageous to the State in general, that the Indians, who were the aborigines of the country, should be brought to the knowledge of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, that government was very willing to encourage and promote this humane undertaking. The first attempt made by the Brethren was the establishment of a school-house for Indian children of the Creek nation living in their neighborhood, about five miles above the town, on an island of the river Savannah, called... called Irene. Many Indians living here in one place, this gave the Brethren an opportunity to preach the glad tidings, that unto them also was born a Savior, who had redeemed them, and purchased for them freedom from sin, and eternal salvation. Most of these Indians understood some English, heard the Brethren gladly, and frequently brought their Chief, or king, Tomo Tichatschi, to hear, as they expressed it, the great word. They also made frequent visits to the Brethren at Savannah; and from the accounts of this colony, transmitted by Mr. Spangenberg in the year 1736, it appears, that the Indians in general were well inclined towards the Brethren, and knew very well how to distinguish between them and other white people, who came either merely in pursuit of gain, or led a dissolute life.

Thus this small colony began to prosper, and appearances both as to externals and the conversion of the heathen, were favorable. Brother Peter Rofe and his wife, Anthony Seyffarth, Biener, and other Brethren, lived in the school-house, and being thus among the Indians, with whom they continually conversed, they succeeded in their attempts to learn the language. They found an able assistant in the Rev. Benjamin Ingham, an English clergyman, who came to America with the second colony, and having conceived a great regard for the Brethren during the voyage, proved very serviceable in regulating and promoting the aim of the school.

In 1737 the Rev. Peter Bochler, of the university of Jena, was chosen and ordained minister of the colony in Georgia, and arrived there the year following. Brother John Toeltschig returned to Europe in company of Mr. Ingham. Mr. Spangenberg having fulfilled his appointment in establishing the mission in Georgia, went to Pennsylvania, and from thence to St. Thomas to hold a visitation in that mission. He then returned, and remained in Pennsylvania till 1739. Through him the Brethren were made attentive to other Indian nations, especially the Iroquois, or Six Nations. Mr. Spangenberg received the first account of them from Conrad Weisser, a justice of the peace, and interpreter to the government in Pennsylvania. The governor and proprietor of Pennsylvania had sent this man, in the winter of 1736, to treat with the Iroquois concerning a war ready to break out between them and the Indians of Virginia, and to endeavor to settle the dispute amicably. On this journey of near five hundred miles he suffered great hardships. The weather was uncommonly severe, and he had to force his way, mostly on foot, through deep snow, thick forests, brooks, and rivers, carrying provisions for several weeks on his back. He happened to meet with two Indians on the road, who, seeing that he was almost broken down by hardships, bid him take courage, declaring that what a man suffered in his body, cleansed his soul from sin. These words made an impression upon him: he prayed to God for strength, and was supported.

The Rev. Mr. Spangenberg, to whom he related this, mentioned it in a letter to Herrnhut, and the Brethren immediately became desirous of finding an opportunity to instruct these blind, yet thinking heathen, in the only true way, by which man may be cleansed from sin.

Meanwhile the prosperity of the colony of the Brethren in Georgia received an unexpected check; for the neighboring Spaniards endeavoring to expel the English from Georgia, the latter called also upon the Brethren to join in taking up arms against them. This they refused, having declared, when in London, that they neither could nor would bear arms on any consideration. They repeated their declaration to the trustees in London in a proper manner, and received an exemption from any personal interference with the war. But the people being dissatisfied with them on this account, some of the Brethren, having repaid all the money advanced to them, left their flourishing plantations in 1738, and retired into Pennsylvania. Those that remained enjoyed peace for some time; but the war breaking out again, another application was made to them in 1739 to take up arms, and not willing to repeat their complaints, all of them, with their Minister, Peter Boehler, left the country, and in 1740 joined their brethren in Pennsylvania. Thus the mission among among the Indians in Georgia, after so promising a beginning was at once suspended.

The Brethren, however, wishing, if possible, to preclude the small influence they had gained amongst the heathen, after accepted of an offer made to them by the Rev. Mr. Whitefield, to assist him in his establishment in Georgia; and Brother John Hagen was sent thither in 1740. Their visit was, that he should not only renew and cultivate the acquaintance made with the Creek Indians, but endeavor in time to go to the Cherokees, learn their language, and preach the Gospel to them.

Hagen, to whom this commission was very important, employed all his leisure time with great faithfulness in endeavoring to accomplish this end. He first went to visit the Creek Indians, with whom the Brethren had lived, and only the women at home. The men were all gone with General Oglethorpe to fight against the Spaniards, and their chief, Tomo Tchatschi, was dead. Thus, for the present, all prospect of success was at an end. He therefore directed his attention more particularly to the Cherokees, but had then no opportunity of seeing or conversing with any of them at Savannah, their country being between three or four hundred miles distant; nor could he go thither without forsaking the service of Mr. Whitefield, and acting contrary to instructions. Besides this, an account was received that small-pox had raged among the Cherokees, and, in a short time, destroyed a great part of that nation. The survivors were very much dejected, believing this calamity to be a punishment for having suffered themselves to be seduced by the white people to drink brandy, and on that account they abhorred all Europeans. Under these circumstances Brother Hagen would have been neither welcome, nor able to effect any thing amongst them. However, of the 160 Cherokees who had gone to war against the Spaniards, many were brought to Savannah in a dying state: Thence he fitted, preached the Gospel to all who understood English, and even endeavored to learn their own language for themselves.
ar the country of all white people. They had even beginning to put their murderous intentions into exand actually attacked one plantation.
Rangenbergh had meanwhile visited Germany in 1739, written account he gave to the Brethren at Herrn-ble state of the poor savages in North Ameri-
such an impression upon them, that several single lit-vented their lives in endeavoring to make then acquainted with their Creator and Redeemer.
were nominated as candidates for this mission, and Christian Henry Rauch, was sent, in 1739, from New York, to seek an opportunity to go and Gospel to the Indians.

The plan was aimed at, but the instructions given missionaries by Count Zinzendorf, then warden of the ions of the Brethren, were nearly to this effect:
ly should silently observe, whether any of the hea-been prepared by the grace of God to receive, and the word of life. If even only one were to be then they should preach the Gospel to him, for God the heathen ears to hear the Gospel, and hearts to it, otherwise all their labor upon them would be in also recommended to them to preach chiefly to such who had never heard the Gospel, adding, that we thofe heathen to whom he was sent. Having no acquaintance in New York, and not knowing to whom to address himself on his arrival, it afforded him great pleasure, unexpectedly to meet with the missionary Frederic Martin, from St. Thomas, by whom he was soon introduced to some principal people. He informed the latter of his views, but instead of giving him any encouragement, they represented to him, that many well-meaning, and very expensive attempts had been made to christianize the Indians, but in vain: That they indeed had a church, in which sermons were preached to them from time to time, and also a schoolmaster, appointed to instruct their children, but they remained in their old sinful course, and were as much addicted to drunkenness, as ever. On this account, no European could dwell among them with safety.

The missionary heard their objections patiently, and pressed his gratitude for their friendship and concern for welfare, but did not suffer his confidence in God to be shaken in the least. In sole reliance upon Him, who has promised "that his word shall not return void, but accomplish that which he pleaseth, and prosper in the thing whereof he sends it," he betook himself to prayer, and commended himself and mission to God. Some days after, he heard that an embassy of Indians had arrived at New York, to treat with government. He went in search of them, and rejoiced that he was able to speak with them in the Dutch language, which they understood, though imperfectly. These were the first heathen they had ever seen. They were Mahikander Indians, ferocious in appearance and manners, and much intoxicated. Having waited till they were sober, he spoke with two of them, called Tchoop and Shabasch, and without ceremony inquired whether they wished for a teacher, to instruct them in the way to salvation? Tchoop answered in the affirmative, adding, that he frequently felt disposed to know better things than he did, but knew not how, or where, to find them; therefore, if any one would come, and instruct him and his acquaintance, he should be thankful, that they were all poor and wretched, yet he thought that it might answer a good purpose, if a teacher would come and dwell with them. Shabaich, on giving his assent, the missionary rejoiced to hear this declaration, considered it as a call from God, and promised immediately to accompany them on their return, and to visit them and their people; upon which they declared him to be their preacher, with true Indian solemnity. Some days after, he visited them again, but found them so much intoxicated, that they could neither speak nor stand. Upon his third visit he found them sober, and having agreed to set out before them, they promised to call for him at Mr. Martin Hofman's, on North River. Here he remained some days, waiting in vain for his companions, and then going in search of them to a neighboring Indian town, they misled him, and proceeded on their journey. However, he soon learnt that they lived in Shekomeko, an Indian town, about twenty-five miles east of North River, on the borders of Connecticut, a province of New England near the Stiffik mountain, and accordingly he set out for that place. Before his arrival, Tchoop and Shabaich had announced him as the man whom they had appointed to be their teacher.

He arrived in Shekomeko August 16th, and was received in the Indian manner with much kindness. He immediately addressed them concerning the aim of his visit, nearly to the following effect: "I come hither from beyond the great ocean, to bring unto you the glad tidings, that God, our Creator, so loved us that He became a man, lived thirty years in this world, went about doing good to all men, and at last for our sins was nailed to the cross, on which He shed His precious blood, and died for us, that we might be delivered from sin, freed by his merits, and become heirs of everlasting life. On the third day he rose again from the dead; ascended into Heaven, where He sits upon His throne of glory, but yet is always present with us, though we see Him not with our bodily eyes; and his only desire is, to show his love unto us, &c." They heard this unexpected address with great attention, and, to appearance, not without imprecation. But on the next day, when he began to speak with them on the same subject, he perceived with sorrow, that his words excited derision, and at last they openly laughed him to scorn. Not discouraged even by this behaviour, he was indefatigable in visiting the Indians daily in their huts, representing to them the total depravity of their hearts, and their baseness as to spiritual things, extolling the grace of God revealed in Christ Jesus, and the full atonement made by him, the only way by which they might be saved from perdition.

In the beginning it appeared, according to his own words, as if the devil had strongly fortified his kingdom among them, and shut out every good impression. The small successes gained by the ministry of many clergymen, both of the English and Roman Catholic churches, proved too evident; the truth of the observations made by his pious friends in New York. For drunkenness and every other vice prevailed among the Indians in the most shocking degree, and robberies and murders were nothing uncommon. Nor would they listen to one word of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, but mocked and laughed, whenever his name was mentioned. These were Mahikander Indians; but the Iroquois were no better, though some of them, having been baptized by Roman priests, wore beads and crucifixes, which they considered merely as additions to their Indian finery.

On this occasion the missionary not only suffered in his mind, but had also to struggle with outward difficulties, and famine. In travelling from one Indian town to the other, he suffered excessive heat and fatigue in the woods, having neither the means to keep an horse, nor money to hire a boat. Nor would any one receive him into his house; so that, according to his own expression, he was as one always seeking, and never finding. But he soon forgot this and every other grievance, when he discovered, that the word of the cross began to be the power of God unto salvation. Tichooop, the greatest drunkard amongst them, was the first, whose heart was powerfully awakened through the grace of Jesus Christ. He asked the missionary, what effects the blood of the Son of God, slain on the cross, could produce in the heart of man. Had the missionary received the most valuable pre-
Ch. I. Establishment of the Mission.

It would not have afforded him a pleasure in the least degree equal to what he felt in hearing this question from a foul who sought salvation. His heart burned within him, when he testified to this poor heathen of the power of the blood of Jesus. Soon after this, Shabasch was also awakened, and the labor of the Holy Spirit became remarkably evident in the hearts of these two savages. Their eyes overflowed with tears, whenever Brother Rauch described to them the sufferings and death of our Redeemer. They often lamented their former blindness in worshiping idols, and their ignorance of their God and Savior, who had loved them so much that he died to save them.

These proofs of the power and grace of God were soon made public. The neighboring Christians in Shekomeko, and particularly the inhabitants of Reinbeck, were stirred up, and became eager to hear the Gospel. They desired the missionary to preach to them in a barn, and many received an abundant blessing. Thus he continued to labor a whole year, never omitting an opportunity to beseech and encourage the heathen to come to Jesus Christ.

But some white people, conceiving their interests would be injured, if the Indians were converted to Christianity, began to stir up the heathen against Brother Rauch, representing him as a man seeking only to deceive and mislead them; by which they were so much irritated, that they at last threatened to shoot him, unless he left the place. He therefore thought it most advisable to depart for a while, and sought shelter with a Mr. Rau, a farmer in the neighborhood. This man first started many objections to his plan of christianizing a set of savages, more like incarnate devils than human beings. But when the missionary declared his confidence and faith, founded upon the power of that blood which Jesus Christ had shed for these savages also; adding, that he intended to earn his bread among them with the labor of his hands, and with the little skill he had acquired in medicine; the farmer, admiring his zeal, offered him lodging and board, on condition that he should instruct his children; for, added he, "we white people are as wicked and ignarant as the heathen." The missionary considering this as a gracious direction of Providence in his behalf, commenced schoolmaster. But though he attended to this charge with all faithfulness, yet he did not neglect in his leisure hours to make daily visits to the Indians in Shekomeko, though attended with imminent danger of his life: for the white people of that neighborhood continued to prepossess the minds of the heathen against him, by spreading all manner of lies and false accusations, pretending that he only intended to carry away their young people beyond the seas, and to sell them for slaves. Even Tchoop and Shabash were filled with mistrust, and became disaffected towards him. Some Indians being told, that, if they attended to him, they would certainly go to the devil, left the place to avoid him. Thus not only contempt, mockery, and insults were, as he expresses himself, his daily bread, but several white people fought even an occasion to beat and abufe him. This he avoided by great caution, and a mild deportment. Some threatened to hang him up in the woods; others endeavored to make the Indians drunk, that they might murder him in a drunken frolic. Once an Indian ran after him with his hatchet, and would doubtless have killed him, had he not stumbled and fallen into the water. Even Tchoop, whom he cordially loved, was so much irritated, that he fought an opportunity to shoot him. Shabash did not seek his life, but avoided him everywhere. Notwithstanding all this, he followed these two persons with patience and much love, praying for them, and bowing the word of God in tears. He was prudent and cautious in all his steps, never suffering his confidence in his Almighty Protector to be shaken, but acting from a good conscience, with firmness and courage. This appears very evident in a letter written by him at that time, in which he expresses himself thus: "I am the mos unworthy of all my Brethren, and am convinced, that our Savior does not stand in need of me. And yet he favors me to be his servant. I feel truly as weak as a worm, and Ch. I. Establishment of the Mission.
Establishment of the Mission.

P. II.

"am ashamed before him, when I consider my poverty and insufficiency: Did he not support me daily and hourly, I should long before now have been overpowered by the rage and opposition of Satan. But the strength of the Lord is made perfect in my weakness. Indeed I am now called to believe, what might seem impossible; for there is as yet not the least trace of that glory of God, which shall once be revealed among the gentiles. Yet I will continue to preach the death of the Lord Jesus, for my soul hangs and thirsts after the salvation of these heathen. To gather souls for Him, is the chief desire of my heart, and I proceed upon the word of my Lord in spite of the combined forces of the enemy; for no gate of Hell is so well secured as to refit the power of Christ to burst it open, &c."

In these confident hopes he was not disappointed. The Indians began to admire his perseverance, courage, meek and humble behavior, and changed their minds. He frequently spent half a day in their cottages, ate and drank with them, and even lay down to sleep among them with the greatest composure. This latter circumstance made a particular impression upon them, and especially upon Tchoon.
Once observing the missionary lying in his hut, fast asleep, he examined that he was struck with the following thought:
"This man cannot be a bad man, he fears no evil, not even from us, who are so savage, but sleeps comfortably, and places his life in our hands." Upon further consideration he was at length convinced, that all the accounts spread by the white people to his prejudice, proceeded merely from malice. He then endeavored to convince his countrymen, and succeeded so well, that in a short time the former condence and friendship between the Indians and the missionary was established. They heard his testimonies of the love of Jesus to sinners with renewed eagerness, and began to rekindle the truths of the Gospel.

Thus the missionary had the joy to see that his labor was not in vain in the Lord; several were powerfully moved by his preaching, and Tchoon was again the first who wiped away
the
the tears from his eyes, by expressing his anxious concern and desire to experience the power of the blood of Jefus in his heart. It may be easily conceived, how great the joy of Brother Rauch was, when he heard this declaration; and with what eagerness and energy he preached the word of atone-ment to the poor repenting prodigal. And by this word, the divine power was manifested in him in so effectual a manner, that he not only afterwards became a believer on Jefus Christ, but a blested witness of the truth amongst his own nation.

The change which took place in the heart and conduct of this man was very striking; for he had been distin-guished in all parties met for diverion, as the most outrageous, and had even made himself a cripple by debauchery. Some time after, he related the occasion of his conversion in the fol-lowing manner:—"Brethren, I have been an heathen, and have grown old amongst the heathen; therefore I know how heathen think. Once a preacher came and began to explain to us that there was a God. We answered—'Doft thou think us so ignorant as not to know that? Go back to the place from whence thou camest.' Then another preacher came and began to teach us, and to say—'You must not steal, nor lie, nor get drunk, &c.'—We answered—'Thou fool, dost thou think that we don't know that? Learn first thyselv, and then teach the people whom thou belongest, to leave off these things. For we steals, or lies, or who is more drunken than thine own people?' And thus we dismissioned him. After some time Brother Christian Henry Rauch came into my hut, and by me down. He spake to me nearly as follows:—"come to you in the name of the Lord of heaven and earth. He fends to let you know, that he will make you happy, and deliver you from the miferly, in which you lie at pre-sent. To this end he became a man, gave his life a ran-dom for man, and shed his blood for him, &c. &c." When he had finished his discourse, he lay down upon a board, fatigue by the journey, and fell into a sound sleep. I then thought: What kind of man is this? There he lies and Estabishment of the Mission.

I might kill him, and throw him out into the air, and who would regard it? But this gives him no concern. However, I could not forget his words. They flantly recurred to my mind. Even when I was asleep, came of that blood which Christ shed for us. I found to be something different from what I had ever heard, I interpreted Christian Henry's words to the other Indians. Thus, through the grace of God, an awakening place amongst us. I say therefore, Brethren, preach our Savior and his sufferings and death, if you would your words to gain entrance amongst the heathen."

Soon having thus become obedient to the Gospel, Shabafoon was soon reclaimed. Though the powers of darkness constantly at work, not only to keep the Indians in the slavery of sin, but particularly to seduce and Shabafch from the right way, yet the grace of God prevailed, info much that, in a short time, a small company was collected, consisting of such, who, convinced of a miserable state by nature, expressed a most earnest desire to be delivered from it. Nor were these merely transient motions; but many Indians, both in Shekomeko, quatsnach, Pachtagocho, and other neighboring towns, were fully convinced of the truth of the Gospel. They attended the meetings diligently, and with to good an effect, many a very visible change was effected both in their ad manners.

Missiory also took much pains with the Indians, to teach them more of the Dutch language, of some understood a little. He even taught some to that they might be the better able to comprehend his, and to interpret them to their countrymen. In June he paid his first visit to the Brethren in Pennsylvania, as has been mentioned above, all those Brethren had left Georgia had retired, and by the de- the Rev. Mr. Whitefield had settled upon a piece of land purchased by him for the establishment of a negro. and of which he actually laid the foundation, was called Nazareth, from which afterwards the whole manor received its name. Mr. Whitefield having desired the Brethren to finish the building, they undertook it, though attended with great danger; the Indians refusing to quit the country, and threatening to murder the Brethren. However, the Brethren were obliged to leave this place in the year 1740.

After this, a respectable merchant offered to sell them a piece of land about ten miles south of Nazareth in the forks of the Delaware, on the Lecha, an arm of the river Delaware, and Bishop David Nitchman arriving in 1740 with a company of Brethren and Setters from Europe, they resolved unanimously to buy this land and make a settlement upon it. It was wild and woody, at a distance of eighty miles from the nearest town, and only two European houses stood in the neighborhood, about two miles up the river. No other dwellings were to be seen in the whole country, except the scattered huts or cottages of the Indians. In this place the Brethren built a settlement, called Bethlehem, which by their perseverance, industry, and the accession of several colonists from Europe, increased considerably from time to time.

Some time after, the Reverend Mr. Whitefield offered the manor of Nazareth to the Brethren for sale. They accepted the offer, finished the house, and Nazareth became by degrees a very pleasant settlement. The disputes with the Indians concerning the possession of this manor, which in the beginning threatened serious consequences, were at length settled, partly by the Brethren giving way in some instances, that they might not lose the good will of the Indians, and partly by the issue of a treaty with the Iroquois, and their kind interference, as may be seen from Cran's History of the Brethren, and Spangenberg's Life of Count Zinzendorf. I have hinted at the first establishment of Bethlehem and Nazareth, not only because the elders of these congregations have hitherto been appointed to care for, support, and attend to the external and internal welfare of the million among the Indians, but on account of the closing.
The connexion of these Congregations with the believing Indians, in whose prosperity they have always taken the nearest share, and rendered the most effectual services to this mission.

About the time of Christian Henry Rauch's visit in Bethlehem, in the summer of 1741, many Delaware Indians lived in the country, who were not well disposed towards the Brethren. The latter omitted no opportunity of showing a kind disposition to serve them in various ways, and some Brethren even made it their business to preach the Gospel to them: one of them, called Christian Froelich, became acquainted with their captain; his name was Jan, and he could speak a little English. The captain at length conceived such an affection for Brother Froelich, that he offered to make him a present of his son, a boy of about eleven years old. He once invited him to a feast, conducted nearly in the same manner as described in the first Part of this work: After the conclusion of the feast, made as usual with a full Indian chorus, the captain asked Brother Froelich, How he liked it? He answered, "If you knew the Son of God, of whom I spoke to you yesterday, your joy and pleasure would be much more substantial." The captain immediately interpreted Brother Froelich's words, and what he had told him of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, to which Froelich added some words by way of exhortation. They wereastonished at an address so new, and a general silence ensuing, Brother Froelich continued: "You have just prayed, and sung in your way, and now I beg you to allow me to pray and sing to Jesus, the Son of God; perhaps he may cause you to feel something in your hearts, though you do not understand my words." They gladly assented, and the hut was immediately swept clean. Froelich then kneeled down in the midst of them, and prayed to God our Savior, that he would have mercy upon this poor blind people, for whom he had shed his precious blood. He was so much moved, that he accompanied his prayer with many tears; and several of the Indians could not help weeping with him. One of them even rose, and taking taking him by the hand, said, "Indeed I have felt something "in my heart."

To return to the history of the missionary Chr. H. Rauch. Having strengthened himself in faith and love during his abode with the Brethren at Bethlehem, he returned to his mission. Bishop David Nisfchman went with him, the mission among the heathen being one of the principal objects of his attention in visiting America. He therefore wished with his own eyes to see the seed of the Gospel spring up, and to observe the work of grace prevailing among the Indians. He found great reason to rejoice at the blessing attending the preaching of the word of God, and upon his return made a very favorable report of what he had seen in Sheko-meko.

The Brethren meanwhile considered how they might send assistants to labor in this hopeful work of the Lord, and Martin Mack, one of the Brethren from Georgia, and afterwards Bishop and superintendent of the mission among the Negroes in the Danish West India islands, was appointed thereto. In October 1741 the Brethren Buettnor, Pyrl, and William Zander, arrived from Europe to assist in the mission. Brother Rauch was indefatigably employed attending both to the instruction of his half's children, and to the conversion of the savages. The declarations of the latter, who were under concern for the salvation of their friends, supported and strengthened his faith and courage, and it gave him infinite joy when Tichoop came to him of his own accord, and dictated the following letter to the Brethren in Pennsylvania: "I have been a poor wild heathen, and forty years as ignorant as a dog. I was the greatest drunkard, and the most willing slave of the devil; and as I knew nothing of our Savior, I served vain idols, which I ought with fear and trembling to have destroyed with fire. Of this I have repented with many tears. When I heard that Jesus was the Savior of the heathen, and that I ought to give him heart, I felt a drawing within me towards him; but nearest relations, my wife and children, were my enemies." Ch. I Establishment of the Mission.

"and my greatest enemy was my wife's mother. She told me, that I was worse than a dog, if I no more believed in her idol; but my eyes being opened, I understood that what she said was altogether folly, for I knew that she had received her idol from her grand-mother. It is made of leather, and decorated with wampum, and the being the oldest peron in the house, made us worship it, which we have done, till our teacher came and told us of the Lamb of God who shed his blood, and died for us ignorant people. I was afortified at this doctrine, and as often as I heard it preached, my heart grew warm. I even dreamt often, that our teacher stood before me, and preached to me. Now I feel and believe that our Savior alone can help me by the power of his blood, and no other. I believe that he is my God and my Savior, who died on the cross for me a sinner. I wish to be baptized, and frequently long for it most ardently. I am lame, and cannot travel in winter, but in April or May I will come to you.
The enemy has frequently tried to make me unfaithful; but what I loved before, I consider more and more as dung. I am your poor wild Ticcoop."

At the end of the year 1741, Count Zinzendorf came to Pennsylvania as ordinary of the Brethren, with a view to the not only their establishment in general, but especially the fruits of their labor among the heathen.

Soon after his arrival Brother Gottlob Buettnner was sent on a visit to Brother Rauch in Shekomeko, to invite him to speak of the Brethren to be held at Oly. This visit proved true cordial to him: Brother Buettnner spent ten days with him, rejoicing with amazement at so glorious a work of God begun amongst these heathen; and January 14, 1742, he preached for the first time to thirty-two Indians upon the words, He hath delivered us from the power of warkof, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son.

The Indians hearing that these two Brethren intended to set out for Pennsylvania, Shabath, Seim, and Kiop obtained leave to accompany them, to visit the Brethren there; but C 2

Ticcoop,
T'choop, being lame, could not undertake so long a journey at that time. They left Shekomeko January 22d, but being on foot and in the company of Indians, were refused admission at some inns, and at others, not only laughed at, but their bills were purposely overcharged. However, the Lord helped them through all difficulties, and they arrived at Oly, February 9th, by way of Philadelphia. Here they found Count Zinzendorf and many laborers and ministers of various denominations assembled together. The appearance of the three Indian visitors, whose hearts were filled with the grace of Jesus Christ and the love of God, made a deep impression upon all present. Soon after their arrival a party of Delaware Indians came to see them, to whom they immediately spoke of Jesus Christ, their God and Savior. They likewise declared to the Brethren how much they wished for baptism. Having received the Gospel with a believing heart, been faithfully instructed in the doctrine of salvation, and earnestly desiring to obtain mercy and pardon in the blood of Jesus, the synod first declared them candidates for baptism, and then resolved without delay to administer holy baptism to them in the presence of the whole assembly.

February 11th, 1742, being the day appointed for the important transaction, was indeed a day never to be forgotten in the annals of this mission. The presence of God was sensibly felt during the morning prayer. But immediately after, some ill-disposed people coming from the neighborhood, raised such a disturbance that the whole company was upon the point of dispersing, and of postponing this transaction for the present. However, peace and quietness being happily restored, there was a solemn meeting in the afternoon, in which Brother Christian Henry Rauch, and his assistant Brother Gottlob Buettner, were ordained deacons by the two bishops, David Nichman and Count Zinzendorf. After this act, preparations were made in a barn belonging to Mr. Van Dirk (there being no church in Oly) for the baptism of the above-mentioned Indians, which was to be administered by the missionary, Christian Henry Rauch. The whole assembly being met, the three catechumens were placed in the midst, and with fervent prayer and supplication devoted to the Lord Jesus Christ, as his eternal property; upon which Brother Rauch, with great emotion of heart, baptized these three firstlings of the North American Indians into the death of Jesus, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, calling Silas, Abraham; Seim, Isaac; and Kip, Jacob.

The powerful fenfation of the grace of God, which prevailed during this sacred transfiguration, filled all present with awe and joy, and the effect produced in the baptized Indians astonished every one. Their hearts were filled with such rapture, that they could not keep silence, but made known to all the white people who came into their hut, what great favor had been beitowed upon them. They preached a whole night to a party of Delaware Indians, who were in the neighborhood, and by the providence of God were just at that time led to return to Oly. When one ceased, the other began, and their animated testimony of Jesus filled their hearers with admiration. Soon after this, they set out with Brother Rauch, went first to Bethlehem, and having spent some days with the Brethren to mutual edification, they proceeded on their journey, full of spirit and life, in the company of their beloved teacher. When they came home, they testified to all their relations and friends of the grace showered upon them by God, and their words made an abiding impression in the minds of the heathen.

On the 16th of April in the same year the first sacramental transfiguration was performed in Shekomeko, in the midst of the heathen country. Brother Rauch had then the comfort to administer holy baptism to his dearly beloved Tchicoo, whom he called John. This man, who formerly looked more like a wild bear than a human creature, was now transformed into a lamb, and whoever beheld him, was amazed at so evident a proof of the powerful efficacy of the word and sacrament of the Lord. The account of this baptismal transfiguration, and above all things, the visible and in every point of view remarkable change effected in the minds and conduct of the four new baptized converts, raised the astonishment of all the savages far and near. And indeed the difference between the countenances of the believing Indians and those of the savages was such, that it was remarked by all who saw them. The fire of the Gospel began now to spread, and kindle in the hearts of many heathen: nothing could be more enlivening than to see them coming from different places, from 25 to 30 miles distant, to Shekomeko, to hear the new preacher, who spoke, according to their expression, of a God who became a man, and had loved the Indians so much, that he gave up his life, to rescue them from the devil and the service of sin. The bold and undaunted testimony delivered by the missionary, of the atonement made by Jesus Christ our Savior, confirmed by the words and deportment of the new-baptized, penetrated into the hearts of the savages, and it appeared as if the Lord would gain a rich harvest in those parts, as a reward for the travail of his soul. As to the new-baptized, no one evinced a more striking growth in grace than John. He possessed also a peculiar gift, of expressing himself in a plain, intelligible, and convincing manner. In a letter he dictated to Count Zinzendorf he describes his former state, and adds, 'that he had perceived the first emotion in his heart during the preaching of the cross of Jesus, and that it immediately struck him as something more than common, for he felt himself warmed by it. That his teacher had repeatedly told him, that one but the crucified Savior could help him, and that always ready to help him, if he would only submit but that having loved so many other things, he spared of being ever able to give them up. That he cleaved fast to the world, and was full of self-love, ing a god of his belly; fearing also the reproach of men and yet convinced that, unless he surrendered his heart to our Savior, he would be damned on account of unbelief, &c.' In another letter he sent to the Count, conclu.
concludes a more extensive description of the uneasiness and anxiety of his heart, occasioned by his former abominable course of life, with these words: "But now I am happy, for I know that our Savior has done much for me; I am now as much humbled as I was forrowful. As soon as I felt that I loved him, I immediately wished for brethren, who loved him also. Therefore I love my brother Rauch, and you, and all my brethren here, and all brethren everywhere, even those whom I shall never see in this world. All who love the Lord Jesus I love and salute. I rejoice more and more because our Savior makes others likewise happy, and not me only. I am always glad when our Brethren make known to us his word; it is sweet to my taste, and I attend closely, that I may be as the Bible directs. And it is easy. There are men who say, The Bible is a hard book; but I have not come so far, as to find it hard, it is all sweet and easy; I therefore wait patiently till I come to the hard part: As yet I only know that it is easy and sweet, and can add nothing more, except that I feel the power of our Savior's blood.

"John, your Brother."

Brother Gottlob Buettner was hindered from returning immediately to Shekomoko; however, he labored to the utmost of his power to spread the Gospel among the Indians, partly by travelling from Bethlehem to different parts of the country, and partly by preaching the word of God to those Indians who visited Bethlehem. He says, in a letter written to Europe, "I often think of my brethren in all our congregations, praying with great fervency of spirit, that they may all be entirely devoted to the Lord; for there are so many places where our Savior's name is not mentioned, much less worshipped, that if even two hundred witnesses were employed in America, yet many places would be left without the benefit of the Gospel."
CHAPTER II.

In the year 1742, Count Zinzendorf, who made the conversion of the heathen an object of his particular attention, undertook three different journeys to visit the Indians.

Before he set out, the missionaries, Frederic Martin, Gottlieb Israel, and George Weber, had arrived in Bethlehem from St. Thomas, with one of their negro-converts, and there met Brother Rauch and the Indian, John, from Shekomeko. Count Zinzendorf rejoiced exceedingly to be able to converse with these men, formerly the most blind and savage of human beings, but now lovers of God our Saviour, and happy believers.

Having frequently conferred with the above-named missionaries concerning the labor among the heathen, he set out from Bethlehem on the 24th of July, with his daughter Benigna, eleven Brethren, and three Sisters, some of whom spoke English and Dutch, and others a little of the Indian language. He had likewise an Indian guide and interpreter. Their first visit was to the Indian Patemi, who lived not far from Nazareth. He was a man of a remarkably quiet and modest deportment, spoke English well, and had regulated his housekeeping much in the European style. An account he gave of some ceremonies used at the Indian sacrifices, afforded an opportunity to the Brethren to speak to him of the great sacrifice made by the Lamb of God for our sins, which he attended to with much earnestness, and very willingly listened to the admonitions given him by the Count.

In Cliftonwacka, they called upon an old Indian whom the people considered as a priest, and whose grandson was sick unto death. The Count prayed for the child, recommending ing it to its Creator and Redeemer. Then Brother William Zander, who was in the Count's company, made known the will of God concerning our salvation to the old Indian, who, as he understood English, afterwards interpreted Brother Zander's words to the Indians assembled in the house, to which they appeared to listen very attentively. From thence the travelers proceeded to another Indian town, chiefly inhabited by Delawares. They were overtaken on the road by a few showers, accompanied with thunder and lightning. On their arrival the captain's hut was very civilly offered to them for shelter, and having dried their clothes and had a good night's rest, they proceeded their journey over the Blue Mountains, an European trader, called Remberger, joining their company.
Ch. II. First Settlement of Indian Converts.

In Pochapuchkung they pitched their tents near the habitation of an Indian physician, who not only seemed to attend to what was told him of Jesus Christ, the Redeemer of mankind, with much emotion, but also repeated it to twelve Indians assembled before the tent, with great energy.

July the 30th they passed a very high and wild range of hills, near the river Schuylkill. The Count perceiving a party of Indians on the opposite bank, waded immediately through the river, which was about three or four feet deep, but was received by the people with such marked coolness, that he returned with an heavy heart. However, soon after, an Indian followed him, to beg the whole company to come over to them, and the Count crossed the water a third time. He had now no reason to repent of his trouble, for the Indians earnestly desired to hear the word of God, which Brother Zander preached to them with power and energy. The last Indian town visited by the Count was Meniolagomekah, from which he returned straight to Bethlehem.

Though his first journey did not appear to be of any great consequence, yet it tended to establish both a better acquaintance and firmer friendship with the Indians; and some years after, both the Indian guide he had employed, and and almost all the inhabitants of Meniolagomckah, turned with their whole hearts unto the Lord. About this time a letter arrived from Shekomeko, dictated by the Indian John to the Congregation at Bethlehem, which the following is an extract:

"My dear Brethren and Sisters,

"I love you much. The sensations of my heart cannot describe. I feel that I love my Savior more than I can express. Formerly I did not know what it was to be a truly humble sinner, but now I find that I am a poor, humble sinner, the more happy I enjoy. I perceive plainly, that there is no true pleasure but in connection with our Savior, nor will I have any, but in his service. I have been humble enough, when I consider what he has done for me; for I was a very bad man, cold as ice, and dead as a stone. His blood has softened and warmed me. This is all I can say to my friends, to all heathen Indians, for I always think, that when they feel the power of our Savior's blood in their hearts, they will be better in one hour, than I have been in two years. They know already, that all this is truth, for they now perceive that all those that continue in sin, do not believe on the great Son of God. Nothing is so important to me, as to hear of the blood of my Savior. I also perceive that it is the only thing which can melt the hearts of men. I am now like a piece of wood in his hands, and he may form me according to his good pleasure. I am ready to do every thing that is written in the Bible, with a willing heart. And I find it true, that I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me. I also believe that all what my teachers say, is really contained in the Bible, and the experience of my heart tells me, that it is. For my heart is also a book. I find it every thing that I must tell and preach to my friends. I am also convinced, that it is very needful for us to form such a congregation, as the Bible describes, and to follow the rules contained therein. I long for it much, for we are a very wild people, but our Savior can make us tame and tractable. If we only be"
This letter, written in simplicity, though deficient in expression, gave great pleasure both to Count Zinzendorf, and to the whole congregation at Bethlehem, being an evident proof of the great change wrought in the heart of this man, lately so wild and savage. In August, the Count set out in company of Conrad Weisfer to visit the people at Tolephokin. On the 14th, he met with a numerous embassy of Sachems, or heads of the Six Nations, returning from Philadelphia. Though they were extremely wild, and had, on the same day, shot one of their own people, yet he would not omit so good an opportunity of preaching the Gospel, but desired Conrad Weisfer to tell them, that he had a word from God to them and their nations, which he and his brethren would proclaim to them: further, that his intention was neither to buy land, nor to trade, but to point out to them the way to everlasting life. Conrad Weisfer added: "This is the man, whom God hath sent both to the Indians and to the white people to make known his will unto them," confirming his words, after the Indian custom, by a present of a piece of red cloth. At first the Indians seemed not well disposed, and it was doubtful, what answer would be returned. But the wife of one of the ambassadors just then entering the hut, with a child in her arms; it immediately ran to the Count, and began to play with him. Upon this the father immediately saluted Brother Zander, whom he had seen before; and this circumstance made so good an impression upon the heart, that they immediately held a council. After about half an hour's consultation, the ambassadors of the Onondago and Cauguay nations came to the Count, and addressed him as follows: "Brother, you have made a long voyage over the seas to preach to the white people and to the Indians. You did "did not know that we were here, and we knew nothing of you. This proceeds from above. Come therefore to us, both you and your brethren, we bid you welcome, an" "take this fathom of wamoom in confirmation of the truth of our words." Thus a kind of covenant was made between the Brethren and the Six Nations, which was at that time of great importance, for the influence of these nations being very great, they might have considerably obstructed the progress of the Gospel, had they been enemies.

Having a great desire to see the missionary Christian Henry Rauch at Shekomeko, the Count left Bethlehem again on the 21st of August with his daughter Benigna and Brother Anthony Seyffart. They passed over the Blue Mountains to Menissing and Sopus, where they were joined by another party of Brethren coming from New York, and arrived on the 27th in Shekomeko, after passing through dreadful wilderness, woods, and swamps, in which they suffered much hardship. The missionary received them into his hut with inexpressible joy, and the day following lodged them in a cottage of bark, erected for them. Count Zinzendorf afterwards declared this to have been the most agreeable dwelling he had ever inhabited. The joy he felt at seeing what the Lord had done in this place was very great, and his heart was filled with the most pleasing hopes for futurity. His chief and indeed most agreeable employment was to converse with the four baptized Indians. In a letter written at that time, he mentions, that his joy over them increased every day. It happened that a clergyman passing through Shekomeko, called on the Count, and entered into a dispute with him concerning the person of the Son of God. The Indian John lay ill on the floor, and began to pray that Jesus Christ would reveal himself to the clergyman. When he was gone, John exclaimed, "O how will this man be once ashamed, when he learns to know the Lord Jesus!"

During the Count's abode at Shekomeko the following articles were drawn up:
1. As the conversion of whole nations does not at present appear to be at hand, the missionaries ought not to seek for a speedy increase of numbers, but to do their utmost, that the firstlings be well established in faith and love.

2. To this end, great attention and faithful care should be bestowed upon the few who are converted.

3. The Gospel must be preached to all who will hear it; yet none must be baptized but such in whom true life from God, and a living faith in Jesus Christ, is perceptible.

4. Still greater caution is necessary in admitting the converts to the Lord’s Supper: and none but such who have proved their faith by their works, and walk worthy of the Gospel, can be admitted to this Sacrament.

5. The missionaries should endeavor to give the converts a clear insight into all divine truths contained in Scripture; but must be careful, that not merely their heads be filled with knowledge, but that their hearts enjoy and experience the power of the word of God.

6. At the earnest request of the baptized, such regulations shall be made at Shekomeko (as far as circumstances permit) as may be necessary in establishing an apostolical congregation of Jesus, according to the wisdom granted unto us by God.

7. For this purpose, rules and statutes shall be agreed upon, and their observance duly attended to in love and meekness.

8. The four firstlings of the Indian nation shall be first taken into consideration, and appointed asfllants of the missionaries in the important work of God amongst their nation, not because they were the first who were baptized, but because a peculiar power of grace and spirit evidently rests upon them. John shall be appointed Indian teacher and interpreter, Abraham elder, Jacob exhorter, and Isaac servant.

Further it was

9. Resolved, that six heathen, who were very desirous to receive this seal of the remission of their sins, should be baptized.

Agreeably to these resolutions, a Christian congregation was established in Shekomeko, statutes and regulations were made made and agreed upon, and the above-mentioned four firstlings were appointed afferattles, and blessed for their office with imposition of hands. The Count frequently declared, that they were true servants of God among their nation, to whom conversation, he and his company had often attended with astonishment. On the same day the missionary Rauch administered holy baptism to the six above-mentioned catechumens. This transaction was attended with particular grace and unction: Kaubus was called Timothy; Kernelok, Jonah; Harries, Thomas; Abraham's wife, Sarah; Isaac's wife, Rebecca; and Herries's wife, Esther.

Thus the first congregation of believing Indians established by the Brethren in North America consisted of ten persons. Their sincerity, faith, and love, afforded inexpressible joy to the Brethren; and it was remarkable with what esteem they were treated, even by the wildest savages.

September the 4th, the Count took publicly an affectionate leave of these worthy people, and, surrounded by a large number of Indians, sung an hymn of thanksgiving in the Dutch language; upon which he with his company set out for Bethlehem, accompanied by some unbaptized Indians guides. Two of them, having answered several questions put to them in preference of the whole congregation with cheerfulnes and great emotion, were baptized by the Count and Gottlob Buettner, and called David and Joshua. This was the first baptism of Indians in Bethlehem.

Towards the end of September Count Zinzendorf set upon his third journey to the Indians, and particularly those who then lived on the banks of the Susquehannah, a large river flowing into Chesapeak Bay. As there were several towns upon this river, in which Indians of different nations lived together, he took with him Brother Martin Mack as his wife, who could speak the Mahikan language and the two Indians Joshua and David, who understood Dutch. Conrad Weisser, a man well acquainted with customs and manners of the Indians, was also willing to company him. The river Susquehannah not being navigable in autumn, they took the land-road, through thick woods... low swamps, and over unfrequented and steep mountains, and after much fatigue arrived, on the 28th of September, at Shomokin, a populous Indian town.

The Count was in hopes to find Shikellimus here, who was one of the above-mentioned ambassadors of the Six Nations, for whom he had conceived a particular regard; but Conrad Weißer knowing that he was sent with a message to Chondago, informed the Count that he could not expect to see him. However it so happened, that Shikellimus had met with another captain, to whom he entrusted his commission, and returned to Shomokin. Thus upon the arrival of the Brethren, the Count and Weißer were not a little surprised to see Shikellimus coming to meet them. A savage keeping up to the Count, presented him with a fine melon, for which the latter gave him his fur-cap. Shikellimus kept hold of the Count's hand, repeatedly expressing his pleasure at his arrival, and endeavoring to learn the aim of his coming from Conrad Weißer. The latter told him, that the Count was a messenger of the living God, sent to preach grace and mercy; to which Shikellimus answered, that he was glad that such a messenger came to instruct their nation.

The day after, he came to the Count's tent, and sat down between him and Conrad Weißer the interpreter. The Count first asked Shikellimus, whether he would listen to him attentively; and then proceeded to acquaint him with his motives for taking so long a journey, speaking to him of the grace which Jesus Christ was now willing to impart to these heathen nations. Shikellimus made answer, that the Count's motive was very agreeable to him, and that he would certainly do every thing in his power to forward his design. And indeed he performed his promise, by endeavoring to serve the Brethren wherever he was able. One day the Brethren had assembled to pray the Litany; but the Indians having just then seceded, and making a great noise with drums, music, and singing, the Count sent word to Shikellimus by Conrad Weißer, that the Brethren were going to call upon their God; upon which he immediately procured a general silence.
On the 30th the Count and his company proceeded on their journey, but Jothua, the Indian guide, being ill, Brother Martin Mack and his wife waited at Shomokin to attend him. Shikellimus having led the whole company on horseback through the Susquehannah, which was then fordable, they took the road to Ottonwackin, and spent that night in the woods. The day following they were met by an Indian who understood French and English, besides a great number of Indian languages. When they approached to Ottonwackin this Indian rode forward of his own accord, and probably procured the friendly reception the Brethren met with at that place. Ottonwackin was then inhabited not only by Indians of different tribes, but also by Europeans who had adopted the Indian manner of living. Among the latter was a French woman, Madame Montour, who had married an Indian warrior, but lost him in a war against the Cattawbas. This woman kindly entertained the Count and his company, and they rested at her house for two days.

From hence Brother Peter Boehler returned with Jotha and David to Bethlehem, and Conrad Weifler went to Tuspehokin, promising to return to the Count at a fixed time but Martin Mack and his wife, from Shomokin, proceeded to the Count's company to Wajomic.

This place was then inhabited by the Shawanoe, a very depraved and cruel people, always at enmity with the Europeans, and invited thither by the Iroquois with a view to protect the silver-mines; said to be in the neighborhood from the white people. The Brethren encamped in the midst of this savage tribe, and lived twenty days with them. The Shawanoe thought that, as Europeans, they came either to trade or to buy land, and though the Count endeavored to explain the true aim of his coming, yet some suspicion remained. However, he did not omit any opportunity to give both the chiefs and the people concerning the way of salvation; and upon some his words appeared to make so great an impression as to give him hopes that they would receive the Gospel; but upon the whole their hearts seemed th... against the truth; and the principal chief or king betrayed a particular enmity on all occasions. Yet the abode of the Brethren in this place led to a better acquaintance with the Indians, and the more the Count saw their great blindness and depravity, the more fervently he offered up prayers in their behalf to God our Savior, as the light to enlighten the Gentiles. Whenever he withdrew into his own tent for this purpose, he only fastened the entrance with a pin, and not one of the savages ventured to enter. It appeared afterwards that the savages had conspired to murder him and his whole company. But God in mercy prevented it; for Conrad Weisler, who could not possibly know any thing of their design, being detained in some town beyond his appointed time, became so uneasy, that he hastened back to Wajomicck, and arrived just in time to discover and prevent the execution of this murderous plot.

The return of the Count to the cultivated parts of Pennsylvania was rendered very troublesome, and even dangerous, by the late season of the year, and the great floods; but by the mercy of God, they all arrived safe in Bethlehem November 9th. Meanwhile Brother Gottlob Buettner and his wife had left Bethlehem, and arrived at Shekomeko on the 1st of October, to the great joy of Brother Rauch. These two messengers of peace preached the Gospel with unanimity and zeal, either in English or Dutch, and John, Jonathan, and other baptized Indians interpreted and confirmed their words both in public and private, with great energy. The missionaries likewise read the Bible to the baptized, with view by degrees to make them well acquainted with the Holy Scriptures; the latter asking questions, or defining explanations, by which their growth in grace and knowledge was greatly promoted. The Indians also from the neighboring towns made frequent visits to Shekomeko, and seemed never tired of hearing the word of God. Many savages, who formerly had lived like wild beasts, worshipping idols, bloody-minded, and eagerly pursuing all manner of vices and abominations, flocked now together to hear the Gospel their Savior, and his atonement; and some were so much moved, that they ceased not to weep during the discourse; some fell upon their faces, and by other signs shewed how deeply the words had penetrated and humbled their hearts. When they returned home, they told all their friends and neighbours, with great rapture, what “great words” they had heard from the Brethren. This was indeed a gracious time of visitation from the Lord. Several brought even their children to the missionaries, begging them to care for and instruct them. Thomas and Esther came and mad them a present of their daughter, adding, that they could not educate her as they ought. She was afterwards called Martha in baptism, became a member of the congregation in Bethlehem, and was appointed schoolmistress at settlement of the Brethren called Litz.

More Indians having, upon their earnest request, been baptized, a weekly meeting for the baptized only was now instituted, in which they were addressed as persons, who had received mercy; they sung and prayed together, and conclude with imparting to each other the kifs of peace. (Gov. xxiii. 12.)

This meeting was frequently distinguished by a most powerful sensation of the presence and peace of God, and a blessed influence it had upon the conduct of the baptized, astonishe even the neighboring Christians. Jonathan related, that the above-mentioned farmer, John Rau, asked him, how it happened, that now he was not as fond of hunting as formerly? “True,” answered he, “I am not, and do not intend to be as great an huntsman as formerly; my desire is now after our Savior; all things belong to him, and he gives them to whom he will. Formerly I was interested upon nothing but shooting and killing; but now my heart is fixed upon my Savior and his wounds; and when I go out and shoot a deer, I thank him for his gifts.” A favorite saying being present, replied, “Is it the devil then, who gives...”
Ch. II.  First Settlement of Indian Converts.

"deer to the heathen Indians?" This gave Jonathan an opportunity to speak to him of the great love of God towards the just and the unjust, for he giveeth food to all flesh.

In the above-mentioned meetings of the baptized many useful admonitions were given, and they were particularly exhorted to be diligent at their work, that they might pay their debts and eat their own bread. If any one of them acted not conformably to the rule of the Gospel, he was led with meekness to a confession and amendment of his error.

December 6th, 1742, a burying-ground was laid out for the use of the baptized, and the child Lazara was the first interred in it. A week after this, the missionaries had the joy to administer holy baptism to fifteen persons upon the same day.

Towards the close of the year, Brother Martin Mack and his wife arrived at Shekomeko, and Brother Rauch went on a visit to Bethlehem. Abraham said, "Formerly I used to think, that there was no man like Brother Rauch in the world, but now I am satisfied, if only his Brethren live with us." Brother Mack, immediately upon his arrival, conceived such a love for the Indians, that, according to his own expression, his heart was knit to them. He acknowledged, with gratitude to God, the grace bestowed upon his wife, towards whom the Indian women had great confidence, so that the even established societies or classes among them, in which they met to converse about the state of their souls, and the Lord laid a special blessing upon these meetings. Brother Mack says in one of his letters, "John is a gifted and zealous witnes of Jesus Christ, whom I cannot hear without astonishment. Abraham is a venerable, manly, and solid Brother, preaching to all by his unblameable walk and conversation; he is also possessed of gifts to testify of our Savior with energy and power."

At the end of the year 1742 the number of baptized Indians in Shekomeko was thirty-one, most of whom were baptized in that place and a few in Bethlehem, where they frequently visited. They were all of the Mahikander tribe, for the Iroquois seemed more willing at that time to promote the Gospel among others, than to receive them themselves.

About this time the Brethren became more than ever convinced that great caution and circumspection would be requisite in their labors, for many tribes among the Indians bore an irreconcilable hatred towards the Europeans, and were much dreaded by them. For these reasons, a suspicion might easily arise in the minds of the Christian magistrates, as though the Brethren were secretly in league with the hostile Indians, their conduct towards them differing so much from that of other Europeans.

CHAPTER III.

The eagerness with which the Indians received the Gospel of Jesus Christ our Savior, soon called for a greater number of laborers in this harvest. But that the Brethren might everywhere follow the same principles in spreading the Gospel, and in their attendance upon the baptized among the different heathen nations, to whom they were sent, Count Zinzendorf drew up some articles for the instruction of the missionaries in general, founded upon the doctrines of the Holy Scriptures, and upon the experience hitherto acquired by the missionaries.
This worthy nobleman, having done every thing in his power towards the conversion of the heathen in North America, and the thence of the Gospel among them, returned to Europe the beginning of the year 1743. Previous to his departure sent Brother Joseph Shaw to Shekomoko, as school-master the Indian children. Brother Rauch, who had married Bethlehem, returned to Shekomoko, and continued to or there jointly with the Brethren Buettner and Mack. long after, the Brethren Pyrleus, Senseman, and their rest, went to serve the same mission, and also Frederic Post, afterwards married a baptized Indian woman. Brother Ettner and his wife remained in Shekomoko during the first part of the year 1743. The other missionaries spent of that period in visiting other places, especially Wecht trach and Pachgatgoch, the inhabitants having earnestly repeated dested the Brethren to come and instruct them. They freely told the missionaries that some people had offered them rum, if they would kill Brother uch; and expressed their astonishment, that the white peo were so enraged, that the doctrine of Jesus Christ should be ached to the Indians, when they themselves were amused h so many foolish things. By this it was evident, that the en of many so called Christians against the work of God ong the heathen had not wholly subsided; but the mif taries were quiet, blessing them that cursed them, yet er suffering themselves to be disturbed in their import calling, and sacrificing every convenience of life to this fied service.

They earned their own bread, chiefly by working for the lians, though the latter were not able to pay much for the uce of their labor. They lived and dressed in the Inn manner, so that in travelling to and fro they were taken Indians. But whenever they could not subsist by the work their own hands, they were provided with the necessaries life, by the Brethren at Bethlehem.

In their calling and service they met with much opposition al many hard trials. The cunning and power of Satan and is emissaries seemed constantly employed against them, and frequently

frequently brought them into distress and danger. But God, our Savior mightily supported them, and imparted to them extraordinary courage and faith, to resist and destroy the machinations of the enemy. Strengthened by many undeniable proofs of the power and grace of God, they remained unshaken in their resolution to preach the Gospel with boldness, sensible of their own insufficiency, but in humble reliance upon the support of the Lord, to whom they made constant prayer and supplication, with full assurance of being heard. Brother Büttner was once going to visit some neighboring heathen, and was suddenly seized with a vomit of blood. He kneeled down, and prayed to the Lord, that he would strengthen him, having a great way to walk before night. His prayer was heard, and he performed his journey.

Most of those Indians, who visited at Shekomeko were truly awakened, lived in Pachagotch, about two miles from Shekomeko, in Connecticut. They shirked the magistrates, and begged for a Christian minister but their petition being rejected, they went to the Brethren begging that a Brother would come, and preach to the "sweet words of Jesus." Upon this the missionary Mack and his wife went thither on the 28th of January, took up their abode with the captain of the town, who whole family was awakened. The faves received him with great joy, and observed, that he and his wife must love the very much, to travel so far to visit them, in this bad sea of the year. Mack assured them it was so, and then formed them of the aim of his visit.

During his stay at Pachagotch, a man arrived there longing to a sect called the New Lights, and preached the faves full two hours, declaring that God was exceedingly wroth with them, and would send them all to hell. The poor heathen, who were already convinced of, and ashamed at their wretched and forlorn estate by nature, could find no comfort in this doctrine, but came to Brother Ma•• to desire, that he would preach to them; adding, that the wis:
white man held a doctrine different to that preached in Shekomeko, not speaking a word of the blood of Jesus. When Brother Mack began to speak of the happiness of those who believe in the Lord Jesus, and by him are delivered from the power of sin and its condemnation, there was a great emotion among the people, and they observed among themselves, how happy they should be, if the Lord would be as gracious to them, as he had been to their countrymen at Shekomeko. Upon another occasion, when Brother Mack was conversing with them of our Savior, a woman began to weep bitterly, and said: “I know, that my heart is very bad, but I cannot help myself.” Brother Mack pointed out Jesus unto her, as the only help in time of need, and taking this opportunity to declare to them, that freedom from the dominion of sin was obtained alone through faith in the crucified Jesus, they all said: “Yes, this is true, this is the right way, of which we have hitherto been ignorant: these are not mere words, they proceed from our teacher’s heart.”

Their various questions proved often a welcome opportunity to bring the Gospel home to their hearts, and to declare the whole counsel of God concerning their salvation. This produced such an effect, that Brother Mack observed in one of his letters: “I cannot describe what these people feel, when we speak to them of the Lamb of God and of his sufferings; they seem all alive, whenever the discourse turns upon this subject.” In general, the love of God kindled in the hearts of many in this place.

From Pachgatgoch Brother Mack went on a visit to Potatik, about seventy miles further inland. He had been expressly invited by the captain of the place, who formerly was so violent an enemy to the Gospel, that he threatened to tomahawk or shoot any one who should dare to speak a word of Jesus Christ.

Brother Mack and his wife left Pachgatgoch on the 4th of February. At taking leave the people wept, and earnestly entreated them to return soon. In Potatik they entered the drift but they arrived at. The Indian received them in the kindest manner, and inquired, whether they came from

D 4

Sheko-
Sleekomeko, adding, that it appeared so to him by their countenances. He then told them, that he had begun, about a year and a half ago, to go to church. Being asked his reasons for it, he made answer, that his late daughter in her last illness was much afraid of being damned eternally: that on this account he had sent for a Christian preacher, who heard her complaints, and then advised her not to do any work on Sunday, not to steal, nor to lie, but to go diligently to church, and to pray much, and then she would become acceptable to God: that upon this, his daughter addressed him, "Father, I perceive, that this advice comes too "late, for I am now going to die, but you must not wait "so long, else you will be also lost;" and soon after ex- "pired: that ever since that time he had endeavored to do "good; but found, that he could not well accomplish it. As to "doing no work on Sunday, this was easy, but as to the ref, "he could not help transgressing, and that repeatedly. The "preacher, whose advice he asked, told him that he did not "come often enough to church. But he found that he always "remained the same, being like a man chained down, and unable to move. Brother Mack asked him, whether he be- "lieved on the Lord Jesus Christ our Savior? He answered, "No, I cannot say I do." This gave the missionary an oppor- "tunity of declaring to him, that if he believed on Jesus Christ, the eternal God, who became a man, and redeemed him from the power of Satan with his own precious blood, the he would not only become free from stealing, lying, swear- ing, and the like, but be delivered from the dominion of all sin. He declared, that he had never heard of this before. He expressed great joy at Brother Mack's arrival in Potok, and brought him to the other heathen, and gave them an account of the conversation between him and the missionary. Meanwhile a large number assembled, to whom Brother Mack made known the aim of his journey, desiring them to permit him and his wife to live with them in their huts for a few days. They behaved very friendly, being not able sufficiently to express their surprize, that merely on their account, he should have undertaken so long a journey through the and of the grace that was subjoined to it; they were not neeko, and knew how notoriously wicked the island that place had formerly been. To this brother said, "It is the desire of the Lord our Savior to unto you the same happiness, and he requires you deliver yourselves over to him; wretched as you are gladly forgive your sins, deliver you from the yoke, and make you a people well-pleasing unto him." Considered these words as being of great importance, used their conversation with the missionary till midday as the latter left off speaking, they repeated to one another in their own language, adding, that never heard any thing like it. Many of these Indus Dutch and English, and the rest conversed with lack in their own language, his wife being the in-having been brought up among the Mahikander In-} he day following an English gentleman visited the, and kindly offered him a lodging in his house, rethe danger of living constantly with the Indians.

ber Mack answered, that having come hither in their account, he wished rather to stay with some Indians overhearing this conversation, were surprised, and told the rest, how much more nary loved them, than any one had done before; they intended to be converted, they should do it with the whole heart, for when he should resolve upon it, he intended to do so. The next day, very early, a woman came to the missionary, and told him, that she had not slept all night; for his words had sunk into her heart, and made her uneasy; that she therefore considered this as a sign, that the Lord intended to make her happy.

Brother Mack was also frequently visited by the Europeans, who were amazed at his intrepidity in dwelling among the Indians. One of them listening to a conversation between Sitter Mack and the Indian women, asked an Indian who stood by, what he thought of her? His answer was, "She believes what the speaks; I never heard any one speak with such confidence, for her words proceed from the heart." Another time, the captain accidentally stepped into Brother Mack's hut, when some Europeans were there on a visit. He addressed them immediately: "You ought to be ashamed of yourselves to have been so long amongst us and never to have told us any thing of what we hear from this man. He tells us what he has felt in his own heart shows us the state of our hearts, and hits the mark at acutely. But you chatter and read in books, and never the things you preach to others. From him we learn what we may be saved."

To this bold address the Europeans made no answer. Brother Mack also visited the English minister, who seemed well pleased with the labor of the Brethren among the Indians.

When he mentioned his intention to return to Pachagotch, all the Indian inhabitants assembled, to take leave of their guests. He asked them, whether they would remem ber him in love, but they could hardly make any reply to weeping. He then kneeled down and prayed for them, recommending them to the mercy of God. They wept much and said: "We feel that we are great sinners, and now go and leave us alone." Having spoken some words of consolation, he set out on his return to Pachagotch.
Here he was met by the missionary Buettner and the Indian Joshua; and soon after, six Indians belonging to this place were baptized. Great grace prevailed among the people, and according to the account of the missionaries, it was evident that the Holy Ghost was poured out upon them at their baptism. They afterwards spent great part of the night in prayer, and in the day-time went about preaching Christ to their own countrymen. Among those, who were then baptized, was the captain of Pachgatgoch, Mawefeman, named Gideon in baptism, and a son of the Indian brother Isaac at Shekomeko. About two months before, the latter went to visit his father, whom he had not seen for eight years. But as he did not relish the Gospel, he soon felt himself uneasy at Shekomeko, and retired to Pachgatgoch. Here the awakening had just commenced, his uneasiness increased, and he was no longer able to relish the grace of God and the power of his word, but fought and found remission of sins in the blood of Jesus. The edifying example of the six firstlings at Pachgatgoch influenced many other Indians. They soon made a visit to Shekomeko, accompanied by twenty-seven Indians, both from Pachgatgoch and Potatik, who came to hear these sweet words of life. This enlivened the missionaries greatly, and gave them boldness in preaching the Gospel.

The idea of the first love, spoken of in Rev. ii. 4, was here realized and eminently obvious in the declarations of the baptized Indians, concerning our Savior and their experience of his grace, and in their behavior towards each other. Gideon begged, that a missionary might come to reside in Pachgatgoch, and four deputies arrived from Potatik to ask the same favor. This occasioned Brother Mack to go thither a second time. He found them all very eager to hear the Gospel. Above twenty baptized Indians from Shekomeko went with him, and were his faithful fellow-laborers. John was remarkably animated, to the astonishment of all his countrymen. He had a peculiar gift to render the subject he was speaking upon, clear and perpicious. Sometimes he made use of figures, after the Indian manner. For instance, influence, in describing the wickedness of man’s heart, he took a piece of board, and with charcoal drew the figure of a heart upon it, with stings and points proceeding in all directions: “This,” said he, “is the state of a man’s heart; while Satan dwells in it, every evil thing proceeds from it.” With Indians, this simple figure tended more to illustrate his discourse, than the most elaborate explanation. Joshua and Gideon bore likewise very powerful testimonies of the doctrine of our Lord’s atonement; for having an experimental knowledge of it in their own hearts, they could not hold their peace.

During the time of Brother Mack’s second visit in Potawat, Gideon remained in Pachgatgoch. Here he was one day attacked by a savage, who, presenting his gun to his head, exclaimed: “Now I will shoot you, for you speak of nothing but Jesus.” Gideon answered: “If Jesus does not speak with you, you cannot shoot me.” The savage was so struck with this answer, that he dropped his gun, and went how in silence. During his absence, his wife had been taken extremely ill, and as Brother Mack just then returned to Pachgatgoch, the poor savage ran to meet him, begging that he would come and tell him and his wife something of G—— though only two days had elapsed since he had resolved to shoot every one who should speak to him about conversion. Brother Mack went with him, and found a great number of Indians gathered together, to whom he and his Indian associates, Joshua and Gideon, preached redemption in Christ Jesus with such power and unction, that the poor people were greatly affected.

It was a very moving sight, to see the good people of Pachgatgoch take leave of the missionary and his company. They all met together, and declared, that though he had been a fortnight with them, they were yet very hungry after his words, and then begged, that he would preach to them once more; upon which he spoke for some time of the power of the blood of Christ. When he had finished, Joshua rose and continued the discourse, and being hindered by his tears...
Pachgotzeh, and Potasik.

proceeding, Samuel continued, and then Gideon lit. The emotion among the hearers was such, her Mack declared, he had never seen any thing t. nference of Elders in Bethlehem, to whom the fu-cency of this mission was committed, sent now a Brother to visit the missionaries in Shekomeko, he course of this year, Bishop David Nitschman, Brethren Peter Boehler, Anthony Seyffart, John and Nathanael Seidel, spent some time there, and d with wonder and gratitude, in beholding the effects of the spirit and grace of God among these years ago, Anthony Seyffart wrote in a letter to me; remember with great pleasure what I frequently the year 1743 at Shekomeko, where the Indians, bodies, upwards of an hundred in number, upon the Gospel of our Savior, wept over their misfey victions, praying for the remission of their sins, bese lines in an ancient hymn were here realized:

nd tho' a bear, he's often'd to a lamb;
he' cold as ice, his heart is set on flame.'

brethren went also from Bethlehem to preach in diffian towns in the neighboring countries, especially e Delawares, though at that time they had pollared, that they would not hear any thing of the he Christians. We must here obverse, that during ies, which were frequently attended with much d danger, they were much encouraged and coma book in use among the Brethren, containing Scripture for each day in the year, which proved very applicable to their circumstances. Two of fengers of peace were on one day obliged, both through a forest on fire, and to cross a large which had overflowed its banks. The text for that When thou passest through the waters, I will be with that;

Progress of the Gospel at Shekomeko,

there: and through the rivers, they shall not overflow them: they shall walk through the fire, they shall not be burned; fire shall kindle upon them: Isa. xiii. 2. Though visits were not productive of any immediate good, yet kindness, with which the Indians were treated by the Brethren, left a strong impression upon their minds, and the fruit thereof appeared in due season.

The Indian congregation in Shekomeko continued to increase in number and grace; there was only one thing wanting, namely, the administration of the Holy Communion, and the missionaries began to think it wrong to withhold this great gift, granted by Jesus Christ himself, in his last testament, to his whole church, from this congregation of believing Indians. After much serious deliberation, ten were baptized and nominated to be the first, who should partake of the Lord's Supper. They were previously instructed in the doctrines contained in the Holy Scriptures, relating to this sacrament, viz. that in the Holy Communion, the body and blood of Jesus Christ, accorded his word; that they were thereby united to him by the sacrament, and would receive a repeated assurance of the forgiveness of their sins. Then the missionaries prayed over them, reminding them to the faithful tuition of the Spirit of that he himself might prepare their hearts for this great enjoyment.

March the 13th was the great day on which the first Indian nations should be admitted to the participle of this sacred repast. The baptized first met to partake of love-feast, according to the custom of the apostolic church, during which, the great grace already bestowed upon them and the future blessings to be imparted unto them by the Savior, were spoken of. Afterwards the candidates for the Lord's Supper had the Pedilavium (John, xiii. 14), having been confirmed with imposition of hands, the lemn meeting was concluded with the kiss of peace. This small congregation of Indians enjoyed the Holy Communion, according to the institution of our Lord Jesus. in remembrance of his death. At this opportunity his divine presence was felt in such a manner, that the hearts of all present were filled with love and awe; all were melted into tears. The missionary writes: "During the subsequent meeting for adoration and thanksgiving, we were overcome with weeping, and whilst I live, I shall never lose the impression this first Communion with the Indians in North America made upon me."

At the second Communion on the 27th of July, twenty-two Indians were present, among whom were some from Pachgatgoch. The day following one of them declared, that he never thought any one could feel so happy in this world; but that he could not find words to express his sensations. Most of them made the same declaration.

The believers being much intent upon forsaking every thing belonging to, or connected with heathenism, and desiring to walk in all things worthy of their heavenly calling as a church of God, they unanimously agreed to make even more statutes and regulations than those recommended to them by Count Zinzendorf, to which every one, who would live amongst them, should conform. And that these statutes might be strictly complied with, they appointed Brother Cornelius, formerly a captain among the savages, to be overseer. Having accepted the charge, he called the inhabitants together, explained the statutes to them in a very engaging manner, and afterwards acted in his capacity as overseer, with great faithfulness and to general satisfaction. However, one day, after the Communion, he came and begged to be dismissed from this office, alleging, that he had felt such happiness during the sacrament, that he had resolved to retire from all public business, and to devote his whole time to an uninterrupted intercourse with our Savior. Nevertheless he was easily persuaded to keep his post till another brother should be found to succeed him, with this condition, that he should no more be called Captain, for, added he, "I am the least amongst my brethren."

In July the new chapel at Shekomeko was finished and consecrated, some of the elders of the congregation at Bethlehem.
lechem being present. This building was thirty feet long and twenty broad, and entirely covered with smooth bark. The daily meetings were now regulated in a better manner. The congregation usually met every forenoon to hear a discourse delivered upon some text of Scripture. Every evening a hymn was sung. A monthly prayer-day was likewise established, on which, accounts were read concerning the progress of the Gospel in different parts of the world, and prayer and supplication made unto God for all men, with thanksgiving. The prayer-days were peculiarly agreeable to the Indians; especially because they heard, that they were remembered in prayer by so many children of God in other places. Both on these days, and on all Sundays and festival days, Shekomeko seemed all alive, and it may be said with truth, that the believers showed forth the death of the Lord, both early and late. One day above one hundred farsago came thither on a visit, and one of the missionaries observed, that wherever two were standing and conversing together, our Lord Jesus, and his love to sinners, as the cause of his bitter sufferings, was the subject of conversation. The zeal of the baptized Indians in testifying of our Savior was such, that they were thus employed even till after dark night.

The missionaries were also daily excited to thank God, for the manifold proofs of the labor of his Spirit in the hearts of the Indian Brethren and Sisters. Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and John, and their wives, were well blished in the principles of the Christian faith, and observed all the instructions given in the Scriptures concerning marriage, how in that state they should conduct themselves according to the will of God. Even when any of them displeased, the missionaries by improper conduct, latter were often comforted, by seeing their readiness acknowledge their fault, and their desire to be led again in the right way. Jonathan spent several days in great earnestness. He had had a dispute with some of his brethren and though he was willing to ask pardon of the Lord, he could not be satisfied, but whenever he prayed to his led in his heart to own his fault before his brethren, and this circumstance taught him himself still better. Another baptized Indian had himself to be seduced to drunkenness by some wicked person. The whole congregation were grieved on this account; the Brethren were desired in the public meeting, their brother harshly, but rather to recommend his repentance to the pardon and mercy of Jesus; as he was most disposed of his fault. After some days, he was assured of the congregation, and readmitted to their meetings.

An old Indian, called Solomon, who was but could not submit to own himself so great a a really was, removed with his whole family from there, promising to return, perhaps in three weeks. One evening he came back, and declared, that he leave the place; upon which the Indians observed, that Solomon could not run away from our own, whose wife was still unbaptized, and had received him, asked the missionaries, how he should himself in this case, promising to follow their advice.

He was advised to behave with meekness and but yet to show firmness in his conduct towards his own was desired to speak to the woman, and to er to return to her husband. This had so good hat she said, "It is true, my heart is so bad, that o evil, though I would not." John having told rest energy how the might be delivered from that she returned, staid with her husband, and some was truly converted to the Lord.

eko was now sufficiently supplied with missionaries; nothing might be neglected in Pachtsgozech, Martin Mack and his wife removed thither, built hut of bark, and being surrounded on all sides with rocks, frequently called to mind the favorite lines, of ancient Bohemian Brethren:

I. E "The
Yet for the Lord's sake, he and his wife were content to live here in poverty, and gladly to suffer hardships. The great awakening in Pachgatgoch soon raised the attention of the whole neighborhood, especially of some ten people, who did every thing in their power to seduce Indians to forsake the Brethren. For having been accustomed to make the dissolute life of the Indians, and their love of liquor subservient to their advantage, they were exceedingly provoked, when they saw that the Indians began in truth to turn from their evil doings, and to all those sinful practices, which had hitherto been favorable to the traders. They first spread every kind of report against the missionary and his intentions, and in that these were not listened to, they persuaded a clergyman of the church of England in the neighborhood, to join in their measures. A parish overseer was therefore sent to tell the Indians, that they should send to New England a minister and schoolmaster, and that the governor would pay their salaries. To this, the Indians answered, that those measures were already in operation, and that upon the overseers observing, that the Brethren preached a false doctrine, they replied: "You never disturb the people in their way of living, let it be ever so sinful; therefore do not disturb us, but suffer us to live as we are taught. There are many churches in your town and various sects, each of whom calls the doctrine of the seest, the only right way to heaven, and yet you permit us like wives here: but what we please, though you should not think it right. This answer only tended the more to enraged the adver. They publicly branded the Brethren with the names of pimps and traitors, and the missionaries Mack, Shaw, and Jone (the two latter being on a visit in Pachgatgoch), taken up as papilis, and dragged up and down the country for three days, till the governor of Connecticut, hearing their case, honorably dismissed them. Yet their accusers insisted on their being bound over in a penalty of 100l. to keep the laws of the country. Being not fully acquainted with all the special laws of the province, they perceived the trap laid for them, and thought it most prudent to retire to Shekomeko. Many of the believing Indians followed them, and the rest made repeated visits to the missionaries. However, Brother Mack's wife ventured, some months after, to go on a visit to the Indian women at Pachgatogoch.

Here he heard, that the enemies continued to take much pains to entice the Indians to forfake their connexion with the Brethren, and to defilt from going to Shekomeko. One of them endeavored to represent it as great folly in them, to fatigue themselves by so long a journey, when, if they would come to hear him preach, he would even give them money. Gibson answered: "We do not desire to hear your words for money: I and my friends seek the salvation of our souls, and on this account, the road to Shekomeko never seems too long, for there we hear the enlivening words of the Gospel."

Meanwhile the missionary Rauch had visited the country about Albany, Shochary, and Canathochary on the North River, and on the 23rd of August arrived at Freehold, where he found a large company of Indians gathered around a dying person. As soon as the patient heard that a teacher had arrived from Shekomeko, he exhorted his countrymen to hearken to his words, and address the missionary, bequeathed to him his hut in case of his death, which hap-ened that same night. Brother Rauch having made known the aim of his coming, the Indians held a council, and sent him word, that they had resolved to intreat him to dwell with them, and to instruct them in the knowledge of God; for that they had long wished to become like the people in Shekomeko. He immediately began to tell them of the love of God our Savior to lost sinners, and of the sufferings and death of Jesus. Some smiled, others were still, as seemed truck with wonder. But about three weeks after, some white people came and endeavored to irritate the mixt of the Indians against him. They even distributed amongst them, with a view that in a drunken frolic this might set their dogs at the missionary, or even kill his and though the savages refused to do this, yet they lost confidence, Brother Rauch having being described as a careful and dangerous man. Notwithstanding all this position, some of the most savage of these Indians were gained for the Lord. One of them publicly burnt his ido and in a speech delivered to his countrymen on this occasion lamented his former blindness and ignorance of the God, exhorting them all to surrender their hearts to Lord Jesus. His discourse was so full of energy, that many were truck with conviction, and some became truly concerned for the salvation of their souls. Towards the close of the year, several of the inhabitants of Freehold were made partakers of the grace of God, but others, notceiving how such a change could possibly be wrought man, suspected Brother Rauch of sorcery, and that he could make people like himself, by some kind of magic spell. Amidst all these endeavors to convert the Mahikinder Delaware nations, the Iroquois were not forgotten. But thorough knowledge of the Maquaw or Mohawk language being required, to be able to preach the Gospel to the Brother Pyriceus went to Tulpehokin, where he remained three months with Conrad Weisfer to study this language and afterwards moved with his wife into the interior portion of the Iroquois country, and took up his abode with English missionary, in Junatarougu. Conrad Weisfer had inclination to follow him, and, on his way, called at Shekemeko. He was a man possessed of a thorough knowledge the Indians and their manners, and though willing to all had always doubted the possibility of their conversion, astonishment at what he saw and heard in this place, is evident from the following letter written to Brother Buettner.

merits of Jesus, presented to them by the brethren, impressed my mind with a firm belief, that God is you. I thought myself seated in a company of prie Christians. The old men sat partly upon benches, partly upon the ground for want of room, with great ty and devotion, their eyes steadfastly fixed upon their er, as if they would eat his words. John was the reter, and acquitted himself in the best manner.

em him as a man anointed with grace and spirit.

gh I am not well acquainted with the Mahikander age, yet their peculiar manner of delivery renders ideas as intelligible to me, as to any European in this

ry. In short, I deem it one of the greatest favors ed upon me in this life, that I have been at Sheko-

. That text of Scripture, "Jefus Christ, the same day, and to-day, and for ever," appeared to me as an al truth, when I beheld the venerable patriarchs of American Indian church sitting around me, as living es of the power of our Lord Jefus Christ, and of his sacrifice. Their prayers are had in remembrance ight of God, and may God fight against their

ies. May the Almighty give to you and your af-ts an open door to the hearts of all the heathen. This ost earnest wish of your sincere friend, not afford him in his endeavors without exposing himself severe reproof; that as to himself, he was weary of his labors among the Indians, their language being so difficult, that after many years of study he found himself unable to profess it; that he therefore had only written a few verses with the assistance of a friend, which he read to the Indians now and then, but without observing the least change in their conduct, for they would not even leave off drinking and painting their faces. Parlaeus finding himself narrowly watched on all sides, and his presence not agreeable, moved to another place about thirty miles off, where he found more opportunity of studying the language, though obliged to submit to great hardships. For example, he lived in an house, in which they slept for a whole fortnight upon the bare ground, without the least covering. They were likewise continually tormented by kinds of vermin and troublesome insects. But their labors to the Indians made them willingly bear all these inconveniences. Sometimes after, Parlaeus was invited to a conference in Shekemoko, and accompanied Brother Anthony Seyfart to Canastochary, with a view to make further progress in the Mohawk language. From Bethlehem, Brother Bruce and his wife went to Ottonwackin, where they found one month, and on their return expressed some hopes, if the inhabitants of that town were inclined to receive the Gospel.

Brother Senfeman went from Shekemoko up the Nor River, where he visited Schekants and Skathak, and his words found entrance into the hearts of some. For all these endeavors the Brethren thought themselves amply rewarded by the success of the mission in Shekemoko; where, at the close of the year 1743, the congregation of baptized Indians consisted of sixty-three persons, exclusive of those in Pace gutgosh, and a great number of constant hearers, some of whom were powerfully awakened.
CHAPTER IV.

Severe Persecution of the Missionaries, and of the Congregation at Shekomeko. Their Conduct under these Trials.

Hitherto the labor of the Brethren among the heathen had met with no opposition of any consequence, and in the first months of the year 1744, the church was pure and unbroken. Shekomeko being the chief residence of the believers, frequent visits were made to this place from the awakened people in Pachgatgoch and Poatik, which were returned at different times by the missionaries, and their Indian assistants.

Brother Buttmann was from January till May in Bethlehem, and Frederick Poft was recalled.

The missionaries Mack, Shaw, and Senfeman, served the Indian congregation in Shekomeko, and their diary contains many pleasing proofs of the blessed effects of the grace of Christ in the hearts of the believing Indians, of which will quote a few:

A sick brother said, that, whenever he felt impatience, he prayed to our Savior to deliver him from it, and that his prayer was always heard.

Jonathan meeting some white people, who had entered into violent a dispute about baptism and the Holy Communion, that they at last proceeded to blows, "These people," said he, "know certainly nothing of our Savior, for they speak of him, as we do of a strange country."

A trader was endeavoring to persuade the Indian Brother Abraham, that the Brethren were not privileged teachers.

He answered: "They may be what they will, but I know what they have told me, and what God has wrought within me. Look at my poor countrymen there, lying drunk before your door. Why do you not send privileged teachers, E 4" Perfection of the Missionaries. P. II.

"to convert them, if they can? Four years ago I also lived "like a beast, and not one of you troubled himself about "me; but when the Brethren came, they preached the croi "of Christ, and I have experienced the power of his blood, "according to their doctrine, so that I am freed from the do- "mination of sin. Such teachers we want."

In February some Indian deputies arrived in Shekomeko from Weftenhuck, to inquire whether the believing Indians would live in friendship with the new chief. Upon this the Indian Brethren preached the word of God to these people, adding: "When we once shall all believe in our Savior, "these embassies will be unnecessary, for we shall be very "good friends of course."

An Indian woman, who was baptized by a preacher in Weftenhuck, paid a visit to the believers in Shekomeko, and told them, that not having been guilty of any open off- "for two years after her baptism, she thought herself be- roughly converted. But by the persuasions of her relatives, who represented to her that dancing was no crime, the preacher himself having quoted from Scripture, that it "was "a time to dance," she had at length been persuaded to attend an Indian feast, where she was overcome by want, con- "necfs, and had ever since led a shameful life. Alarm at "her situation, she came hither to seek for help, if any migh "be found. The Indians described to her the great love of "Jesus Christ to poor repenting sinners, exemplified in the "history of Mary Magdalene.

The Indian Brother Daniel was asked upon his death-bed whether he was contented to die? To this he answered, with a smile, "that he was satisfied with whatever our Savior "should do with him." During his whole illness he preached "the Gospel to his countrymen, and his happy departure to "the Lord produced a great emotion in the hearts of all pre- "cent. The whole congregation in Shekomeko accompanied his corpse to the grave, and the missionary having prayed the "liturgy as usual, the Indian John stepped forward and de- "livered an emphatic discourse to the company present, con- "cerning
Persecution of the Missionaries.

The joy of a believer in the hour of death, which eat impression upon all. The same manner several of the baptized departed this year, rejoicing in God their Savior, and their proved a great comfort and edification to the Indian congregation consisted now of four classes; the baptized, candidates for baptism, and catechumens. The Lord laid a peculiar blessing upon each of the Holy Communion was very highly prized by unincants, as the most important of all transactions.

They examined their own hearts, preparatory to yment, with such strictness, that the missionaries with each individual separately, found more cause and encourage them, than to advise them to abstain. John expressed himself concerning this fact, the following effect: "That as he could firmly in every thing spoken by our Savior, so he was sure partook of his flesh and blood in the Holy Communion because the Lord himself had declared it." An Annunucient said: "I am frequently brought very he consideration of my great weakness and sinful- it whenever I approach to the Lord's Supper, I ved." An European man being once present as a when the sacrament was administered to the Indian on, declared afterwards, that though he had received the Communion many hundred times, yet he had received its powerful effect on the heart, as at this igh only a spectator; adding, that this was truly of the Lord, and that, while he lived, he should the impression it had made upon him.

As the Indian congregation situated, when sud- denly violent persecution arose. Some white people neighborhood continued to do every thing in their reduce the Indians from their connexion with the not only by base infinuations, but by endeavoring to drunkennes and other crimes amongst them.

The
The most dangerous of all their insinuations was, that the Brethren, being allied to the French in Canada, fomented the disturbances which then took place, and intended to fortify the Indians with arms, to fight against the English. The falsehood they spread about with such boldness, that at least the whole country was alarmed and filled with terror. The inhabitants of Shareen remained under arms for a whole week together, and some even forsook their plantations.

March the 1st, Mr. Hegeman, justice of the peace in Hickentown, arrived in Shekomeko, and informed Brother Mad that it was his duty to inquire, what fact of people the Brethren were, for that the most dangerous tenets and views were ascribed to them. He added, that as to himself, he disbelieved all those lying reports concerning them, and acknowledged the mischief in Shekomeko to be a work of God, because, by the labor of the Brethren, the most savage hearts had been so evidently changed, that he, and many of the Christians, were put to shame by their godly walk and conversation: but that, notwithstanding his own. persuasion it would be of service to the Brethren themselves, if he suffered minutely to examine into their affairs, with a view to silence their adversaries. Hearing that Brother Buettner was absent, he only desired that he might be informed of his return, and thus left them. After that, the Brethren remained unmolested till May, when Brother Buettner returning to Shekomeko, the missionaries informed the judge of the time of his arrival. Upon this, a corporal came the 14th, to demand their attendance on the Friday following in Pickipi, about thirty miles off, to exercise with the militia. But their names not being inserted in the list, they did not appear. Soon after, a similar message being sent, the names of the missionaries Rauch, Buettner, and Schleifen, exprestly mentioned, Brother Buettner went some days previous to the time appointed, to Captain Herrman in Reinhorn and represented to him, that as ministers called to proclaim the Gospel to the heathen, they ought to be exempted from military services. The captain replied, that they would necessity to prove and swear to the validity of their but dismissed them for the present. On the 18th another summons was issued, to require their ap-don the 23d. The day following a justice of the with some officers and twelve men, arrived from at Shekomeko. He informed the missionaries, that panies had been ready to march, to arrest them, but and prevented it, with a view to examine the whole self. He then desired to know who had sent them, at their business was? Brother Buettner replied, y were sent thither by the bishops of the protestant of the Brethren to preach the Gospel to the hea-the justice observed, that though he considered the as brought against them, respecting the Indians, to defendants; yet if the Brethren were papists, as a clergy-lover had positively asserted in a letter but lately they could not be suffered to remain in the coun-that, in general, every inhabitant of this land was pon to take two oaths, of which he delivered a copy. One was: "That King George being the sovereign of the kingdom, he would not in any courage the Pretender." The other: "That he d tranubstantiation, the worship of the Virgin purgatory, &c." Brother Buettner assured him, misionaries could attest to every point contained the, but that he hoped, they would not infilt upon aring; for though he did not condemn those who sworn oath, yet he wished, for confidence fake, to be
Persecution of the Missionaries. 59

; that he would however submit to every punihafter upon perjured perfrons, if he were found owers to his affirmation made by Ye or No. The pressed his satisfaction for the present, but engaged aries in a penalty of 40l. to appear before the court pt on the 16th of October. He then visited the Indians in their plantations, and took leave with ility.

June
June 22d, the missionaries went to Reinbeck in obedience to the summons received. As they were setting out, John said: "Go, Brethren, go in peace; I know to whom you are going, but our Savior is greater than they." They were now called upon in public court to prove that they were privileged teachers. Buettner produced his written vocation, and his certificate of ordination, duly signed by Bishop David Nitschman, adding, that the protestant church of the Brethren had been declared by the Archbishop of Canterbury to be an episcopal and apostolical church; and therefore they hoped, that they were entitled to the same toleration enjoyed by other protestant communities. All these evidences being rejected by the court, Buettner added: "Well then, Sir, if our sincere verbal declarations, proved by written documents and testimonies, that we have demeaned ourselves among the savages as Protestant teachers, do not suffice; and you are ignorant of the tenets of our church, and do not chuse to grant us the same privileges which other Protestants enjoy; we submit, and you have power to dictate our punishment, for we are subject to the magistrates, and cannot oppose them, nor would we, if we even could. We rather choose patiently to suffer." This firm declaration had some effect upon the commander of the militia and the justice, Mr. Beckman. He assured the missionaries, that he had no idea of punishing them, but only wished to examine into their affairs, and therefore desired them to appear before the court to be held at Pickipis in October next, by order of the governor of New York. He then invited them to dinner, and dismissed them with much civility.

But the accusations of their enemies increasing we fast, and a great stir being raised among the people, the magistrates thought proper to hasten the examination, and the missionaries were obliged to appear in Filkentown on 14th of July, their friend John Rau kindly accompany them. They were first called upon to take their oath; they remained silent in their request to be excused. The witnes affs were then heard against them. But their evidence partly without foundation, and partly nugatory and ag it made no impression upon the court. John Rau next examined. He answered, that he had known the men from their first coming into the country, and could othing but what tended to their honor; that he had anly been present with his whole family at their meet- and had never seen any thing to justify the strange ac- ions brought against them. Upon this the court broke and they were again honorably acquitted.

meanwhile the adversaries of the Brethren had repeatedly ed them of the above-mentioned dangerous views before ten governor of New York, till he at length resolved if for them, and to examine into the truth of these re- . The Brethren, Buettner and Senicman from Shok- ko, and Shaw from Bethlehem, went accordingly to York, and found upon their arrival, that the attention e whole town was rised. They were regarded as dif- of the public peace, deferring either imprisonment, ping, or banishment. But Mr. Beckman, who had ex- ed the Brethren in Reinbeck, happening at that time to New York, publicly took their part, and affirmed, that ed done by them among the Indians was undeniable.

sult 11th, these three Brethren were ordered before the nor and the court, and each separately examined. The questions were put, and nearly the same answers given, the foregoing examinations. But at the close Brother ter addressed the governor to this effect: "We are sub- t to God and the magistrates, and would rather patiently er than oppose them. But our cause is the cause of d, to whom the souls of all men belong. For his sake live among the savages, to preach the Gospel of Jesus ict unto them. We neither desire to gain money, nor et their land, nor shall we ever have these views. The ed our Savior has supported us hitherto, and he will port us for the future: for we are in his hands, and re unlimited confidence in him, being assured, that Nothing can befall us, without his permission. By him we have been taught to be faithful and obedient to those whom he has appointed to rule over us, not from motives of policy, but for conscience sake. Hitherto we have led under them a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty, and we wish always to do so. But we are resolved to suffer every thing rather than to act contrary to our conviction. We therefore humbly intreat your Excellency not to burthen our consciences by the exacting of an oath, and to consider, that though we are poor people, and suffer contempt and every other afflication, yet we stand under the protection of God, who is Lord over the confidences of all men. We also pray most earnestly, that we may be allowed to proceed unmolested in the blessed work of the conversion of the heathen, promising to show all due obedience and subordination to your Excellency upon every occasion, as we are in duty and conscience bound to do." Upon this the Brethren were informed that they should remain in town, till further orders from the governor.

“nothing

The day following they were examined by the council upon the same questions, and notwithstanding Brother Bentner's gentle remonstrance, were informed, that it appeared most proper for them to quit the country. They should however still wait for a final decision from the governor. This they received by his secretary, August 21st, implying, that they had leave to return home, but should live according to their religious tenets, in such a manner, that no suspicions might arise concerning them. The secretary added a certificate of their acquittance in writing, to secure them against any injury from the mob.

The Brethren Bentner and Shaw arrived in Shekomeke on the 9th of September; but Brother Sensman went to Bethlehem, to give an account of the above-mentioned transactions. Brother Bentner was however obliged to go again to Phipps in October, the summons being yet in force. He was already suffered greatly in his health, and was detained there for two days in very severe weather. At last, by the interference of a friend, his cause was brought forward, and having received a dismission from the governor himself; he was liberated for the present, without further examination. When he came home, John related what he had felt, in considering the proceedings of the white people, and how his wife, thinking of Brother Buettner, while at work in the forest, at length grew fo heavy and sorrowful that she wept, and cried aloud: "My God, why do these men plague Brother Buettner? why will they not let him come home? He is ill, has done nothing amiss, and instrusts us how we may be saved." John added, that he had commended his wife, and reminded her, that the disciples of Jesus had not fared any better.

The Brethren Mack and Senfeman visited the Indians in New England, and it appeared as though many of them received the Gospel as a message of peace.

It now appeared plain to every candid observer, that the excursions against the Brethren arose either from misconception or malice. Many people, and even some of disfavored rank among the magistrates, acknowledged the sincerity of their views, and the good arising from their efforts for the preaching of the Gospel had produced evident a change in the conduct of the Indians, that every beholder was amazed at it. Their adversaries therefore were obliged to adopt other measures, and now endeavored, either to make them take the oaths, or quit the country.
This scheme succeeded. They exerted all their influence to gain an act of assembly in New York, dated in October, by which all suspicious persons were enjoined to take the oaths of allegiance, and in case of refusal, to be expelled the province. Another act passed, positively prohibiting the Brethren to instruct the Indians.

The missionaries could do nothing but silently obey, and thus left off meeting the congregation. But the Indian Brethren continued to meet together, and the power and grace
Persecution of the Missionaries.

The grace of God was made manifest among them in an ordinary manner.

December the 15th, the sheriff and three justices peace arrived at Shekomeko, and, in the name of vernor and council of New York, prohibited all of the Brethren, commanding the missionaries to appear the court in Pickipty, on the 17th instant. Buettner being very ill, the Brethren Rauch and peared, when the above-mentioned act was read to by which the ministers of the congregation of the B employed in teaching the Indians, were expelled from, under pretense of being in league with the and forbid, under a heavy penalty, never more among the Indians, without having first taken the mentioned oaths of allegiance. Buettner wrote in his to Bethlehem: "We are either to depart, or to heavy penalty. They threaten to seize upon all fees. We have but little, and if they take an little, then we shall have as much left as our L when on earth."

Amidst these heavy trials the Brethren found strength in adhering to that scriptural advice: quietly for the salvation of the Lord. Therefore when the of families in Shekomeko resolved to make complaints of the unjust treatment of their teachers, and sent a petition to the governor of New York; sionaries persuaded them with kind words, to be patiently to suffer.

Meanwhile Bishop A. G. Spangenberg, to the care of the affairs of the Brethren in North America committed, arrived in New York. His first step was the persecuted congregation at Shekomeko. He with Captain Garrick on the 6th of November, there till the 18th. In an account he sent to the cessions of the Brethren concerning this visit, he writes: "The nearer we approached to Shekomeko, the mo ration we found among all ranks of people, for the g
Ch. IV. Persecution of the Missionsaries. 65

"of God in that place. The justice of the peace at Milly, about four miles from Shkemcko, accompanied us, and on the road declared, that he would rather suffer his right hand to be cut off, than treat the Brethren conformably to the act passed against them, for that he was thoroughly convinced, that the grace of God had by their means wrought miracles in that place. But when, upon our arrival, we were eye-witnesses of it, then, dear Brethren, dead indeed must that man be, who could refrain from shedding tears of joy and gratitude for the grace bestowed upon this people. It is impossible to express what is felt here; God himself has done the work. As we rode into the town, we met a man standing by the road side, with a most remarkable countenance. We immediately thought of John, as described to us by Count Zinzendorf, and ventured to address him by that name; nor were we mistaken; he received us with great kindness, and brought us immediately to the missionaries. Then the venerable Elder Abraham came to see us, saluted us, and though he was marked after the Indian custom, with the figure of a flame upon each cheek, yet the grace of our Savior was so visible in his countenance, that we were struck with awe and amazement. The rest of the attendants came one after the other, and bid us welcome in the most affectionate manner. Indeed there was not one of the congregation, who did not express joy at our arrival. They appeared altogether as meek as lambs. While we were thus surrounded by our Indian Brethren and Sisters, I took up a Bible, and the following text occurred to me: Wherefore shall we do the will of my Father which is in Heaven, the same is my mother, and sisters, and brother. An Indian who had deviated from the right path, wished to be readmitted, but the Brethren could not trust him as yet. When we afterwards held a love-feast with all the baptized, seventy in number, he came likewise, stood at a distance, and looked upon his Brethren with repentance and contrition in his countenance. We called him forward, Part II.
Upon which he went and sat down in a corner. Duri the love-feast, the presence of the Lord was powerful felt. I spake of the happiness granted unto us, by virt; of the sacrifice made by Jesus Christ, appealing to the own experience, and they affirmed what I said, to be tr I then spake of following our Savior's steps, and what we have to observe as his disciples. Afterwar Ifas exorted the Brethren to be continually humble a low in their own eyes, never to forget the sufferings a death of Jesus, and not only to think on it in Shekome but in the woods, and when out an-hunting, &c. 71 closed our love-feast with prayer and supplication, a with tears commended these precious souls, and c venerable Brethren who have labored amongst them, God, our Almighty Savior, being greatly comforted a edified by their faith and firmness under such he:
trials."

Bishop Spangenberg then inquired minutely into the c circumst ames of each individual, exhorting them all to rema faithful to the Lord, and firmly to believe, that he wo not forsake them. In doing this he found much reaso rejoice over the course of the congregation, and the de rations of the believing Indians.

The congregation had not increased so much in numE:
in the past, as in the foregoing year, eight persons a having been baptized. But their growth in the grace = knowledge of our Savior was very evident, and notwithst ing grievous temptations and snares, purposely laid in E way, most of them had walked worthy of the God a Brother Buettner wrote at the close of this year to Biff-Spangenberg, concerning two of the baptized, who E deviated, "Rejoice with me, for I have found the sheep whd were lost. Jonathan is again become my brother, a not only he, but Jonah also, who has been unhappy f these thirteen months past. I write this with tears thanks and praise to God. My heart followed Jonah a wherever he went, and I thought we must go and se express this sentiment, but for the present, I appear to

P. 1
"for him, though he were forty miles off, hunting in the "woods, &c."

This being resolved on, Brother Rauch set out after him, to offer him forgiveness, and peace with his Brethren, if he would accept of it. When Jonathan perceived him coming, he was frightened, and flocked like one thunderstruck. The missionary accosting him in a friendly tone, told him the aim of his visit, adding, that if he should fly to the distance of two or three hundred miles, the Brethren would still seek after him. Jonathan could make no reply for amazement, but only said in broken sentences:

"Does Buettner remember me still? Are you come merely to seek me? Have you nothing else to do here? I am wretched, I am in a bad state."

Brother Rauch perceiving that his heart was touched, and powerfully awakened, said nothing more that evening. But in the morning Jonathan repeated his questions, adding more to the same purpose, and then, from a truly broken and contrite heart, began to weep most bitterly. Nor could he comprehend how the brethren could possibly love such a miserable sinner, who had grieved them so much. Brother Rauch answered, "We love you still; but your Savior loves you much more."

Upon this he gave full vent to his tears, spoke much of the state of his heart, and described his wretched and woeful condition. When the missionary left him, he begged that the Brethren would pray for him, and promised to return soon. Brother Buettner, whose heart burned with love towards this poor suffering sinner, thought the time long before he could receive him into his arms; for he was meditating day and night, how he might lead souls to Christ, preserve them for him, and recall those who had gone astray; and when thus engaged, he forgot eating and drinking, and even in bodily weakness. At length his dear Jonathan arrived in Siekomeko, and with him the above-mentioned Jonah, but very bashful and full of fears. Brother Buettner immediately set out to meet him, receiving him as the father received his prodigal son. Jonathan entirely recovered his former peace and happitted, and ever after walked in a steady course. The grace of Jesus operated so most powerfully upon the breast of Jonah; he was afterwards beloved by all, as a true disciple of the Lord Jesus, and his walk proved an edification to the whole congregation.

CHAPTER V.

The return of the above-mentioned lost sheep, was one of the last pleasing events, of which that faithful servant of Jesus Christ among the Indians, Gottlob Buettner, was witness.

Frequent attacks of spitting of blood had, for a considerable time pained, gradually weakened his constitution; but the hard life he led among the Indians, and above all the persecutions, attended with frequent and troublesome journeys in bad weather, and with many grievous afflictions in mind and body, increased his infirmities, and hastened his dissolution. He fell gently and happily asleep in Jesus, February 23d, 1745, in the presence of all the Indian affilliates. Having exhorted them with his dying lips, to abide faithful to the end, he desired the Indians to sing that verse:

"O may our souls ne'er moved be,
"From thee, my faithful Savior, &c."

with others of the same import, and, while they were aging, breathed his last, and entered into the joy of his Indians wept over him, as children over a beloved pa-

Indeed he had loved them with the tenderness of a t, and for three years, so intirely devoted himself to service, that every faculty he possessed was wholly em-d for their good. To show their regard, they dressed wife in white, and interred his remains with great foi-

in the burying-ground at Shekomeko, watering his with numberless tears: they even used to go and weep for a long time after. The following words were bed upon his tomb-stone:

here lies the body of Gottlob Buettner, who according

the commandment of his crucified God and Savior, ight the glad tidings to the heathen, that the blood

Jesu had made an atonement for their sins. As many embraced this doctrine in faith, were baptized into the th of the Lord. His last prayer was, that they might preserved until the day of our Lord Jesus Christ. He born December 20th, 1716, and fell asleep in the February 23rd, 1745."

up his burial the believing Indians held a council, to der whether they should not quit Shekomeko; fearing left to themselves, they might be gradually over-if sin ful seductions; especially as the Elders in Beth-were compelled, by the act above mentioned, to recall missionaries from Shekomeko, that they might not urther occasion for suspicion, by continuing to reside

. The grief felt by these faithful witnesses of Jesu it in leaving their beloved congregation, was past de-

ion. But they patiently submitted to wait till God reveal their innocence and dispel the raging storm.

ver, the congregation in Shekomeko continued to meet their usual order, to edify each other, and only now and one or more Brethren, acquainted with the language, ted to visit and advise with them. They conversed in an edifying manner with each individually, and sometimes held conferences with the Indian assistants, attending likewise the meetings held by them. The grace of God so powerfully prevailed among them, that the hearts of these visitors were filled with wonder and praise. A missionary wrote to Bethlehem: "I arrived in the evening at "Isaac's cottage, and found it filled with Indians, before "whom Isaac was bearing a glorious testimony of our Sa- "vior and his atonement. I would not enter, but went "out into the wood, kneeled down, and thanked our Sa- "vior for the abundance of his grace, praying that he would "continue to reveal himself among them."

The Indians came frequently to Bethlehem, and sometimes spent several weeks there in large companies. They were always received with great cordiality and friendship. Conferences were held with the most faithful and approved among the assistants, treating of the course of the congrega- tion. Thus they acquired a better knowledge of the duties of their office, in watching over the spiritual welfare of the people committed to their care, and always returned home, strengthened in faith.

Meanwhile the persecutions against the Brethren engaged in the mission, did not cease, and sometimes they were even cruelly treated. Nor can it be denied, that some occasion was given by the inconsiderate zeal of the awakened Indians. They would often boldly reprove the white peo- ple for their unwise way of life, and whenever they were interrogated, spoke with truth without any reserve or cau- tion. For instance, a Dutch clergyman in Wellenbuch, asked an Indian, whom he had baptized, whether he had been in Shekomeko? whether he had heard the mission preach, and how he liked him? The Indian answered: "That he had been there, and had attended to the mission's words, and liked to hear them; that he would "rather hear the missionary than him, for when the "mer spoke, it was as though his words laid hold "of his heart, and a voice within said: That is truth; but..." he was always playing about the truth, and never came to the point: that he had no love for their souls, for when he had once baptized them, he let them run wild, never troubling himself any further about them; that he acted much worse than one who planted Indian corn, for," added he, "the planter sometimes goes to see whether his corn grows or not.

Upon another occasion, a white man asked John: "Where ther the Brethren were papists?" John wished to know, who the papists were; and when he heard of the worship of images, he answered, "that he supposed those people were more like papists, who worshipped their cows, horles, and plantations, as they had also done formerly."
The white man replied: "But why are the people so enraged at the Brethren?" John answered: "Why did the people crucify the Lord Jesus, and throw Paul bound into prison?"

These bold, but often unreasonable reproaches increased the enmity of the adversaries, and those Brethren who travelled about in the concerns of the missions, had to suffer much oppression and persecution on that account. This was the case with the Brethren Frederic Polt, and David Zeilberger.

The latter went with the Brethren from Georgia to Penn-
"ylvania as a boy, and having turned with his whole heart unto the Lord, resolved to devote himself wholly to the Service of God among the heathen. Having left year received some instruction in the Iroquois language from Brother Pyracleus, he travelled with Brother Frederic Polt in the beginning of this year into their country, with view to improve in it. The political conduct of the Six Nations had of late appeared very fucicious, and the Brethren being accused of an intention to affect the French in the war against England, it was no won-ner that the aim of their journey appeared doubtful. The enemies of the mission soon accused them of treacherous views, and accordingly they were unexpectedly arrested in Albany, and after much abufe, brought to New York, and confined.
confined in prison. The text appointed for the day of their imprisonment happened to be, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake." Matt. v. 11. These words comforted and encouraged the Brethren in prison, and they spent their time very usefully, in making further progress in the language of the Iroquois.

The Lord at this time inclined the heart of Mr. Thomas Noble, a respectable merchant in New York, to care for them. He visited them in prison, sent them provisions and other necessaries; and dispatched his clerk, Henry van Vleck, to Bethlehem, with an account of the calamity which had befallen them. Among the many visits they received in prison, one from a New England gentleman appears worthy of notice. He beheld them with great earnestness, and at last broke out in these words: "Though you are unknown to me, yet I am fully convinced that the accusations brought against you are all lies, and I believe that you suffer for Christ's sake. I am amazed at your resignation in all but indeed it cannot but be a blessed situation, to be imprisoned for the name of Jesus Christ, for all love the Lord Jesus must expect to be hated and cut off." After repeated examinations, the Brethren being found innocent of every charge brought against them, they were at length dismissed, and returned to Bethlehem after five weeks' imprisonment.

When the missionary, Brother Mack, his wife, the widow of the late Brother Buttnner, and Brother Pott's wife, besides several small children, returned from Shickemoko to Bethlehem, they met with much trouble, through the enmity of some enraged judges at Sopos. Brother Pott's wife, being an Indian woman, furnished a pretence for detaining the whole company as traitors. The mob assembled, and great mischief might have followed had not Colonel Loewenstein very providentially arrived and having publicly reprimanded the judge who detained them, set them at liberty; however, they were insulted by the Baptism of the first Delawares.

73

and had to suffer much in the open street from and violent rain, before they were permitted to on their journey, loaded with curses and re-

π Mack closes his report with these words: "I con- the importance of our Lord's advice; Pray for them lepitefully use you and persecute you."

idist all these tribulations, the Brethren were greatly by perceiving, that their labor was not in vain in til they had the joy to baptize the first fruits of the among the Delaware nation. The frequent visits to the Delaware towns had as yet been with little success; but the believing Mahikans, ts of Shekomeko, having contracted an acquaint- h many Delawares, who travelled through their o Philadelphia, and these two nations understand- other, both speaking a dialect of the same language, kans became the apostles of the Delawares.

bove-mentioned firstlings were a man and his wife, for some time eagerly heard the word of life, with sion upon their hearts, but suffered themselves to sted from asking for baptism, by their numerous fanexion. At length they were enabled to sur-these difficulties, expressed a great desire after the of their fins in the blood of Jesus, and begged for.

They were accordingly baptized in Bethlehem, d Gottlieb, and Mary. Being both of the royal t high-born relations were greatly displeased at a ch, according to their notions, was a disgrace to a, and therefore first sent a message, merely to de-they would return on a visit to their friends. But ized, fearing that their fowls might suffer harm, e go. Upon this the relations resolved to take y by force, and thirty-six of them, among whom aul young warriors, came to Bethlehem in this having at first in a very turbulent manner. Being led led into a large hall, they were plentifully served with me and drink. Gottlieb and Mary partook of their rep and other Indian Brethren and Sifters, who happened be in Bethlehem on a visit, came to bid them welcome. I shop Spangenberg also, with some of the elders of the co gregation, went and expressed satisfaction at their vil Amazed at so kind a reception, their anger abated, th countenances were softened, and conversation became live. After dinner, Gottlieb and Mary, with other Indians, ac companied them to the lodgings prepared for them. Here th opened their commiilion, and, addressing Gottlieb, said, if they had heard that he and his wife were baptized, and had come slaves of the white people. But as they loved the they could not help coming to hear the truth of matter. Gottlieb, glad of so favorable an opportu to bear a testimony to the truth, boldly answered, "t "he had been formerly a wicked man, and a lover of the "as they all might well remember; but having heard, " God was manifest in the flesh, and had died for the " and would deliver all those, who believe in him, from " their sins, he had wished to experience the truth of it; " he might not more be obliged to serve sin and the dev " By receiving this doctrine, he had not become a slave, " remained as free as formerly." The other Indians, fent, confirmed Gottlieb's speech, and exhorted them become like wise partakers of the grace of Jesus Christ. The savages seemed extremely uneasy during the whole conversation, and early the next morning set off on the return. Some time after, they sent a message to Gott deploring, that having so great a knowledge of God, he we come and instruct them. He hesitated a long while, but last went, and was immediately asked why he had not so sooner. He answered: 'You know that when a child "just born, it cannot speak. Thus I could not speak " meditatively after my conversion, but now I am com " tell you something of our Savior.' He then pressed the Gospel to them; describing the happiness to be so in Jesus, and returned full of joy and comfort. In September he had the satisfaction to see his own brother follow him, who also was baptized, and called Joachim.

Ch. V. Baptism of the first Delaware.

Another Delaware Indian was taken ill on the road to Bethlehem, where he had paid frequent visits to the Brethren, but without expressing the least concern for his soul. But now he sent to them, begging that they might come to see him, "for the sake of that great love they were as known to bear to the Indians." His request was granted, and having spoken with great contrition of the evil state of his heart, he recommended himself to the remembrance and prayers of the Brethren. They heard soon after, that he departed this life in the same hour, in which he was included in the public prayers of the congregation. He had two wives, and exhorted them, to go immediately after his death to Bethlehem, and to turn to Jesus. One of them followed his advice, and was baptized the year after.

A synod having been appointed to meet this year in Bethlehem, the Brethren Rauch and Bishop were sent to Shelonoketo with a letter, desiring the Indian congregation there to send a deputy.

The aim of a synod having been explained to them, the fathers of families met to choose a deputy. They were first addressed, with a view to explain in what manner a Brother sent by them to the synod, should act; namely, in their behalf, with their spirits, and supported by the prayers of the whole congregation: that if any one had a concern, of whatever kind it might be, he might entrust the deputy with it, who should mention it to the synod, which would be the same as though he himself were present. That the deputy would bring back the answers, with the blessing of the synod, and communicate to them what he had enjoyed. Their unanimous choice fell upon Jonathan, and they declared, that they could impart to him every thought of their hearts. At taking leave, they sent various messages to the congregation. Jacob said: "I salute the *congre-" congregation, and let them know, that when my heart is at peace with our Savior, I am also at peace with them. I have found a love to the congregation at Bethlehem was particularly evident on this occasion. Indeed this brotherly love was mutual, and their deputy brought a renewed confirmation of it, upon his return from the synod.

Perhaps nothing could be a more evident proof of the change wrought in the disposition of the believing Indian than their wish to have their children educated in Bethlehem, that they might be preserved as much as possible from seduction. For the love of the heathen Indians towards their children is so excessive, that they cannot bear to be deprived of the sight of them, for any length of time. But now the parents most earnestly besought the Brethren to take their children, and to educate them in the fear of the Lord. This request was granted to several, some time after.

As the character of a whole community may be known from certain traits in the dispositions of its members, will insert a few extracts from the diary of the Indian congregation of 1745.

In a conversation of the Indian affiancés, one of them began to weep; being asked the cause of his weeping, he answered, that he had seen a man, working so hard, that his shirt and whole body seemed bathed in sweat; he immediately thought of the sweat and anguish of our Savior the garden on his account, which melted his heart into tears.

John related, that during the late rumor of war, he pensively entered an English town, the inhabitants were all in great dread of the Indians. The people surrounded him, to inquire what news he brought from Indian country; he answered, "News of all kinds; but most interesting news to me are, that it is good to believe..."
"On the Lord Jesus Christ," upon which the people left him to go quietly about his business.

A baptized woman's cottage was burnt down, while she was working in her plantation, and but few of her goods were saved. When she returned home, every one expressed great sorrow for her loss, upon which she replied: That she had been on that very day, while at work, considering, that she had gained all her property by an illegal traffic with rum, and therefore she was satisfied to lose it in this manner.

An Indian Sister gave a love-feast to the whole congregation, in token of her joy over the conversion of one of her countrywomen. On this occasion a brother related with great humility, that having been lately prented at an Indian feast, he had been seduced to enter into some of their old heathenish practices, but feeling immediately strong rebukes of conscience he left off on a sudden. This occasioned much inquiry on the part of the Indians, which he answered, by causing them not to compel him to do any thing which might destroy the peace of God in his heart.

An Indian woman from Meniffing paid a visit to John, and told him, that as soon as she had a good heart, she would also turn to the Lord Jesus. "Ah," replied John, "you want to walk on your head! How can you get a good heart, unless you come first to Jesus?"

An European being prented when a Brother from Bethlem came to visit the Indians, and seeing the affectionate manner in which they received him, declared afterwards, that of all the people he had ever seen, none were possessed of such sincere affection as these Indians.

An Indian attendant addressed the baptized in their meeting in the following manner: "My dear Brethren and Sisters; I have nothing to say to you but a few words concerning Jesus. Jesus labored hard to gain salvation for us, even so that his sweat was as great drops of blood falling to the ground. And now Jesus says to us: 'I have redeemed you all, I have given my life and blood for you.' Therefore let us give him our hearts. We may now receive eternal life."
"life; but by virtue of his blood alone. Whosoever be "lieveth in him, shall live eternally; but whosoever does no
"believe, will certainly die in his sins. However, not "need die, but all may have eternal life if they come to Jezu;
"for he will receive them gladly, &c."

Though we had reason to be thankful that a mutual inte-course could be kept up between Bethlehem and Shekomeko:
yet it was evident, that the suspension of the regular feria of the missionaries would finally be productive of harm to the congregation. The Holy Communion could not be administered to them, and thus the poor Indians were deprived one of the most powerful means of growth in grace. The catechumens could not be baptized in Shekomeko, and but few who were baptized during this period, came in that vi to Bethlehem. The discourses of the Indian assistants we indeed attended with blessing to the hearers, being dictated by hearts, filled with the love of Christ, and an experien caption of the truth of what they advanced. They w the language of the heart, and consequently went to heart: but they could not be called doctrinal. Now that the missionaries never detained themselves long in discours of doctrinal points, yet they wished to follow the commen tment of our Savior, and to teach them all things, which commanded his disciples; for which, more knowledge: gifts were required, than the Indians could be expected to possess. It appeared likewise, that the calamitous infa tritions, incessantly urged by the enemies of the mission, made some impression on the minds of a few of the baptis
The Brethren were so strongly accused of an intention reduce the believers to a state of slavery, that even one the assistants began to listen to it, and to lose his confide the missionaries. He soon acknowledged his wi with many tears; but yet this circumstance proved, in w danger these good people were of suffering shipwreck in faith, and the Brethren were therefore very desirous of j cing them, if possible, out of the way of temptation. Th therefore resolved to propose, that they should remove of the province of New York, and settle upon some eligible spot in Pennsylvania. The plan was, first to place them in the neighborhood of Bethlehem, and then to remove them to Wajomick on the Susquehanna, where they might have enjoyed perfect liberty of conscience, and been left exposed to the seductions of the white people, and not called upon to take share in the war. An account was also received, that the Shawanofoe, a few excepted, had removed from Wajomick to the Ohio. But that no difficulty might be made on the part of the Iroquois, to whom this country belonged, the Brethren resolved to send an embassy to the great council at Onondago.

Bishop Spangenberg, Conrad Weisler, David Zeisberger, and Sheboch, were to undertake this commission, and set out for Onondago in May. They suffered many hardships by the way, but experienced also some remarkable proofs of the kind providence of God. Having been without provisions for several days, they found a quarter of a bear, hung up for the use of travellers by an Indian hunter, who could not carry it off, according to a custom described in the First Part of this work. Such timely relief they received more than once, and were therefore encouraged to assist other hungry travellers whom they met on the road. One day they found two Iroquois warriors, who had lost all their provisions, were almost naked, and had travelled near 500 miles. One of them was also on the road to Onondago. Conrad Weisler asked him, how he intended to reach that place in such a situation? His answer was: "God, who dwells in heavens, has created the earth and all creatures therein, and he feeds numbers of men and beasts in the wilderness. He can and will feed me also." While they were in company with the Brethren, they received their full share out of the common kettle, and thus he was fed according to his faith.

Bishop Spangenberg and his company being arrived in Onondago, the great council renewed the covenant made between Count Zinzendorf and the Iroquois, with great solemnity; lemnity; the three Brethren were adopted as their coun-men, each receiving a peculiar name, and their propotal to remove the congregation of believing Indians to Wajomick, was well received by the Iroquois. But contrary to all expectation, the Indians in Shekomeko refused to accept it.
They alleged, that the governor of New York had particularly commanded them to stay in their own town, promising them his protection; and that, on this account, they could not leave the country, without giving new cause for suspicions, and encouraging a new persecution against the missionaries: they further intimated, that if even they should emigrate, their unbaptized friends and relations would yt remain there and enter upon their old sinful courses, which would grieve them exceedingly. Abraham in particular very zealously in dissuading the Indians from acceding to the above proposal, by representing, that Wajomick lay in the road of the warriors to the Catawbas, and in a count-abounding with savages; that the women were so wanting that they seduced all the men; and consequently their a quaintance might prove very hurtful to the young people, &c.

But soon after this, an event happened, which obliged the Indians to follow the advice given them by the Brethren; for the white people came to a resolution, to drive the believing Indians from Shekomeko by main force, under pretence, that the ground upon which the town was built, belonged to other people, who would soon come and take postession. The Indians applied for help to the governor of New York, but finding their petition not attended to, as that they would be at last compelled to emigrate, they beg-to take the proposal made by the Brethren into more serio deliberation; and as several expressed an inclination to linear Bethlehem, their visits to that place became more frequently towards the close of the year.

The situation of the congregation at Shekomeko became now very distressing. The white people seized upon the land, and even appointed a watch to prevent all visits from Bethlehem. The war between the English and French occasioned Shokomeko without Missionaries.

ed a general alarm. The Indians were afraid of both but the English mistrusted their neutrality, and in laces went even armed to the church. The unbeliev-ians in Wettenhuck made several attempts to draw ian Indians in Shokomeko into their party; and some in the neighborhood exerted themselves, to persuad join their congregations, partly by cohensumptous inis against the Brethren in general, and partly by accusing aries of base views. The believing Indians were frequently obliged to spend much time among im-sole to get a livelihood. Many of them were deep-, contracted both by their profligate lives previous conversion, and by suffering great impositions from neighbors. These debtors were now subject to ishment, and even threatened with imprisonment.
any possibility of paying their creditors, and not run away, they had no other refuge, but to beg the ation at Bethlehem to assist them, which was done at willingness. But the greatest grievance was this, the entire removal of their faithful missionaries, some only fallen into deviations, but even into a sinful which soon occasioned a division among them; and ch slander, ending at last in confusion and misery. :
melancholy change of affairs caused the most pau the Indian inhabitants, and to the congregation at m; to whom these things were mentioned by the for th great sorrow, and the Brethren united in most prayer and supplication to God, for this poor perfec ciple, that he would help and relieve them by his power.

II. C
CHAPTER VI.

1746.

Emigration from Shekomeko. Temporary Ri.
the converted Indians in Bethlehem and Fri.

In the beginning of 1746, Bishop Frederic C came from Europe, to assist Bishop Spangen superintendency of all the establishments of the North America, of which the million among the In principal objects. Both bishops therefore, with the Bethlehem, zealously exerted themselves to afford to the oppressed congregation in Shekomeko. His George Thomas, governor of Pennsylvania, being in the situation of the Christian Indians, had order who took refuge in Pennsylvania should be protected quiet practice of their religious profession. Th however could not immediately give up the idea of the Indians to Wajomick in the free Indian ten willing to prevail upon them to agree to this pro
the missionary, Martin Mack, in March, to Wajomick rately to survey the country. He travelled in con two Delaware of great respectability, who had vi lehm. They showed the tenderest concern for hi the road, carrying him through brooks and rivers shoulders. The aim of this journey was not and as no persuasions could prevail on the Indian thither, they invited them to Bethlehem, permitti build and plant near the settlement. At this per gregation in Shekomeko was perished more Their enemies reported, that a thousand French ti on their march to the province, with whom the l Shekomeko would join, and then ravage the co fire and sword. This rumor spread such terror, particularly in Reinebeck, that the inhabitants demanded a warrant of the justice to go and kill all the Indians at Shekomeko. Though the warrant was not granted, it was soon known in Shekomeko, that it had been demanded, and the grievances and oppressions suffered by the Indians rote at length to such a pitch, that though their attachment to Shekomeko was very great, some of them at last resolved to accept the invitation of the Brethren at Bethlehem.

Thus ten families, in all forty-four persons, left Shekomeko in April, with sorrow and tears, and were received in Bethlehem with tendernefs and compassion. Several of them immediately built cottages near the settlement. Their morning and evening meetings were regulated, and the service performed in the Mahikan language. This comforted them in some measure for the loss of the regular service at Shekomeko, which was most precious to them. Soon after, two Indian girls were baptized in Bethlehem Chapel, in presence of the whole congregation, and a great number of friends, and this solemn transaction proved again some consolation to their countrymen. The Indian emigrants now conceived a lively and confident hope, that they would not suffer materially by their removal from Shekomeko. What most encouraged them was this, that after a due examination, whether they still lived in the faith of Jesus Christ, in brotherly love, and unity of spirit, they were permitted to partake of the Holy Communion at Bethlehem. Their faith and inward life being thus strength ened, the Brethren endeavored to introduce some good regulations for their conduct. To this end a council was formed, consisting of all the fathers of families, at which the baptized mothers were permitted to be present. This is not usual with the Indians, but having found that hitherto many salutary resolutions, formed in the council by the men, had failed, owing to difficulties generally raised by the women, it was thought proper to admit them also, that they might hear the reasons and be convinced of the propriety. propriety of the regulations proposed. This had the desired effect, and every thing was done to general satisfaction.

This small Indian settlement, called Friedenshuetten, was esteemed merely for temporary convenience; the Brethren judging that an Indian town could not be supported so near to Bethlehem. They therefore did all in their power to procure a piece of land, where the Indians might build, plant, and live in their own way, and at length purchased two hundred acres, situated on the junction of the rivers Mahony and Lecha, beyond the Blue Mountains, about thirty miles from Bethlehem, and the same distance from Wajomick. The missionary Mack went with some white Brethren, and some of the Indian assistants, to mark out the new town, which they called Gnadenhuetten, or Tents of Grace. Some days after, other Indians followed, and being much pleased with the situation, they resolved this year to plant both near Bethlehem and at Gnadenhuetten, and that the men should remain in either place, as circumstances required; that the clearing of ground and building at Gnadenhuetten might speedily advance. The Indians were diligent, che-ful, and active, and used to speak to each other of the re-ful with which they now could labor, since their souls were engaged with the Lord Jesus, who labored hard for their salvation, desiring their good progress and the preservation of the bodies, not so much to their own efforts and prudence, as to the grace and mercy of God. The Brethren were much edified by these declarations, acknowledging them to the blessed effects of the Gospel, and a full reward for all the trouble and pains they had bestowed upon these nations.

When the news of this new Settlement reached Sheko-mecho and Pachgatsch, many of the Indians in those places were also induced to remove to Gnadenhuetten, so that in a short time the latter place contained more Christian Indians than the two former. Their enemies, though resolved
paring for the journey, set out without tear. One said, "If we must be obliged either to stay here, or to another place, and not to Bethlehem, you might take our lives from us." Thus one family after departed in such cheerful reliance upon the grace and support of the Lord, that all who saw them were edified.

This period, divine service was daily and regarded to in Shekomeko, and the Indian attendants taught to the truth of the Gospel before many tribes passed through the town. Their discourses in, but powerful, and proceeding from their ex-lest a good impression upon many. Their manning hymns was particularly edifying. After the they treated the strangers with great hospitable when they had no other place to accommodate their table in the chapel; conversing with them salvation of their souls in an useful manner.

Migration from Shekomeko and Pachagtoch to Utten was attended with no small embarrassment, the Indians and the congregation at Bethlehem. A family intended to emigrate, the neighbors brought bills, demanding payment, and the neither able to read or write, were compelled to easfoned an expence, which they could never expect to be reimbursed. The settling at Gnadenhuetten was also expensive. The land being covered with forest trees, and thick shrubs, was cleared and planted. The Brethren joind the Indians in this work, and had their meals in common with them. But the latter being unacquainted with husbandry and unable to bear much fatigue, the heavier work of course fell upon the white Brethren. Considering this work as done in the service of God, they spared no exertion, and were the more desirous of completing the building of Gnadenhuetten, being well convinced, that the present mode of life, entirely different from that to which the Indians were accustomed, was prejudicial to their health. The common table, though convenient, could not be continued, chiefly on account of the singular appearance to the heathen Indians. The white Brethren, who had the care of the provisions, being necessitated to be frugal in the distribution, the Indian Brethren could not treat their visitors with their usual profusion. Thus the savages conceived a notion, that the Christian Indians suffered want, and were become slaves to the white people, especially when they saw them perform manual labor, to which Indians were not accustomed. A soon therefore as circumstances would permit, each family was put into possession of its own lot of ground, and having received some instruction relative to the cultivation of it, began its separate housekeeping.

In July the congregation at Gnadenhuetten received regulations, the different offices were appointed, the rules of the congregation made public, and the chapel consecrated with great solemnity; all present and future inhabitants of this place being recommended with prayer a supplication to the grace and protection of God our Saviour.

In Shekomeko the prospect appeared daily more promising. The rumor of the war between the French and English increased. The French Indians having made an incursion into the country within a day's journey from that town, setting fire to the houses, and murdering the inhabitants, the English called upon all who were able to bear arms, to rise in their own defence. Consequently the Christian Indians remaining in Shekomeko received the same message, and began now to acknowledge their error, in not following the salutary advice given them by the Brethren. Several joined the army, and the rest lived in continual apprehension and dread, nor could they be visited by Brethren from Bethlehem till the 24th of July 1746, when the Brethren Hagen and Poitt were sent thither by the elders at Bethlehem. They held a love-feast with the remaining baptized, and by a written deed of gift, secured the chapel to the Indians, as their property. They then recommended them in prayer to the good Shepherd who laid down his life for the sheep, that he would not suffer them to stray, nor to be plucked out of his hands.

Thus the Brethren concluded their labors in Shekomeko with sorrowful hearts, yet praising God, who had first caued the light of the Gospel to shine unto the heathen in this place. Within the space of two years, sixty-one grown persons had here been made partakers of holy baptism, exclusive of those baptized in Bethlehem.

The converted Indians were now dispersed in different places, at a considerable distance from each other, viz., in Gnadenhuetten, Bethlehem, Pachgatogoch, Wechquatnach, and Shekomeko. Some were so much attached to the latter place, that notwithstanding the war, and other troubles, they could not resolve to emigrate. Gnadenhuetten now became a very regular and pleasant town. The church stood in the valley, on one side the Indian houses forming a crescent, upon a rising ground; and on the other, stood the house of the missionary and the burying-ground. The road to Wajomick and other Indian towns lay through the settlement. The missionaries tilled their own grounds, and every Indian family their plantation, and on the 18th of August, 4 Auguit, they had the satisfaction to partake of the first fruits of the land, at a love-feast.

Christian Rauch and Martin Mack were the first missionaries who resided here, and administered the Word and Sacraments to the congregation, and their labor was attended with blessing. They were succeeded by other missionaries who were occasionally removed; the Brethren being of opinion, that frequent changes of the ministers of the congregation might be useful, in preventing too strong an attachment to, and dependence upon men, and fixing the hope of the Indians more upon God alone. Those who lived near, or in Bethlehem, found their growth in the grace and knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ greatly promoted by the conversation of the European Brethren and Sisters. They were filled with joy and comfort, and endeavored to be useful to their countrymen in all places, by communicating to them their experience, both by conversation, and by letters; several having learned to write at Bethlehem, an others dictating letters to Europeans.

Brother Frederic Post stayed some time in Pachgatsogoch, living in the Indian manner, preaching the Gospel, and at the same time working at his trade as a joiner. The Brethren of Bethlehem and Gnadenhuetten went also frequently to Pachgatsogoch and Wechquatnach, willing to prevent the spark of truth, yet glimmering in those places, from being entirely extinguished.

However several distressing things occurred during this dispersion of the Indians. Some men who could not persuade their wives to leave Shekomeko, left them there. Some women would not be detained by their husbands, but went alone to Bethlehem and Gnadenhuetten. The most serious remonstrances against such disorderly proceedings seemed all in vain: parents also left their children, and children defied their parents. These things occasioned much alteration, and good order was interrupted. Even some who removed to Gnadenhuetten, became confused and unhappy, and at length left the place. The enemies of the Brethren were were likewise active, and endeavored to prejudice the minds of the Indians against Bethlehem, and Gnadenhuetten. Even some of the clergy were persuaded to spread false reports concerning them from their pulpits, and several of those left at Shekomeko were so far influenced by them, that they resolved to petition the governor to grant them more land, that more Indians might settle there. They hoped likewise, that the missionaries would then be induced to return and live with them; but in case this should be refused, they purposed to desire the governor to send a minister to them, adding, "they all set forth what is in the Bible." They could not agree concerning this proposal; yet this circumstance served as a pretext to a neighbor in Wettin, to prejudice them against the Brethren. He even enticed them to repair thither, and by promises, and by means of dancing and drinking, endeavored to persuade them to leave their congregation. But they were not to be thus deceived, and upon their return, observed to each other, that they had led a miserable life at Wettin, having been merry at the expense of an uneasy conscience.

Those Indians who had imbibed prejudices against the Brethren, endeavored now to hinder those families that wished to emigrate to Gnadenhuetten, from leaving Shekomeko. They made use of the most persuasive arguments, and finding them of no avail, endeavored to procure the interference of government; but the Indians being declared a free people, their attempt failed. The misery of the Christian Indians who had not left Shekomeko, daily increased by the continuation of the war, and by frequent misfortunes, requiring them to take up arms against the French. The confusion occasioned thereby in Shekomeko and Pachagotch was great. The missionaries at this time could not interfere, because government was falsely led to suspect them. Some of the deluded Indians even pleaded, that the Brethren had forbidden them to join the militia. A white man had the assurance, publicly to assert, that the Brethren were in possession of three thousand stand of arms for the use of the Indians who should join the French, and make inroads into Pennsylvania. Upon this, government ordered, that the Brethren in Bethlehem should send a deputy to Newtown in Jersey to be publicly examined. Here their innocence was fully proved, the above-mentioned man with other false accusers confounded, and a heavy fine levied upon him. But Mr. Henry Antes, the deputy exerted himself in his behalf, and procured his release. He had also the satisfaction to bear a powerful testimony concerning Jesus Christ our Savior before a numerous assembly. This circumstance likewise convinced the Brethren, that great care and circumspection was required, propagating the Gospel among the Indian nations. They were soon after comforted, by hearing that God had wronged conviction in the hearts of those who had been thus deluded. The correspondence of the Indians was chiefly useful, in causing many who had erred, to recover the right, by bearing witness to the truth. One, who was threatened by relations with death, unless he disavowed all connexion with his pastors, replied, "I know the Brethren are just and I am to blame." Another being also threatened with death, while preparing to return to the congregation, boldly answered, that he would not act otherwise, nor would he rest, till he was again united to brethren, and though they might kill him, they could not destroy his soul, which being redeemed by the blood of Christ, was of much greater value than his body.

Several who owned their deviations, and repented of the wrote or dictated very penitential letters to the congregation. Jacob began his letter thus: "I am like a child whose father loves him dearly, clothes him well, and gives him all he stands in need of; afterwards the child is a refractory, defies his parent, and despises his care. At length through folly, the child loses all the good things he possessed, his clothes become ragged, and he seeks others and want follow. Then remembering, how w
Ch. VI.

Visit to the Iroquois.

"He sired, he repents and weeps day and night, fearfully preferring to return. This is precisely my case." Many letters of this import were read to the Indian congregations at Gnadenhuetten and near Bethlehem, and sometimes to the European Brethren there, and always heard with great emotion. Those who could neither write, nor dictate letters, came to Bethlehem and Gnadenhuetten, acknowledged and lamented their errors, before the public assembly, begging pardon of all present. All these penitents were received with open arms, and publicly assured of the forgiveness of the congregation, and many tears of love and joy were shed by all present on this affecting occasion.

The Brethren perceiving, that, notwithstanding the rage of their enemies, God blessed their labors in behalf of the Indians in a very eminent degree, their desire to spread the Gospel among the heathen daily increased. In this view, the Six Nations or Iroquois were the principal objects of their consideration, having already contracted an acquaintance with them, by means of several journeys made to their towns. These nations also knew well, how to distinguish between the millionaires, who came to them from motives of benevolence, and other white people, who had no object in view but trade.

In the foregoing year, Brother Martin Mack and his wife went to Shomokin, a town belonging to the Iroquois, where they staid two months. During this period they not only suffered much illness, and troubles of various kinds, but frequently were eye-witnesses to the most horrid and diabolical abominations, practiced by the savages, more in this place than in any other, and several times they were in danger of being murdered by drunken Indians. Yet their fervent desire to gain souls for Christ, and his precious and comfortable words, I am with you always, inspired them with such consolation, that according to Brother Mack's own expression, their hard fate in a poor Indian cottage afforded them more real pleasure, than all the the luxuries of the most sumptuous palace could have done. God also granted them the favor, to find now and then an open door to preach the word of life. They employed their time in afflicting the Indians in their plantations; and Indian corn being their only food, they were perfectly contented. From Shomokin they went on a visit to Long Island, a large island in the River Sulqueannah, where they were received with much kindness, especially by the chief. At present the Gospel itself did not seem to make an impression upon them, but rather the account of the change wrought on the Indians in Shckomoko, whose proficiency had been notorious. Here drunkennesnfe seemed to the missionary to be the greatest obstacle in the way of the Gospel. Even the chief got so drunk one evening, that he fell into the fire, and burnt the fleth off one of his hands. Upon Brother Mack's return to Shomokin, a travelling Shawanofo sought to terrify him, by accosting him in a very rough manner: "Good people," said he, "what is your "business in this place? The Iroquois do not permit any "one to come and instruct the Indians. You are like pi- "geons, wherever one perches, a large number flock to" "geth; and thus, wherever you settle, not only one or "two, but a whole tribe gathers about you." Instead of returning any answer, the missionary preached the Gospel to this savage, and having fowed in tears, and offered up many fervent prayers for these poor people, who seemed dreadfully entangled in the snares of Satan, he returned to Bethlehem. The journey was attended with much difficulty, especially to his wife, then pregnant, for they were frequently obliged to creep up the steep mountains upon their hands and feet.

The account given by Brother Mack concerning the state of the Indians in Shomokin, made the elders of the congregation at Bethlehem with to send a missionary to relieve those, and to preach the Gospel to these savages. They found good opportunity of doing this in the year 1746. The Iroquois sent word by Shikellimus, their agent or deputy in okin, to Mr. Conrad Welsfer, interpreter to gov; requesting him to represent to the governor ylvania, that for want of a blacksmith, they were y upon the sight of th' occasion, obliged to travel bundred miles to Tulpechokin, or even to Phila-to get work done; they therefore begged that a k might be sent to reside in Shomokin. Shoemed a very dangerous place of residence for an
; the air being unwholesome, and the Indians noted ymasters; not to mention their extravagance in and its dangerous consequences to an European.
Brethren received the message sent by Conrad with pleasure; and the governor of Pennsylvania anted permission to send them a blacksmith.
Brother Mack went in company of an In-homokin to consult with chief Shikellimius and , upon the business, and to agree, that in case ren should send a blacksmith to reside there, he ty with them no longer than they preferred their friendship with the English nation.
fter this the small-pox broke out among the In-
 at Bethlehem and then at Gnadenhuetten.
persons departed this life, among whom were ful and valuable affidants, whose loss the moft sincerely lamented, viz. John, Isaac, David, rah, and his wife Sarah. The following is a unt of their lives:
as one of the fift fruits, and several letters in-ts, are a striking proof of his real conversion.
. As an heathen he distinguished himself by actices, and as his vices became the more on account of his natural wit and humor, fo ian he became a moft powerful and persuasive our Savior among his nation. His gifts were fuche grace of God, and employed in such a man-be the means of bleffing both to Europeans and Few of his countrymen could vie with him in point point of Indian oratory. His discourses were full of animation, and his words penetrated like fire into the hearts of his countrymen; his soul found a rich pasture in the Gospel, and whether at home, or on a journey, he could not forbear speaking of the salvation purchased for us by the sufferings of Jesus, never hesitating a moment, whether his hearers were Christians or heathen. In short, he appeared chosen by God to be a witness to his people, and was four years active in this service. Nor was he less respected as a chief among the Indians, no affair of state being transacted without his advice and consent. Shortly before his last illness he visited Bishop Spangenberg, and addressed him thus: "I have something to say to you; I have examined my heart closely, I know that what I say is true. Seeing so many of our Indians depart this life, I put the question to myself, whether I could resign my life to the Lord, and be assured that he would receive my soul. The answer was: Yes, for I am the Lord's, and shall go and be with him for ever." During his illness, the believing Indians went often and most weeping around his bed. Even then he spoke with power and energy of the truth of the Gospel, and in all things approved himself, to his last breath, as a minister of God. His pains were mitigated by the consideration of the great sufferings of Jesus Christ, and his departure to him gentle and placid, as that of a faithful servant, entering into the joy of his Lord.

Isaac was also one of the first fruits, and formerly known as a great forerunner, but he was made a miracle of grace. After his baptism he became remarkably tender-hearted and benevolent, and by his peculiar gifts was well qualified for his office as servant, both in the congregation at Skekemoko, and in attending strangers. His happy departure was a most convincing proof of his living faith.

David, baptized in the year 1742, was a true servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, and a blessed witness and labor among amongst his countrymen, whom he also served as interpreter. He was once testifying the truth of the Gospel to a white man who visited Gnadenhuette, and in the course of his conversation asked him, how it happened, that, though the white people could read and write, and knew enough of our Lord’s incarnation, sufferings, and death, they could yet be so indifferent about him, and even hate him. The white man asked him in reply, whether he could read; he answered: “I have five significant letters, which I study at home, and in the forest.” The European asked with astonishment, what letters they were: David’s answer was: “They are the five wounds of my crucified Savior, these I consider daily, and find always new lessons for my heart.”

Thomas was also a faithful minister and blessed witness of the truth among his countrymen. Some years after his death several were converted, who owned that they had received the first convictions by means of the powerful testimony of this man, and could never after forget his words concerning our Savior Jesus Christ.

Jonas was John’s assistant in teaching, and having a particular gift in the leading of souls, he was universally beloved and esteemed. He was remarkably cheerful during his last illness, predicted the hour of his departure, and desired, that all the believing Indians present might assemble around his bed, to whom he delivered a most moving farewell discourse, flowing from his inmost soul, reminding them of their former unhappy course as heathens without God in the world, extolling the grace of God now revealed to them in Christ Jesus, and begging them with many tears to abide faithful unto the end, and to follow the advice of their teachers. He then added: “I shall now soon go and see my Savior, and those wounds which I have preached unto you, and by which I am healed.” Further he foretold, that the enemy would repeat his endeavors to seduce and confound them, and to sift them as wheat, advising them not Account of Gadenhutten.

not to give ear to his infamations, but to cleave to Jesus who would defend and protect them. This discourse left an indelible impression upon all present, and was frequently repeated when his name was mentioned in conversation. Having taken an affectionate leave of his wife, he addressed missionary Christian Henry Rauch, with a clear and earnest countenance, saying: "May I not hope soon to depart? I am weary and with to rest, for I have finished my work;" and immediately expired.

Abraham, another of the first fruits, was a Chief much respected on account of his wisdom and grave deportment. He was appointed Elder of the congregation at Shekomeko, in this office maintaining a very distinguished character, setting the example of all the brethren and sisters. His wife Sarah was a faithful assistant in the care of the women, distinguished herself by her good understanding and propriety of conduct.

Dreadful as the small-pox appears to the Indians in general, the believers notwithstanding showed but little fear. The cheerful, contented, and happy disposition of those who depauperate this life by means of this contagion, was edifying to all who were witnesses of it, and many wished soon to follow them into a blissful eternity; for the grace of God prevailed most powerfully throughout the whole congregation.

Among those Indians who refixed this year in Bethlehem was a woman, near eighty years old, and quite blind. She had left year expressed a wish, to be brought to Bethlehem, declaring, that if she could only reach that place, she would be baptized and go to God. At length, after a year's delay, her friends, who were enemies to the Gospel, resolved to comply with her request; and putting her into a cart, when they drew themselves, they reached Bethlehem after a tedious journey of twenty days. Here she heard the Gospel with great eagerness, but falling sick, began most earnestly to beg for baptism, which was administered to her on death-bed. After this awful and blessed transition she claimed, "Now my time is come; I shall now go home;" i.e. to the Lord my Savior. This was January 17.
Account of Gnadenhuetten.

Ch. VI.

"always said, that I must first come to Bethlehem and be "baptized, and then I should depart this life." The day following, in the morning, she fell asleep in the Lord.

Towards the close of the year, Bishop Spangenberg and other Brethren paid a visit to the Indians in Wajomick, by whom, according to Bishop Spangenberg's expression, they were received as angels, sent from God, and their words heard with uncommon eagerness. The aim of this visit was, to speak the word of the cross to these Indians also, and to establish a covenant of friendship between them and the Ma-hican nation, to which most of the believing Indians belonged, the Brethren having not yet given up all hopes of establishing a settlement in those parts.

CHAPTER VII.

1747, 1748.

Summary View of the internal Regulations of the Congregation at Gnadenhuetten. Beginning of a Mission in Schemokin. Cammerhof's troublesome Journey to that Place.

The Indian congregations in Gnadenhuetten and Friedenhuetten now received their proper regulations, though the latter place was by degrees entirely forsaken.

Their form of worship was the same as that in all other settlements of the United Brethren, as far as circumstances would admit. The congregation met twice a day, early in the morning and in the evening after their work, to sing and pray, and sometimes to hear a discourse upon the text of Scripture appointed for the day. By these discourses, the missionaries endeavored gradually to make their people better acquainted with all the saving truths of the Gospel.

Several parts of the Scriptures, translated into the Mahikan

kan language, were also publicly read and expounded peculiar blessing rested upon these meetings, as likewise their singing of hymns in fellowship.

Children of baptized parents were baptized soon after their birth, but the baptism of adults was always administered on Sundays, or other festival days. The catechumens received previous instructions in the leading truths of the Christian religion, and were publicly interrogated concerning their future views. After they had declared their sentiments were absolved by imposition of hands, and then baptized with the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, and after solemn prayer and thanksgiving, the blessing of the Lord was pronounced over them.

The particular meetings of the baptized and communicants were held here in the same order, as they had been regulated in Shekomeko. The children had likewise meetings, in which they were addressed in a manner suited to their capacities. Meetings were also held separately for the married people, widowers, widows, single men, single women, boys, and girls, in which each of these divisions of the congregation were exhorted to be made partakers of the blessings purchased for them in their respective stations by the meritorious efforts of Christ Jesus, that they might learn to forth his praise, both in soul and body.

The Holy Communion was administered to the communicants every month. This great and solemn transaction was to be attended with the most distinguished powers of the soul, and the thoughts of their faith and hope. The day set apart for the communion day, the great day, as indeed it was, for the missionaries could never find sufficient to extol the power and grace of God, revering these occasions.

The missionaries were likewise earnestly engaged in the work of the Lord, visiting, caring for each individual soul, and in leading them forward with gentleness, wisdom, and patience, following the directions of the Spirit of God. In providing for these women, the wives of the missionaries, and also... filters, appointed for that purpose, afflicted with great successes, and in this view their presence was required in all the conferences relating to the whole congregation. It was required of those, who were thus entrusted with the care of souls, not only to question every individual concerning the state of their minds, previous to the Holy Communion, but that they should at other times be ready to hear and consider the complaints and remarks of each member of the congregation.

In the conversations held by the missionaries with the Indian assistants, they endeavored to inculcate scriptural principles into their minds; they also attended to their remarks and proposals, promoting true brotherly love among them, as fellow-laborers in the work of the Lord; that thus, by their united exertions, the welfare of the congregation might be furthered. It must be owned, to the glory of God, that most of them walked worthy of their important office, being respected by the whole congregation. Occasionally the daily meetings were committed to the care of the most experienced and gifted among them. Their discourses were animated, plain, and powerful, and it gave peculiar satisfaction to the missionaries, to find such an apostolic spirit reigning upon them. They frequently heard with great emotion, how zealously these assistants preached salvation by the death of Jesus, being filled with fervent desire to lead souls to Christ: they always made the Scriptures the foundation of their discourse; adding, "Thus hath God, our Creator, loved us; this he hath done to save us; every sinner may approach confidently unto him. Thus we have been taught; we have received the Gospel and experienced the truth of it." Sometimes they met with opposition. Once a savage declared to them, "That he had firmly resolved to continue in his Indian belief and manner of living; that he had once endeavored to reform, and in this view spent some time with a Christian moralist, who told him what he ought to do, but lived contrary to his own precepts; that he had also resided a long time among the white people, who had "the great book, which taught them how to live, but that they lived like Indians, committing all manner of evil; in short, that he had never seen a man who lived agreeably to the directions contained in that book." The Indian affiliants answered with great cheerfulness: "Observe our teachers, they live according to the precepts contained in the great Book, we also endeavor to do it, and are happy in so doing." Others, who acknowledged the excellency of the doctrine, declared, "that it would be very impolitic in them not to have bad hearts, left the white people, and were now afraid of them, chiefly on account of their bad hearts, should afterwards do with them what they pleased.
The believers contradicted this assertion, by quoting their own example: "When the traders come," said they, "we offer their rum to you, you suffer yourselves to be immedidately deceived; you get drunk, and then they do with you what they please, therefore your bad hearts cannot destroy you against them, but make you an easy prey to the ir window. But when they come to us, we refuse their rum, and thus they cannot treat us as they please; our heart is which believe in Jesus, resist their temptations and defend us against them."

With regard to rules and orders, they were always made de in the council of the congregation, and persons nominate to watch over their due performance. The missionaries gave particular attention to a very circumstantial education of the youth of both sexes, in the fear and admonition of the Lord, and in this view a weekly conference was held with the pa-ents.

Besides their labor in the congregation, the missionaries never omitted to follow those who had strayed, with love and patience, and in this blest work received much help from the Indian affiliates. When any poor lost their return to the congregation, the joy of the flock was great; but when members of the congregation conducted themselves in such manner, that they could no longer be suffered to dwell in the place, sorrow was as general. Sometimes those, who ing agreed with Shikellimus and his council, respecting the terms, upon which a blacksmith should be sent by the Brethren to dwell with them, the Brethren, John Hagen and Joseph Powel, went thither in June, to build an house for this purpose, and having finished it in a few weeks, Brother Anthony Schmidt and his wife removed to Shomokin that same month and began to work. Brother Hagen having deputed this life in September, Brother Mack and his wife went to Shomokin to superintend the new mission. They visited the Indians diligently, and improved every opportunity to teach the Gospel to them. But they found much cause to lament the abominations practiced here. Among other instances of fierce barbarity, they saw one of the most lamentable nature: a Mahikan woman, having lost one child already by poison, had the misfortune to lose her last child only four years old, by the same means, applied by a noted murderer.

Her violent lamentations at the grave and continual repetition of the words, "The forcerer has robbed me of my on-"child; ah! the forcerer has murdered my only child," movall, who heard her, with the greatest compassion. Sister Ma endeavored to comfort her, by describing Jesus Christ the friend and Savior of all the distressed. During this confusion she asked with great earnestness; "Do you believe "that my child is now with your God?"—"I do," replied Sister Mack, "because our God is a friend of the children;

"if your learn to know him, you may in eternity, find y-
"child with him; for he is not only our God but also "God, and loves all men. He loved them so much, that "became a man and died for you and me, that we all mi;
"be saved if we receive him, &c." This declaration left abiding impression upon the mother and her husband.

Brother Mack had also the pleasure to see, that a girl thirteen years old, upon hearing his testimony, turned w her whole heart to the Lord. She often told her mother how she converted with Jesus; even after her parents l Shomokin, she remained in the same mind, and, when ever an opportunity offered, sent word to Sister Mack t the hill loved our Savior. After some time she fell sick, and perceiving that her dissolution was at hand, earnestly admonished her mother to love the Lord Jesus, and to return to the Brethren at Shomokin. Before her departure she desired that a small token, by way of remembrance, might be sent to Sister Mack. With this her last request the parents complied, contrary to the usual custom of the Indians, who generally bury the property of the deceased with them.

The residence of the Brethren at Shomokin, was attended with great expense and inconvenience, all necessaries of life being conveyed to them from Bethlehem. Shomokin being a place, through which the Iroquois used to pass in their way to Philadelphia and Virginia, and when going out on hunting, the Brethren there found a good opportunity of becoming acquainted with a great part of that nation, and of preparing the way, for the propagation of the Gospel among them.

Several missionaries, both in Bethlehem and Gnadenhuetten, were now studying the Maquaw or Mohawk language, the chief dialect of the Iroquois, to qualify themselves for this work; and Brother Pyrlaeus, who had already become a proficient in the Mahican language, so that he could instruct others and even compile a hymn-book for the use of the congregation in Gnadenhuetten, was by this time also able to instruct in the Mohawk language, and spent his time, from four o'clock in the morning till late in the evening, in this employment, except when prevented by the duties of his office as minister.

As the Indian languages had no words for many new ideas and objects, the Brethren were obliged to enrich them with several English and German words, and by degrees, custom rendered these new terms intelligible. Several Indian Brethren at Gnadenhuetten were also deft in learning the German language, but they never made much progress. But those Indian single Brethren and Sisters, who had requested and obtained leave to live at Bethlehem, and more particularly the children, educated in the schools, learnt German with ease. Though the Brethren had purposed to send the Indian children home, as soon as their parents had built their cottages, yet it could not so generally be done; for some parents, perceiving that their children would be much better educated in the Brethren's schools than at home, begged earnestly, that they might not be sent back. An Indian father even bequeathed her two children to Brethren Spangenberg, that he might adopt and educate them for the Lord. The children themselves were extremely unwilling to quit the schools at Bethlehem, and many entreated so earnestly, that they at last prevailed upon the Brethren to keep them. Even several children in Gnadenhuetten would not rest, till their parents procured leave for them to go to the Bethlehem schools, and at that time their earnest and repeated request could not be denied, without the appearance of cruelty. Nor was this measure without its good effect. The evident proofs of the grace of God operating in the hearts of these Indian children, gave great joy to the teachers and overseers, and care being taken that they should not lose their native tongue, many of them became useful to the mission by the knowledge they acquired of German or English languages.

The support of the Indian congregation in Gnadenhuetten was a principal object of the attention of the Brethren in the year 1747. It was an evident proof of a change of heart, that the Indians went diligently to work, and planted the fields, portioned out to each family; but not having land sufficient, the Brethren bought a neighboring plantation for their use. This gave them great pleasure. One of them said, "It seemed hitherto, as if we had lain in a short bed, never able to stretch at full length, but now we lie in a large one." A saw-mill being erected at Gnadenhuetten, many Indians had the means of earning money by cutting timber and conveying it to Bethlehem in floats down the Lecha. Hunting however remained the chief support of the people, and from fifteen to twenty deer or bears were frequently shot in one day. If provisions proved scarce, they got wild honey, chestnuts, and bilberries in the forests.

Still a continual supply of provisions was required from Bethlehem; for the Indians of Gnadenhuetten were frequently visited by various companies, chiefly Delawares and Shawanoes, whom they not only received with kindness, but also entertained, rejoicing that these heathens had thus an opportunity of hearing the Gospel.

Nothing made so good an impression upon the savages, as that peace and harmony prevailing among the believers, and their contentment amidst all troubles. This gave great weight to their testimony of Jesus Christ, for it was evident that nothing but faith in, and love to him could create that display of benevolence and cheerfulness in the conduct of the Indian Brethren, the reverse of which appeared so general in the unconverted.

The visits of savages were agreeable to the missionaries, as they conceived hopes, that some might be gained for Christ; but sometimes proved troublesome, on account of their wild and disorderly conduct. Circumpection was always required in treating them properly. By severity their future visits would have been prevented; yet disorder could not be permitted, lest the believing Indians should suffer. The following mode seemed the most prudent: Those, who, excited by curiosity, came to pass a day or two, were welcomed. The Christian walk of the Indians proved edifying to them, and the observance of the rules of the settlement prevented all mischief. But if any expressed an inclination to live at Gnadenhuetten, they were then told, that drunkenness, fighting, games, &c. were not permitted; and yet, with every precaution, these evils could not be entirely prevented. Thus twenty-six Indians came from Pachgatogoch to Gnadenhuetten, pretending that they wished to live there and hear the Gospel. There being no room for them in Gnadenhuetten, they began to build in the neighborhood; but it was soon evident, that they were not sincere, and their conversation proved hurtful to the Christian Indians, so that even even some families were seduced. These poor people with those who left the congregation soon found reason to repent. One, named Gideon, expressed his regret in the following terms: "When I left you, I thought I might still retain life in my heart, though I left the believers but alas! I find it far otherwise: my other brethren, who have done the same, are all spiritually dead, and in pursuit of the world, and it would have been better for me to have remained with you."

In January 1748, Bishop Cammerhof and Brother Joseph Powel went to Shomokin. They suffered so much on their journey from the great quantity of ice, water, and snow, that they were frequently in danger, and the journal cannot be read without almonistment; but the Lord helped them through all difficulties. The Bishop found by the way several opportunities to preach the Gospel with good effect to bewildered Christians, and this proved sucient consolation for all the fatigue and danger he had endured.

The intention of his journey was to make some reg-trations, by which the Gospel might be more easily propagated among the Iroquois, Shomokin being a central town. He had several conferences not only with the Brethren there, but with Shikellimus and his council, before whom he bore a powerful testimony of the salvation purchased by the death of the Lord Jesus Christ, which left a deep impression upon them. On his return, he expe-renced many singular proofs of the gracious providence of God, who heard his prayers. The Brethren in Bethlehem considered it their duty to encourage those in Shomokin by frequent visits, their situation being attended with many difficulties. Their house was frequently injured by the violent storms of thunder and rain prevailing in that district. Sometimes the plantations were destroyed by hail; earthquakes shook their dwellings, and filled them with apprehension: but their principal danger arose from the drunkenness of the Indians, whose fury in that state threatens the lives of all who interfere with them. The Brethren were also often alarmed by parties of warriors of different nations, then at war with the Catawass, passing to and fro with captives. They treated their prisoners with great cruelty, and the Brethren, as white people, were often in danger of being murdered in their riots. But their confidence in God remained un-thaken; otherwise, witnessing such horrid abominations, and subjected to great abuse and insult, their courage and faith might have been subdued, had not the hand of God in mer-ev supported them.

About this time, the missionaries Martin Mack and David Zeisberger went to Long Island, and Great Island, situated in the west branch of the Susquehannah, above Ottonwackin. They found many people ill, but did not venture to give them medicine; for had only one of the patients died, the Indians, without hesitation, would have blamed the missionaries. Being exceedingly affected at the sight of these people, addicted to every heathenish vice, and now tormented by famine and sickness, they endeavored to describe to them the love of Jesus Christ their Sav-vior, ever ready to help all those who believe in him. But they found few disposed to hear; the Indians quoting the bad example of the Christians in the neighborhood, as a sufficient cause for rejecting their doctrine. Thus they returned with sorrowful hearts from their labor; having several times been in danger of losing their lives, by the brutality of the savages.
CHAPTER VIII.

1748, 1749.

SOON after Bishop Cammerhof's return from Shosomkin, a synod was held in Quitobeill; in which the mission among the Indians was considered with much attention, and the following principles renewed and proved:

1. The Brethren do not think, that they are called to baptize whole nations; for it is more to the purpose, gain one converted soul, than to persuade many to take merely the name and outward form of Christiannity.

2. We are not discouraged by the dangers and hardships attending the labor among the heathen, but always bear in remembrance, that our Lord endured distress and death itself, to gain salvation for us, and rested not till the great work was finished. If, after the most strenuous exertions of soul and body, one soul is gained for Christ, we have an ample reward.

3. We will continue to preach nothing to the heathen but Jesus and him crucified, repeating the same testimony of his Gospel, till the hearts of the heathen are awakened to believe; being fully convinced, that the power of the cross is the word of God, which is alone able to bring souls from darkness into light.

4. The missionaries should never reject any heathen, not even the most abandoned and profligate, but consider them
Account of Gnadenhuetten.

... whom the grace of Jesus Christ ought to be able opportunity soon offered to act according rule. A dissolute Indian woman came to Gnadenhuetten pretending to have the best views, but secretly to seduce several persons. Her evil intentions proved, she was called upon to appear before the assistants, and informed, that this town was resolutely of being saved, but that salvation must be had in the greatest harlots, murderers, and thieves. Truly penitent, since God our Savior had been, she confessed her sin and died for them. Indians of this description were likewise welled truly wished to be delivered from the power that Gnadenhuetten was not a place of refuge, who persisted in sin; nor would such pernicious persons here; that she therefore must now go, but as soon as she should sincerely change her mind be received with pleasure.

As she appeared before this venerable company, some with awe; and, during the above address, entreaty bespoke the condemnation of her. She then left the house with tears, and another place. About a year after, the Brethren pleasure to see this woman converted. She herself Indian, who was afterwards much disfavored frolic. This misfortune caused the rigorously to reflect on his conduct, and his wife and of the Brethren, they both went to Beth-Gnadenhuetten, declaring their wish to know the, that God had saved the Indians also, by, if his precious blood. They believed, were afterward, and named Daniel and Ruth.

An occurrence also occurred about this time, showing the influence of seduction among the converts which much afflicted the missionaries.
Another synod being held at Bethlehem in June 1748, some of the most approved Indian Brethren were appointed assistants in the work of God in their nation. For their encouragement this was done in a solemn and public manner. Nicodemus (one of their number) departed this life in Gnadenhuetten in August. He was a man of a distinguished character, and his conversion was a miracle of grace.

As an heathen he was exceeded by none in the practice of evil, and much given to drunkenness. On hearing the word of the cross, he was one of the first, who experienced its saving power, and was baptized in December 1742. From a turbulent spirit he became patient, lowly and humble in heart, but strong in faith. In his walk and conversation he was an example to all, and whoever knew him before, beheld him now with amazement. By degrees, he became much enlightened in the divine truths of the Gospel, and was appointed elder of the congregation at Gnadenhuetten, in which office he was universally respected. His walk with his God and Savior was uninterrupted, and his faith daily strengthened by contemplating the sufferings and death of Jesus. He prayed without ceasing, both for himself and his countrymen, whom he greatly loved. If he perceived any insincerity among them, his concern was evident. He was very attentive to new objects, and in his manner of speaking was very figurative, his conversation proved highly instructive and useful. Once looking at the mill at Gnadenhuetten, he addressed a millionaire, "Brother," said he, "I discover something that rejoices my heart. I have seen the great wheel and many little ones; every one was in motion and seemed all alive, and suddenly all stop, and the mill was as dead. I thought surely all depends upon one wheel, if the wheel runs upon that, every thing else is alive, but when the ceases to flow, all appears dead. Just so it is with heart, it is dead as the wheel; but as soon as Jesus' blood flows upon it, it gets life and sets every thing in motion."
VIII. Account of Gnadenwutten.

d the whole man being governed by it, it becomes evident, that there is life throughout. But when the heart removed from the crucified Jesus, it dies gradually, d at length all life ceases." Upon another occasion he said, "I crossed the Lecha to-day in a boat, and being woven into the rapid current, was forced down the stream d nearly overfell. I then thought; this is exactly the case of men who know not the Lord Jesus Christ, they irresistibly hurried away by sin, cannot help themselves and in danger of being eternally lost: but as soon

our mighty Savior takes the helm, we receive power withstand the rapid stream of this world and sin."

In the doctrine of the Holy Ghost became more clear in mind, he once compared his body to a canoe, and his t to the rudder, adding, "That the Holy Ghost was c master sitting at the rudder and directing the vessel."

was very diligent in his attendance on the heathen vildges, and his unaffected and solid conversation, but effantly his fervent prayers in their behalf, made a lasting effusion upon them. In his last illness, he thought much he resurrection, and said: "I am now an old man and all soon depart to the Lord; my body will soon be terred in our burying-ground; but it will rise most vivacious; and when our Savior shall call all thoes, who are fallen asleep in him, they will rise to newness of c and glory." His countenance appeared at the fame as serene as that of an angel; he repeated his ardent ve to be at home with Jesus, and assured his friends, his joy in the Lord had almost overpowerd all fem-na of pain, adding, "I am poor and needy and there-re amazed at the love of my Lord Jesus Christ, who is ways with me." Thus he remained cheerful, till his death, which fully proved the reality of his faith.

among the Indians baptized in the year 1748, two merit-ations, Christian Renatus and Anna Caritas. The for-was an inhabitant of Menio lagomekah, a celebrated tor of the Delaware nation, of a gigantic form, and rendered

rendered terrible by his exploits. He was formerly a great drunkard, and noted throughout the country as a monster of iniquity. But true faith in the Lord Jesus changed his conduct. Being present at a baptism in Gnadenhuetten, he was so much affected, that he could not refrain from tears. He owned with sorrow his former sinful life, and fought and found pardon and peace in the redemption of Jesus. The report of his conversion and baptism caused great astonishment among the Indians and white people; many of whom came to Gnadenhuetten to examine into the truth of it. To all these visitors, he joyfully declared what the Lord had done for his soul. Anna Caritas, was the first of the Shawanofoe, a sensible old woman. She had long resided among the white people, but felt an impulse to see the Brethren. Her employers, who greatly esteemed her, as a good servant and housekeeper, could not persuade her to stay, but she went to Bethlehem in the depth of winter, believed in Jesus Christ, and would not depart, till her urgent request for baptism was granted.

The years 1748 and 1749, were also distinguished in an extraordinary manner by the return of many lost brethren. Brother David Bichoff was unwearied in following the God also laid a particular blessing upon the services of Bishop Johannes von Watteville, who went in September 1748, to North America, to hold a visitation in the Brethren's settlements. One great object was to become acquainted with the Indian congregation. For this purpose he went to Gnadenhuetten in September; stayed three days preaching the Gospel with fervor, and rejoiced at the great prevailing there. Some Brethren arriving from St. Thomas, at the same time, all joined in praising God our Savior for his abundant love to the poor human race, and for the power of his atonement, evidently displayed on the breasts of different nations and colors. The Bishops von Watteville and Cammerhof proceeded with the Brethren Martin Mack and David Zeisberger to Wajomick, Neitko-Nakopeko, Wahhalobank, and Shomokin. The former spent three weeks on this journey, visiting the Shawanofo, Chikfas, and Nantikoks, preaching everywhere the precious Gospel of Jesus Christ. In Shomokin he renewed the covenant made between the chief Shikellimus in the name of the Iroquois and Count Zinzendorf, from whom he delivered a present, and received the following answer: "Tell Johanan" (this being the name given to the Count by the Indians), "that his brethren the Six Nations salute him, for they love him, and desire him to salute all his Brethren, whom they love likewise."

In December he went with Bishop Cammerhof and Nathaniel Seidel to Shekomeko, Wechquannach, and Fachgatork. In Shekomeko they found every thing destroyed, except the burying-ground. Their chief objected was to look after the lost sheep, and they were so fortunate as to find many of them either at home, or at their hunting-huts. God blessed their endeavors with great success, though the contrast between those who had continued steadfast, and the backsliders, was evident in their very looks and behavior. The missionaries were not discouraged, but preached the Gospel to them again, earnestly exhorting them to confess all their deviations with contrite hearts before the Lord, to crave his mercy and pardon, and to devote themselves anew unto him, who has received gifts for the rebellious sigo. They affixed the penitent, that the congregation, whom they had offended, was ready and willing to readmit them to fellowship. This messenger of consolation, had the desired effect. The deluded people confessed their transgressions with many tears. Nathaniel said, "I know, that I belong to my Savior, and to his people. My horses often stray far into the woods, but always return to my hut; and thus I will return and seek our Savior and the congregation." He added, "If a coal is taken from the fire, it loses its heat, and is extinguished; thus also my heart has lost its fervor, having frayed from the fellowship of the believers."

PART II.

All
All who bemoaned their unfaithfulness, received a public assurance of the pardon of the congregation, having previously made known their situation to the missionaries. Most of them were also soon after readmitted to the Holy Communion, and the Brethren experienced on these occasions something of that joy, which is in heaven over repenting sinners. They had also the comfort to baptize twenty Indians, among whom were two boys.

Upon their return, these three Brethren went to a town in the Jerseys, where Mr. Brainard had preached the Gospel to the Indians, baptized about fifty, and made some good regulations among them. They wished him all possible success. The Brethren in Bethlehem were also of opinion, that they ought not in the least to interfere with the labors of this good man among the Indians, but rather to support him with their prayers.

In 1749, thirteen Indian boys, educated in the school at Bethlehem, Nazareth, and Fredericstown, were with a negro boy baptized. This transaction made a blessed impression upon the European and Indian Brethren. The custom of dressing the catechumens, who were to be baptized, in white, was now first introduced into the Indian mission.

About this time two grown persons were baptized in Bethlehem, one of whom called Kepofi, had formerly been head-chief of the Delaware nation, and was now in eighty years of age. Many years ago he was taken and to all appearance died. The Indians having made every necessary preparation, sent messengers to the different towns, to invite his friends to the burial, but at the end of three days, to the astonishment of all present, he awoke from his swoon. He wondered at the number surrounding his bed, knew nothing of the intention of their meeting, nor what had happened to him. He informed them, that a flaming figure of a man clothed in white robes, appeared to him as flying in the air, who, lifting him up from the earth, showed him a catalogue of his, people's sins, exhorting him to return and reform his, and to reprove the Indians, on account of their wicked ways. This story was well known among the Indians, for they heard the Gospel. It is also certain, that the actually strive to amend his life, but finding no power himself to resist evil, and remembering the injunctions laid upon him, believed the Gospel, as soon as he did it. He was called Solomon in baptism, and became very respectable and useful member of the congregation. His eldest son had strong convictions and an inward call to the Lord, but the hopes to succeed his father in dignity, made him long hesitate. At length, not able resist the powerful operations of the Holy Ghost, and being awakened by attending the baptism of some Indians, he immediately went to Bishop von Watteville, and lost estate, and begged to be baptized. His request was granted, not long after the baptism of his fa-brother David Bruce was now appointed to the care of Christian Indians in Pachgatogch and Wechquatnach, since the before-mentioned visit had again formed a lasting settlement. He chiefly lived in a house in Wechquatnach belonging to the Brethren, called Gnadenhöfe, but sometimes resided at Pachgatogch, whence he paid visits to Steinbeck, by invitation from the head-chief of the Mas-in nation, sowing the seed of the Gospel, wherever he came. But as he was not ordained, Bishop Cam-thof with Brother Gottlieb Bezold, went again in March 9, to Shekomeko, Pachgatogch, and Wechquatnach, to strengthen the believers, and to administer the sacraments to them. Twenty Indians were then added to the church baptism. Brother Bruce remained in this station till happy departure out of time, which, to the great grief of the Indian congregation, took place this year. He was markedly cheerful during his illness, and his conversation edified all who saw him. Perceiving that his end approached, he called the Indian Brethren present, to his bedside, side, and pressing their hands to his breast, besought fervently, to remain faithful unto the end; and immediately after fell asleep in the Lord. His funeral was mitted to one of the assistants, who delivered a power course upon the solemn occasion to the company present, whom were many white people, who had often he late Brother's testimony of the truth with blessing. ther Abraham Buening was appointed his successor at leisure hours was very diligent in instructing th dren.

Bishop Johannes von Watteville having been on a visit the negro-mission in St. Thomas, returned to North Am June. Meanwhile the Brethren Cammerhof, Nathan del, and others went to Meniolagomekah, upon repeti tions from the Chiefs. Their labor was not in vain and a door was opened there for the Gospel. To of this place, a young man of rank, generally called Rex, and his wife, were soon after baptized in Bet and both became useful assistants in the Indian co tion. Soon after this the Chief's grandfather, a hundred years of age, and quite blind, was also baptized and fell happily asleep in Jesus; soon after his 1 From that time forward, Meniolagomekah was diligent fited by the missionaries; and many of the inhabitants ceiving the Gospel, a regular establishment of Christian was formed, and a separate burying-ground allotted. This place being only one day's journey from Bet it was generally attended by the missionaries from huetten, and by them served with the word and Sac. The communicants came also occasionally to Gnaden and partook of the Communion there.

In May, many of the Indians of Gnadenhuette Bethlehem, to see three Christian Greenlanders, who returning to their native country, conducted by the i tionary Matthew Stach. There were at the same time Jehem, a boy and a young Indian woman from Beringe America, so that the Brethren there had the satisfaction for heathen of three different nations and languages, namely Narragans, living in the 6th, Mahikans and Delaware in the 4th, and Greenlanders in the 6th degree of north latitude. In this month, thirty believing Indians who formerly removed from Shokomeko to Wechquatnach, went to live at Gnadenhuetten. This town now became an object of admiration to the whole country, and the increasing number of its inhabitants, afforded a convincing proof of the power of the Gospel, to change the hearts of men. Evil reports were not wanting, and thus these people had also their share of the reproach of Christ. This was likewise the case with the small congregation at Meniohgankekew, where the enemy with much pains influenced the minds of the people, by bitter and false accusations. Yet they could not succeed; chiefly owing to the firmness of the above-mentioned Chief, named Augustus in baptism, a man of very found understanding and strong in faith. He explained all things fully to the believers, declaring his mind to the following effect: "I know both the Brethren, and their intentions well. When I hear base charges against them, I give them no credit; first chusing, by enquiry, to explore the truth. I know that Satan envies the peace my brethren enjoy, and therefore thus assails us." The converted Indians were also soon accustomed to be called Moravians, or Hennuthers. Those savages, who were enemies to the Gospel, endeavored by various inventions to confound the truth. A message was sent to Gnadenhuetten to this effect: "That a conjuror, who was dying in Wajomick, had disappeared in the night, and two days after returned from heaven, where God had told him, that he had appointed sacrifices for the Indians, to stone for their sins, but had given the Bible to the white people only; and though it contained many excellent things, yet he considered it as an abomination, that the Indians should walk in the same way. He added, that the white people were wise and cunning, and if the Indians meddled with them, they would all be devour.
“ed, especially their children, whom they strove to get into their power; further, that God had commanded him to make this known to all the Indian tribes.” The messenger added: “That the man who had been with God had summoned all the Indians to meet on the river Susquehanna, to hear him; after which he intended to come to this town, to relate the affair himself, for the words he had heard were so important to him, that he could not keep them in his breast.” The Indian Brethren heard this message with patience, but after affirming the messenger, that his employer had not seen the true God, they preached the words of life to the deluded man with great power and demonstration of the Spirit. The impression made upon the messenger was such, that he not only published throughout the country what he had heard at Gnadenhuetten, thus frustrating the intentions of the false prophet, but turned with all his heart unto the Lord, and was baptized some time after.

In July, deputies from the Six Nations arrived in Philadelphia to form an alliance with the English government and the Brethren Johannes von Watteville, Spangenberg Cammerhof, Pyrleus, and Nathaniel Seidel went likewise with them the covenant made between the Brethren and the Six Nations. At the request of the latter, the Brethren promised to visit their people.

In September Bishop Johannes von Watteville went again to Gnadenhuetten, and laid the foundation of a new church that built in 1746 being now too small, and the missionaries now and then obliged to preach out of doors. The Indian congregation alone consisted of five hundred persons. In October the Bishops von Watteville and Spangenberg returned to Europe. Their labor in the Indian congregation was blessed with rich fruits. Spangenberg was succeeded by Bishop John Nischan; and Bishop Cammerhof continued indefatigably attentive to the conversion of the heathen. In November he visited the Indians at Sixmokin, and on the banks of the Susquehanna.
A school of three classes, for children, boys, and young men, was established this year at Gnadenhuetten; and a master appointed for each class. Mistresses were also appointed, for the classes of the girls and young women. The Indian youth being very willing to learn, it was a pleasure to their instructors to see their progress. A regulation was also made for the maintenance of poor widows and orphans, who were placed in different families, and provided, as relations, with every necessary of life.

About this time Mr. Brainard and several of his Indian converts visited Gnadenhuetten.

Towards the end of the year the Indian congregation suffered a great loss by the decease of the wife of the missionary Martin Mack, who had devoted all her time and strength in the service of the Lord among the heathen, to the great prejudice of her health. Her departure occasioned general sorrow. Among others, who departed this life in 1749, I will only mention Shikellimus in Shawnee. Being the first magistrate and head-chief of all the Iroquois Indians, living on the banks of the Susquehanna, as far as Onondaga, he thought it incumbent upon him, to be very circumspect in his dealings with the white people. He mistrusted the Brethren at first, but upon discovering their sincerity, became their firm and real friend. Being much engaged in political affairs, he had learned the art of concealing his sentiments, and therefore never contradicted those, who endeavored to prejudice his mind against the missionaries, though he always suspected their motives. In the last years of his life he became less reserved, and received those Brethren who came to Shawnee into his house. He also very kindly assisted them in building, and defended them against the insults of the drunken Indians, being himself never addicted to drinking, because, as he expressed it, he never wished to become a fool. He had built his house upon pillars for safety, in which he always shut himself up, when any drunken frolic was going on in the village. In this house the Bishop Bishop Johannes von Watterville and his company visited, and preached the Gospel to him. It was then, that the Lord opened his heart; he listened with great attention, and at last with tears, respected the doctrine of a crucified Jesus, and received it in faith, as a message, full of grace and truth. During his visit in Bethlehem a remarkable change took place in his heart which he could not conceal. He found comfort, peace, and joy, by faith in his Redeemer, and the Brethren considered him as a candidate for baptism, but hearing that he had been already baptized by a Roman Catholic priest in Canada, they only endeavored to impress his mind with a proper idea of the importance of this sacramental ordinance, upon which, he destroyed a small idol, which he wore about his neck. After his return to Shomokin the grace of God, bestowed upon him, was truly manifest, and his behavior was remarkably peaceful and contented. In this state of mind he was taken ill, was attended by Brother David Zeiberges, and in his presence, fell happily asleep in the Lord, in full assurance of obtaining eternal life, through the merits of Jesus Christ.

CHAPTER IX.

1750, 1751.

The most remarkable occurrence in 1750, was the journey of Bishop Cammerhof and Brother David Zeiberges to Onondago, the chief town of the Iroquois.
at from Bethlehem on the 14th of May, having ob-l a passport from the governor of Pennsylvania, re-ng all subjects of the British government, to fur-their undertaking, and to lead them all possible assis-

The Brethren Mack, Bezold, and Horfesfield accomd them to Wajomick, where they made an agreeable ance with the chiefs of the Nantikok tribe, one of eighty-seven years of age, was a remarkably intel-man. These chiefs desired to know why the Bredo frequently visited their people. This Bishop Cam-swered, by preaching to those assembled for that the will of God concerning their salvation, invitthem to Jesus, that they might be made partakers riches of his grace; adding, that this was the only why the Brethren came into their country. This ation was well received, and proved a blessing to many jomick. An Iroquois of the Cayuga nation was guide, and conducted them to Tiagonu, about one ed and fifty miles up the Susquehannah. They spent ghs on shore in huts made of the bark of trees, ve each night's lodging a name, the first letter of was cut into a tree by the Indians. Bishop Cammer-d the satisfaction to find all the Indians whom he ized on the banks of the Susquehannah in a pleasing . They had remained faithful to the Gospel, and their and cheerful behaviour proved that their souls were the faith of Jesus Christ. Their heathen neighbors likewise to see the Brethren, complaining, that the were entirely perverted since their baptism, not livtheir usual Indian manner, nor ever joining in the ons and customs of their countrymen; thus unimially giving them so good a character, that Bishop rof greatly rejoiced, and praised God for his goodness them.
: inhabitants of Tiagonu, a considerable Indian town, as those of other places, were surprized to find, that even were going to Onondago, and were acquaint-the head-chiefs of the Six Nations, and as their guide
guide purposely spread this account, wherever they came, is gained of them great respect.

From Tiaogu they proceeded by land, and daily met with difficulties, almost insurmountable at first appearance. On the 19th of June they reached Onondago, the chief town of the Six Nations, situated in a very pleasant and fruitful country, and consisting of five small towns or villages, through which the river Zinocfhaa runs. They were lodged at the house of the head-chief Ganaffatcko, who received them with much cordiality. The intention of this journey was, both to fulfill the promise of a visit to the great council of the Iroquois, made last year to the deputies in Philadelphia, and to obtain leave for some Brethren to live either in Onondago, or some other chief town of the Iroquois, to learn the language, and to preach the Gospel to them.

Bishop Cammerhof and David Zeisberger having notified their arrival to the council in the usual manner, they were admitted and received as the deputies of the church of the United Brethren on both sides the ocean, and their message taken into consideration; the council then consisting of twenty-six elderly men of venerable appearance. The consultations upon the message lasted long, many questions were put to the Brethren, and many belts and fathoms of wampum delivered. Bishop Cammerhof was the speaker, and David Zeisberger, who spoke the Masqua language fluently, interpreted. Ganaffatcko was the speaker on the part of the council. But as most of the counsellors were now and then in liquor, their business was frequently interrupted. During a suspension of this nature, the Brethren obtained permission from the council, to take a journey into the country of the Cajuga and Sennecks Indians, as far as Zonethio, the chief town of the latter. They spent about a fortnight on this journey, endeavoring to bring the Gospel among those tribes, but it proved a difficult and dangerous undertaking, not only as to the journey itself, but especially through the ferocity of the Indians.
Bishop Cammerfoft's Journey to Onondage. 123

They suffered much from the savage and drunkenness, especially from the women, who in a state of distress were desperate. Thus their intention was frustrated and they ascribed their safe return merely to the preservation of God. On their arrival, they found that the chiefs had not proceeded any further in their cause. Therefore renewed their petition, and were to succor it on the 20th of July, with the usual ceremonies, received the following decision:

at the Iroquois and the Brethren on both sides the ocean should regard each other as brothers; that this act should be indissoluble, and that two Brethren should have leave to live either in Onondago, or some town, to learn their language.

Brethren praised God for the success of their application immediately on their return, and having d about sixteen hundred miles, arrived in Beth on the 17th of August. The Indian congregation at Shuitten rejoiced the more at their safe return, having apprehensive, that they might meet with some misinformation the Iroquois.

Missionaries had meanwhile been active in leading avert Indians into a more regular course in their religious duties. Without restraining their national liberty too much, it was agreed, that the marriage ceremony should be performed in the church, and the business published. The married people were also exhorted to conduct themselves in this state according to the example of the Holy Scriptures.

At this time there was great want of suitable missionaries for the Indians. Thirty or forty Indians from Senegal baptized and unbaptized, came hither both on Summer and Winter days. The inhabitants found it difficult to lodge them and thus lost the opportunity of celebrating those days. The Elders therefore lamented, that they not send a regular missionary to Senegal, nor nor to those places, where at that time the desire of the people to hear the word of God was general; for there was a great awakening, which extended over the whole Indian country, especially on the Susquehannah.

In many places the Indians met to converse about God. Nothing gave them more pleasure, than when a Brother preached to them the word of life. Nathaniel Seidel and David Zeiburger, who went to Europe, at the latter end of this year, were commissioned to bring over some assistant for this work. Such opportunities were generally made use of by the Indian Brethren, to write or dictate letters to Count Zinzendorf, Bishop von Watteville, or other friends in Europe. These letters contained a plain, yet nervous declaration of their experience, were usually communicated to the congregation, and heard with much pleasure.

In Pachgatgoch, Bishop Cammerhof and Brother Gode preached and administered the Sacraments this year. Brother Buening continued to serve this small congregation, which encamped in huts around his cottage, and God blessed his labors. Most of the baptized at Wechquatnach had removed to Gnadenhuetten.

The Brethren at Bethlehem considering that the inhabitants of the latter place might thereby be distracted for land, purchased a tract of ground on the north side of the Lecha, which was portioned out among the inhabitants by drawing lots, to the satisfaction of all. Two Brethren were appointed to keep watch during the meetings of the congregation, partly on account of the danger attending the fires in the woods, which are frequent in those parts, partly to attend visitors and travellers, and to prevent disorders. In this duty all took their turn.

Among those baptized in 1750, was one Tadewash, called Honest John by the English. His baptism was delayed some time, because of his wavering disposition. But having once been present at a baptism, he said to one of the Brethren: "I am distressed, that the time is not yet come, that I shall be baptized and cleansed in the blood of Christ."
Various Accounts.

rift." Being asked how he felt during the baptism, replied: "I cannot describe it, but I wept and trembled." He then spoke with the missionaries in an unemotional manner, saying that he had been a very bad man in life, that he had no power to resist evil; that he never before been so desirous to be delivered from sin, as to be made partaker of our Lord's grace; and added, that I was baptized and cleansed in his blood." He had this favor soon after, and was named Gideon. The missionaries hesitated also about baptizing another, living in Menodagomekabah, called Big Jacob. He been many years an enemy to the Gospel and its missis, endeavoring with all his might and cunning to obscure the progress of the truth. But, during a severe illness, spirit of God operated upon his heart, his wretchedness was revealed to him, and being in great distress, he asked advice of the Brethren. Cammerhof and others I him diligently, pointed out Jesus unto him as the Savior of the afflicted, and were convinced, that he desired to be saved with all his heart. He owned his sinful life; maintenance, formerly savage and fierce, was changed that of a true penitent, and he constantly repeated his after baptism. He said to Brother Cammerhof: "I tell you that I desire to be cleansed by the blood of our Savior, pray him to have mercy upon me, and to enable to love him above all things." Being asked whether believed that none could save him but the true God, had become a man, died on the cross, and shed his as an atonement for sin, he replied: "I believe that he can save and cleanse me from sin, but the blood Christ alone, this I chiefly desire to experience." Bro. Cammerhof asked further, whether he was willing to himself to our Savior, as his entire and eternal proponent, upon which he answered: "O yes, if he receives me, will also give me strength and grace to live to him alone, I may no longer serve sin and Satan." He was then baptized, and named Paul. God sealed this transfiguration, by a remarkable remarkable perception of his divine presence; and remained faithful to the end.
Bishop Cammerhof's Diocese.

Such instances of the power of the Gospel had blessed effects upon all, and the Indian assistants in them for the instruction and encouragement of the thence. Augustus's brother complained, that he was enough to be baptized; Augustus answered: "Do ther, I also thought to become good, before I came to approach unto the Lord; but he permitted come unto him poor and needy as we are, that be cleansed with his blood. Then he dwells in our and by his Spirit, leads and teaches us, what to do, and to leave undone."

In 1757, the congregations and missions in North America suffered a great loss, by the decease of Bishop Frederick Cammerhof, who had served them with great fulness, and success; he was never intimidated even moat imminent danger, but at the risk of health defied all perils, to gain souls for his Lord and Master Christ. He considered Gnadenheuvelen as a jewel of a very considerable value. When he resided in Bethlehem, he went to that place once a month. The Indian congregations respected and loved him sincerely. There was so much respect and benevolence in his character, that even the savages held him in great esteem. This was the more remarkable instances. A savage Indian on quehannah having been severely reproved by him wicked life, and exhorted to seek remission of sins, faith in Jesus, was so much exasperated, that he him into the wood, with a determination either to beat, or to kill him; when overtaking him, he spoke mild and friendly in his behaviour, that, immediately repenting of his wicked design, he gave ear to Cam adonitions, and returned home with a very different resolution from that he felt out with. Some time after, I to consider his wretched state, turned to Him with power to deliver him from sin, and was baptized 7 man he had purposed to destroy. Bishop Cammerhob.

of baptized eighty-nine Indians during the four years he lived in North America. The last baptismal transfixion

: performed in January at Gnadenhuetten. On the 28th

April it pleased the Lord to call this faithful servant into eternal joy. The Indians were deeply affected by his death, mourned over his loss, as over that of the best of patriots, and even in the year 1782, their journal mentioned, that was held in grateful remembrance among them.

The missionaries severely felt this stroke, and their only consolation was, that the Lord never forsakes his people. They reviewed their covenant together, to remain faithful to the dead, and were strengthened in spirit by the prosperity of the Indian congregation. One of them expresses himself as in a letter written at that time: "Whoever has not seen a congregation like this, can never conceive a true idea of it from description, nor judge of the joy we feel in holding a people of God, gathered from among the heathen: how attentive are they to the word of the sufferings and death of Jesus; how upright and unreserved;

how contrite if they have done amiss; how cordial and sincere in their love to each other; how compassionate towards the distressed or deluded; how affected by holy uplift; how strengthened and comforted by the enjoyment of the Lord's Supper! When this description is compared to their former state, words are inadequate to exalt the power of the cross of Jesus Christ so gloriously manifested. We are thereby excited to love them most cordially; and are willing, for their sake, to endure all ardships." The sincere declarations of the believers affi-ned infinite pleasure to the missionaries. Solomon said, sometimes walk out alone, and shed tears of joy in condering the Lord's goodness towards me." Joshua declared, that lately he could not sleep the whole night for gladness, meditating upon the Lord Jesus, and what he has done for us; that he was ready to burst into tears of joy when he reflected upon the grace conferred upon him. He said: "I have devoted myself anew unto my Savior,

"and duftry, that they might not suffer famine in winter, which too often happens through neglect. By this the Indians became so attached to his gentle directions, that even when the were employed in the harvest by the white people, he begged him to attend them, that he might warn them against danger; for, said they, "We are like sick people
"just recovering, and continually fearing a relapse."

In this year the above-mentioned Chief of Weisenhuck who had been long acquainted with the Brethren and visited Bethlehem, departed this life. He spoke of our Savior to his last breath, and his friends testified, that they had never known any one depart this life with more serenity and happiness.

The state of the congregation in Meniolagometahe came very precarious, the white people endeavoring to drive away the Indians, insisting that they were the lawful procutors of the land. Augustus, in the name of the baptized, who withdrew from the consequences of such a dispute, declared, that they would not refuse to quit the land, though they had long possessed and planted it.

All applications made by the Brethren to purchase it were ineffectual, and it came into the possession of a man, who was no friend to our Indians. Thus the latter foresaw, that they would soon be compelled to quit the country.

The Brethren Nathaniel Seidel and David Zeiherberger having returned from Europe in October, went to Gnadenuitten, and brought a student, John Jacob Schmick, to form the Indians. He was appointed school-master, and proved a successful missionary among them.

Soon after, the Brethren Zehitberger and Gottlieb Besol went on a visit to the Susquehannah, Neikopeko, Shontokin, Wajomick, and other places, visited the Nantikol and Shawanofo, comforted the dispersed Indian Brethren who, from their external connexions, were obliged to reside among the savages, and omitted no opportunity of preach-the Gospel. Bishop Spangenberg also returned from Europe in December, to the great joy of the congregations at Bethlehem and Gnadenuitten, and afforded them of the los and fervent prayers of all their Brethren in Europe.
CHAPTER X.

1752, 1753.

The return of Bishop Spangenberg to North America was of great service to the Indian congregation. He knew it from its infancy, was esteemed as a father, and knew how to guide its members, with that patience, wisdom, and gentle restraint, best adapted to their character and circumstances. On this account his advice was a great support to the missionaries in attending to their various duties.

His first business was, to encourage them, by solemnly renewing his covenant with them to persevere in the service of the Lord, though attended with the greatest difficulties. He then spoke with every individual belonging to the Indian congregation, and found cause to praise God for the happy formation of mind, in which he found most of them. He likewise spoke with each of them concerning that good order and discipline, essentially requisite for the preservation of the congregation. This was well received, and the coun-sil came to the following resolutions:

That the parents should take more care of their children; that the schools should be regularly attended and never missed; that upon the most urgent necessity; that the Indian assistants should pay more attention to the young people; visit the families.
milies in their dwellings, taking notice, whether the children were at home with their parents, or at school; whether strangers were in the town; whether people had assembled, whose conversation or behaviour might prove hurtful; whether any were ailing or distressed; and communicate their remarks to the missionaries in proper time.

That no begging should be suffered, but every one endeavor to earn his bread by diligently attending to his business.

That in their dealings with the white people, they should guard against running into debt, and in general regulate their affairs, so as to make provision for winter and spring: that all the infirm and aged should carefully be attended to; and their wants relieved. That notice should be given, when any intended to be absent from his usual employ.

That no shooting should be permitted on Sundays or festival days, neither in the town nor its neighborhood, and that the greatest caution should be used in proving their guns near the houses.

That no occasion should be given for disturbance either by the inhabitants, or by strangers; and that, in case any should happen, the latter be sent away and the former reprimanded, and if unwilling to return to order, decribed to quit the settlement.

That every housekeeper in Gnadenhütten should sign an agreement, promising to demean himself conformably to these statutes, and in case he should alter his mind, to sell his plantations to the settlement, and leave the place.

It must undoubtedly be ascribed to the grace of God alone, that the Indians, who naturally despise all restraint, not only joyfully agreed to these orders and regulations, but lived in strict compliance with them.

The visits of strange Indians were an object of continual attention, a work of God being observed in the hearts of several. Yet as lodging them in the families became not only troublesome, but the conduct of many, gave offence to the young people, the council resolved to build an house purposely purposely for the reception of strangers. Another was built and appropriated to the use of the baptized Indian visitors from Bethlehem, Meniolagomekah, Fadghatgoch, and other places. The former was called the Strangers' Inn. Towards building the latter, the Brethren in Bethlehem contributed money, and the Indians afforded their work. Each house was superintended by a housekeeper, who paid every attention to the comfort and convenience of his guests.
Ch. X  Embassies of the Nantikoks and Shawanocs.

A present of a spinet having been made for the use of the chapel at Gnadenhuettten, the singing of the congregation was improved, and Brother Schmick played upon it, to the satisfaction and edification of all. He also taught a young Indian to play, who succeeded him.

Some Indian affiants having visited their counymen on the Susquehannah, and preached the Gospel to them, the chief of the Nantikoks nation sent two deputies to the Brethren with a fathom of wampum to solicit further acquaintance. In June, Bishop Spangenberg, Zeitberger, and Seidel, went to Shamokin and Wajomick. In return for this visit, a large embassy was sent by the Nantikoks and Shawanocs to Gnadenhuettten, to establish a covenant with the Brethren. The deputies, with their attendants of women and children, were in all one hundred and seven persons. Their transactions were performed with due Indian solemnity.

July 14th two deputies arrived from Wajomick to announce the arrival of the embassy on the following day. Every one was active in procuring accommodations and provisions for such a large party, and on the 15th a messenger arrived, being sent ten miles forward, with two string of wampum. He addressed the Brethren thus: "We are now coming to you. Gnadenhuettten is a place which delights us. We thought to go to Bethlehem, but being tired and having nothing to eat, we rest with you at present. The heat was great, and we subsisted on nothing but bilberries." The Indian Brethren having sent them four large loaves, they appeared some time after, slowly moving towards the place, in Indian file; the leader singing a song, till he came to the first first house, where they halted. Abraham went to them, and giving his hand to the leader, conducted the inn. After dinner, at their own request the Indians preached Jesus to them, as crucified to redeem sin.
Embassy of the Nantikoks and Shawanoes.

Having received an account of this extraordinary Bishop Spangenberg and some other Brethren arrived Bethlehem on the 16th, and the missionaries and being assembled, he conversed with the Indian Chieftains, them welcome, and invited them and their people to. They intimated, that perhaps their young people might leave to dance; but were told, that the believers felt pleasure in such things, because their God and Saviour was their only joy; to which Bishop Spangenberg added.

"Thence, you are the fathers of your people, there is no need to dance here, for the Brethren did not mean to do so."

This address being well received, their business was very orderly. After supper, a verse of thanks was sung in the Indian language. July 17th, the Indian Chiefs informed, that their words should be heard in the evening. For this purpose, and that all the people present, the whole assembly met upon a raised ground, the large blue cloth being spread in the middle, and properly placed, on one side for the Chiefs, and on the other side for the Brethren, the Nantikoks and Shawanoes, the circle around their Chiefs, and the inhabitants of Gnadenhütten and the missionaries; the women and children forming a circle around the whole assembly, at some distance from it, that they might understand the words of the speaker, and always rise to deliver their speeches. On each side of the circle was kindled, and a small basket, filled with tobacco, was placed in the centre.

The speaker of the embassy, an old Chief called Joshua, delivered his message with great gravity and significant gestures in five different speeches. During these speeches, some firings and belts of wampum in his hand at the close of each sentence was applauded by one or party. Whenever he made a period, another Chief, named White, took up the ftering or belt, and repeated it in English.

Thes Nathanael, an assistant, took the same ftering or belt, and repeated the period in the Mahikan language, and he was followed by Bishop Spangenberg, who did the same in German.

The first speech contained the usual preface, that the two nations, the Nantikoks and the Shawanese, being one in mind, would clear the ears and eyes of their Brethren the Mahikans at Gnadenhuetten, and of the white Brethren at Bethlehem. He then observed, that it gave pleasure to the Chiefs, that the Brethren would speak to their people of Him who dwells above; that their women and children were also pleased with it. "That even the children in the womb, after their birth, would thank the Chiefs, that they had done this for their good." This latter sentence concluded each speech.

In the second, he regretted that the Mahikans, by living so great a distance, had become strangers to them, but now seeing their faces, they acknowledged the Mahikans to be their elder brother.

During the third, he held a belt consisting of six rows of wampum, curiously interwoven, which he explained to be the chain of brotherhood, to remain unbroken, as long as God should suffer the world to stand.

He began the fourth by saying, "Tis a great pity that we do not understand each other." Bishop Spangenberg replied, "But yet it is well, that we may all understand each other, for by translating your words into so many languages, we remember them all, and not one falls to the ground." The speaker then proceeded to request, that both parties might consider themselves as brethren, and assist each other in all circumstances of life, to the utmost of their power. This was greatly applauded.

The speaker having seated himself, produced a triple ftering of wampum, and rising, laid hold of one ftering and uttered these words: "I have now said all I had to say, and this..."
"concludes my speech." Then taking the other two things he added: "My brother Mahikan and my brother from Bethlehem, you have feasted yourselves together and are become one. Three months hence we intend to visit Bethlehem, but we will send a messenger five days before our arrival, and announce it to you, in the name of the Chiefs. We have sent word to the Six Nations, that if spring you gave us to understand, that you would tell us the 'great words' of God, our Creator, and that we have made a chain of friendship with you and should visit you. They were well satisfied and pleased with it." An universal shout of applause confirmed these words. Chief White added, "that their wives and children intended to return from Gnadenhuetten to Wajomick, but that he and some other Chiefs should now proceed to Bethlehem." About five in the evening the assembly broke up, and the Nantikoks and Shawanoë having had their meal, Bishop Spangenberg preached to them in the English language, repeating in a concise but powerful manner, the history of our Lord's life, sufferings, and resurrection, to which they were very attentive. One of the Chiefs desired his people to stay, while he in his own language and manner translated to them what Bishop Spangenberg had said.

On the following day provisions were prepared by the inhabitants of Gnadenhuetten, that they and their guests might all dine together at the close of the conference. A general collection of wampum was made, and the furs and belts necessary for the answer, prepared by the Indian Sitters. Meanwhile the brethren from Bethlehem and the Indian affiliates agreed upon an answer to be given to Nantikoks and Shawanoë; the second conference began in the afternoon, and all being placed as on the foregoing day, Bishop Spangenberg rose and said:

"Brothers, Chiefs of the Nantikoks and Shawanoë, being united, you have travelled far with your people; you have suffered much by the way from heat and famine; your feet are weary and dusty when you came to us, etc."
Embassy of the Nantikoks and Shawanoes.

pring of wampom (holding it up) you wiped our;
cleaned our ears, and cleared our inward parts;
all evil might depart and give room to good will.
with this same pring you told us, that the words we:
spoken to you in the pring, were satisfactory, and that:
women and children, even those yet in the mother’s ib, would rejoice to hear the Gospel of Jesus Christ.
also declared by this pring, that you and the Shawawere one, as we white Brethren of Bethlehem and our an Brethren are one. Brother, take this pring (hold-up a double one), we thank you for coming, dry your it, wipe the dust off your feet, refresh yourselves;
y your hunger; cool yourselves and be cheerful; and God blest the word, which we shall preach to you your children.” Upon this, Chief White took the from Bishop Spanenberg, and repeated his speech; Nantikok language, the Indians applauding each ce. Bishop Spanenberg again rofe with the first belt: mpom given by the Nantikoks and Shawanoes, and ed the whole speech, delivered the preceding day;
antikoks and Shawanoes confirming each sentence:
oud applause; then hanging the belt upon his arm, k up another and said, “Brothers, ye Chiefs of the ikoks and Shawanoes, being one: we rejoice greatly, we have found our brothers. It shall ever remain as have said; we will be one, it is as you have declared, Brethren of Bethlehem and those of Gnadenhuetten are
. This shall last as long as the world.” Chief: having repeated all this in the Nantikok language, Bi-ipangenberg rofe with a second belt given by the In-repeating their words, and holding up the belt, said wer, “Brothers, ye Chiefs of the Nantikoks and anoes, being one; we, the United Brethren of Beth-m and Gnadenhuetten, will hold this chain unbroken, ink shall be torn off, nor shall rust corrode it; and may l, the giver of all good, grant us grace to preserve it; all continue firm between us and our children.” This being repeated, he rofe as before, and said, “Brothers, what
"what you have told us, is perfectly agreeable to us; we delight to serve our fellow-men; even if our enemies should call upon us, we would gladly relieve them; they look if our dear brothers the Nantikoks and Shawanos want our help, we shall always be willing to serve you, our children think so too." White having finished the repetition of this speech, Bishop Spanenberg said, "By thers, we thank you that ye have spoken so much with we have received all your words, and not one has fallen the ground. It is well, that you intend to visit us at Bethlehem. When brothers visit each other often, all sullen ones are done away, and mutual love is promoted. We glad to hear, that you have given notice to the Six Nations of what we told you in spring, namely, that we wish make you acquainted with your God and Creator. It well, that this be done daily. The Six Nations have been united with us these ten years; we have also visited th at Onondago, and two, here present, have been there. Hereupon he delivered to them a tanned deerskin, sayi that they should mend their children's shoes, if torn by way; adding, that sixty buocks of flour and eighty pou of tobacco were ready for them, as a present; all which was received with expressions of great joy. The viocials be placed before them, the Chiefs appointed some servants to distribute them to the people, and every thing was condoned with sobriety and in good order. After dinner, the speaker rose, and said; "We are very well satisfied a thankful, and shall ret well." Before they departed delivered a long speech to his people, to this effect: "I they should look upon the Brethren at Bethlehem and in denhuettun as their brothers, and do them every service in their power." The Chief of the Shawanois having the same to his people, they all retired to their respect lodgings.

July 19th, Bishop Spanenberg and his company return to Bethlehem, and many of the Nantikoks and Shawanos solved to accompany their Chiefs thither. On the 20th the depu deputies from Bethlhem met them with refreshments, upon which they sent a messenger forward, with a string of wampom and the following words: "Brother, I come to visit you; I have no business to transact; but shall be glad to see you in your own house." They soon appeared drawn up in Indian file. The men held their pieces with the muzzle downwards, and an old Chief, carrying the pipe of peace, sang these words: "I rejoice, that I may visit my brethren." Upon entering Bethlehem, Bishop Spangenberg gave them his hand; then turning about, walked before the whole company into Bethlehem, where they were received by the inhabitants, with sound of trumpets, and lodged in huts erected for them. They stayed here several days, and made a solemn covenant with the Brethren, attended with the same ceremonies and speeches as in Gnadenhuetten. The Brethren here directed their chief attention to the conversion of the heathen, and to make them acquainted with their Creator and Redeemer.

Bishop Spangenberg preached again to them, and they were present at two baptisms, during which they appeared much affected. The regular and cheerful course of the congregation at Bethlehem seemed to leave a deep impression upon their minds. One of the oldest Chiefs declared his thoughts concerning himself and his people as follows: "Brethren, we are altogether buried in sin; have patience with us, in the course of a year or two a change may take place. We are like colts in training. Your words please us much. We feel something in our hearts, and though we do not comprehend it all, we shall understand it by degrees, but our motions are slow."

Having informed them of the covenant made between the Brethren and the Iroquois, renewed last year by Brother Cameron, and shown them the strings and belts of wampom ratifying the same, they were desired to consider of the best means of cultivating an acquaintance, and of preaching the Gospel to them, to which they promised to return an answer in three months. Then the Brethren, Sisters, and and children gave them some useful presents, and all was concluded by a speech from the oldest speakers, expressing their gratitude, and confirmed by shouts of applause. On the 23rd of July they returned home.

Notice was immediately sent to the government in Philadelphia of this embassy. This was the more needful, as the enemies of the Brethren had even inferred calumny in the public papers, concerning the late Bishop Cammerhof's journey to Onondago, made in 1754, with a view to alarm government. The principal accusations were, that Brother Cammerhof intended to persuade the Indians to join the French against the English; that he advised them not to sell any more land to the English, and that he had endeavored to prejudice their minds against Mr. Conrad Weisser, interpreter to government. Though his Excellency, James Hamilton, governor of Pennsylvania, was convinced of the falsity of these and other accusations by conferring with Bishop Cammerhof himself, yet these public calumniators could not be silenced; and therefore when Bishop Spangenberg waited upon the governor in the summer of this year, he gave his Excellency a full and satisfactory explanation, with a view to prevent any suspicion, throwing in the most unequivocal manner, that the Brethren were, from every public and private motive, attached to government from sincere affection. This declaration had the desired effect.

Two deputies were likewise sent to the great council of the Mahikan nation at Westenbuck, to acquaint them with the embassy of the Nantikoks and Shawanoes, with which they appeared much pleased; and as a proof of their satisfaction, made Abraham, an assistant at Onadenhuette, a captain. The Brethren were forry for this step, fearing that it might tend to the prejudice of this valuable man, and the event proved their fears to be unjust.

In July 1751, the Brethren Zeisberger and Gottfried Rundt, accompanied by Martin Mack, set out for Onondago, agreeably to the article of treaty, by which the great council permitted two Brethren to reside there and learn the lauguage.
shortly before they reached that town they were met by any Chiefs of the Oneida tribe, belonging to the Six Naus, who with great vehemence opposed their proceeding their journey, pretending to be entirely ignorant of the enact made between the Brethren and the Iroquois at Onondago, and frequently repeating these words, "You are vicious men, we have been warned against you by the white toole, and therefore forbid you to proceed at your peril; that busineses have you to learn the language? other people are engaged to do that." The Brethren did not suffer themselves to be so easily repulsed, and relying on the help the Lord, desired that a solemn council might be held the following day by the Chiefs, to consider their busineses.
It being granted, Brother Zeisberger addressed them so earnestly that they changed their minds, and having completed the fringes of wampum, which the Brethren were ring to the council in Onondago, and considered their sign, they granted them full liberty to proceed, adding:
fee are convinced that your busineses is not a bad one, and at your words are true." The Brethren arrived the same ing at Onondago, and were lodged in the house of one Chief.
hey soon made their arrival known to the great council, ying an account of the death of Bishop Cammerhof, and wing their covenant made with the Iroquois two years begging likewise that, according to leave given, the hen David Zeisberger and Gottfried Rundt might be nitted to reside among them, and to learn their language.
council returned an answer the same day, that these Bre-
should have liberty to dwell among them and to learn language; they also expressed their sorrow at the deatho worthy a man as Cammerhof, "who loved the Indians much, and had proved himself among them as an upright man, without guile." Finally they renewed the mu-lation between them and the Brethren, and the aker, to shew his earnestness, squeezing both his hands very together, said: "Thus all the Chiefs are disposed:" the rest pro-pronounced a loud tone of affirmation. Thus no opposite was made, but rather a dispute arose among the Chiefs, whic nation should receive the two Brethren first. Brother Mac having returned to Bethlehem, the Brethren began a regugular house-keeping, and experienced so much attention respect, and assistance from all quarters, that they often exclaimed with amazement: "This is the Lord's doing." The lived in the Chief's house, and by particular appointmenof the great council, all councils were held in it, that the Brethren might become well acquainted with their manor of treating subjects. They were also permitted to enter every house in the town, that they might have sufficient opportunity of conversing with the people, and learning the language.

Thus they lived in harmony and peace, availing themselves of their unreferred intercourse with the Indians, to preach to them the words of life. They earned their bread by surgical operations, chiefly by bleeding, and by the laboof their hands. When the Indians got drunk and troublesome, they retired into the woods, till the frolic was over.

From Onondago they made a journey into the country of the Tuscaroras and Cajugas. In the latter, they found great opposition from the white people, and were so much abused by a rum-trader, that the Indians were obliged to interfere and deliver them from his hands by force. Upon their return to Onondago, they found the men in readiness to set out on their winter hunt, and thus as none but the women would be at home, they resolved to return to Bethlehem for some time, and arrived there in December.

In Meniologomekah, the missionary Grube and his wife inhabited a miserable cottage. Among other inconveniences, yhey had to suffer their share of a general famine in those parts, but were comforted under all outward affliction, by perceiving, that the Gospel entered with power into the hearts of the heathen.

The course of the congregation in Pachagtoch became more pleasing, Bishop Spangenberg preached the Gospel th
h. X. Second Embassy of the Nantikoks and Shawanoes. 143.

At power of the Spirit of God, one of the assistants from Gadenhuettten being interpreter. By degrees, the number of inhabitants increased so much, that a resolution was taken to erect a large chapel and school-house. All the inhabitants took their share in this work, with great willingness, and the missionaries were excited to praise God for the grace bestowed on these people, naturally given to sloth, but now ready to perform the hardest labor, for the cause of the Gospel. When the house was finished and solemnly dedicated to the service of the Lord, the missionaries rendered thanks unto him, that during the whole work, there had not been the least appearance of dissatisfaction. The declarations of the Indians plainly proved the effects of the grace of God. Converting one day familiarly together, they were heard to say: "We used formerly to meet for the purpose of drinking, dancing, fighting, and other revellings, but now we assemble to rejoice, that our Savior has delivered us from these things, and to thank him, that he has drawn us unto himself." Joshua, Samuel, and Martin, who were employed as interpreters in the meetings, agreed together, that when one, whose turn it was, found himself rather lukewarm in heart, he should mention it, that another might interpret in his stead. In general, the declarations made by the Indian Brethren and Sisters, and even by the children of Gadenhuettten, gave great joy and comfort to the missionaries.

Agreeably to the promise made last year, another embassy of Nantikoks and Shawanoes arrived at Bethlehem, by way of Gadenhuettten, in March 1753. It consisted of twenty-two persons. Among the retinue were three Iroquois Indians, with whom Brother Zeisberger had lodged, and their joy in seeing each other was mutual. Many baptized Indians came likewise from Meniolagomakah and Gadenhuettten, to be present at the transactions of this embassy. One part of their commission was, to thank the Brethren, in the name of the two nations, for their liberality towards them during the famine last autumn, declaring that they must must all have perished for want, had not the Brethren at Bethlehem sent them timely relief. They observed, that after many consultations, they could not find any method of becoming acquainted with the language of the Brethren, adding, that at the desire of the Iroquois, the Nantikoks would retire further inland; but that they would not forsake the friendship of the Brethren, but visit them often. They all made a proposal in the name of the Iroquois, that the Indians in Gnadenhuetten should remove to Wajomick, not against their own inclination; observing, however, that in case of a removal, the land should not become their property, but remain in the possession of the Iroquois. The earnestly besought the Brethren not to suspect any evil motives, but rather to believe the reverse. The Brethren in Bethlehem should hold them by one, and they, the Nantikoks and Shawanofe, by the other hand, and thus keep them safe. During this last part of the speech, the speech changed countenance, and began to tremble, well aware that this proposal would be acceptable neither to the Brethren at Bethlehem, nor to the Indians at Gnadenhuetten. However, both he and the other Chiefs were relieved from their fears, when they heard the answer of the Brethren, implying, "that they would not determine any thing positively against it, but must inflict upon this point, that "means of constraint should be used on either side." Some mistrusted their honesty, though they conceived the suspicions for the present, not conceiving why the Iroquois should propose the transplanting of the converted Indians from Gnadenhuetten, without alleging any plausible reason, and that not immediately, but through the interference of the Nantikoks and Shawanofe. The event proved that they were not mistaken. The deputies of the congregation agreed to the proposal, on condition that they should have full liberty to take their teachers with them. It was further resolved that no idle rumors should be credited by either party. If any thing material occurs, inquiry should be made, and the real truth ascertained.
fane ceremonies accompanied these consultations, as before described.

Many meetings were held, on account of the heathen visitors, chiefly in the English language, and all united in prayer, that God would cause his word to bring forth abiding fruit. It was evident in many, that they did not hear the doctrine of the sufferings and death of Jesus, in vain. Some were once looking at a painting of our Lord's crucifixion: "Behold," said one of them to another near him, "how many wounds he had, and how they bleed; I have also heard the Brethren say, that he was forrowful unto death, and prayed in an agony, in such a manner, that the sweat ran from him like drops of blood." The other listened with astonishment, and seemed lost in thought. Having spent a week agreeably in Bethlehem, they returned to Wajomick, towards the end of March.

It appeared that these visits did more harm than good to the inhabitants of Gnadenhuettten. Not only the people at large became fond of forming alliances with other nations, but several Indian Brethren, who were not as yet well established and rooted in Jesus Christ, began to think again of their heathenish customs. Some forsook the congregation, and brought themselves into difficulties of mind and body; others lost their cheerfulness and serenity, became gloomy and sly, and much time elapsed, before they were relieved. The missionaries felt the most pungent grief on these occasions; they were however comforted in some measure, by observing, that none of those who thus left the congregation, were enemies to it, but valued the Gospel, the power of which they had felt, retaining a sincere love for the Brethren. The missionaries remarked, that it was evident, that our Savior had truly conquered the hearts of the baptized; for though they prayed for a time, yet He bore them with patience; many were reclaimed, and departed this life as ransomed sinners. Thus they always found reason to moderate both their joy and grief over the course of the Indian flock. The greater number remained faithful, and by the grace of God overcame the temptation cleaving to Jesus Christ to the end.

The presence of the Lord attended their daily work; particularly on festival days, and the missionaries were encouraged and strengthened by their voluntary declarations whenever they were visited. Michael speaking of his dwelling in Gnadenhuetten, said to a missionary: "I have lived in Shekomcko, there our Savior followed me faithfully and when I removed thither, he preferred me. Here I have heard words which are a cordial to my heart; I continue to hear, and am strengthened. I would rather die than be persuaded to leave you." An Indian said, that both at home and abroad the Lord had been in an uninterrupted intercourse with God her Savior that whereby her love towards him had been greatly strengthened, and her joy in the Holy Ghost increased. The young men of the Indians said: "My heart is poor and needy, but it belongs to our Savior, and all the good I possess, proceeds from him. When I converse with him, I am always happy at the foot of the cross. I am hungry and thirsty, and I pray for that great day, on which we shall celebrate the Lord’s Supper. I will remain the property of our Savior, and it is not for this that he will keep me." The joy and confidence with which the Indians met the dissolution, was the most evident proof, that they had been b by faith in the Son of God, and were animated with the assurance of everlasting life. Thus the edifying depart of Gottlieb, the first-fruit of the Delaware nation, gave particular joy to the missionaries. Before he expired, he said to Brother Martin Mack: "I shall soon depart from my Savior; this makes me rejoice, because I know that I shall go to him as a poor and pardoned sinner." He was moved at uttering these words, that his tears prevented him adding more, and soon after he fell asleep in Jesus.

The unbaptized showed more faith in Jesus Christ, in the dying moments, than was expected. A mother who bitterly over her unbaptized son, living on the Susquehanna, out of the reach of any missionary, and at that time sick unto death, was comforted by his own declarations. Upon her going to see him, he addressed her to the following effect: "Dear mother, I am very ill, and shall probably die, but do not weep so much; I shall not be lost; for I am assured, that Jesus our Savior, the God whom the Brethren preach, and who was wounded for me, will receive me!" and in this firm hope he died rejoicing.

April the 22d, Brother Zeisberger returned to Onondago with Brother Henry Frey. Both were treated with the same esteem, as before, and with the greatest hospitality, as long as the Indians themselves had any thing to eat. However, the war between the English and French gave the Brethren much uneasiness, and the great council intimated that they would do well to leave the place, if it should extend farther towards Onondago, promising to give them timely notice. They attempted to preach the Gospel in the adjacent parts, but were much weakened by various diseases, suffering famine with the inhabitants. Brother Zeisberger having made good progress in the language, and omitted no opportunity to preach salvation to all men, returned to Beulahhem with his assistant, after half a year's residence in Onondago, by advice of the great council, and on account of the troubles of war.

About this time, the small congregation of Indians, settled at Wechquatnach, were driven away by their neighbors; and some retired to Wajomick. Thirty-four of these people having given satisfactory proofs of their sincerity, obtained leave to remove to Gnadenhuetten.

The posseffor of Meniolagemekah did not proceed so far, as to expel the Indian inhabitants, and the cause of the Gospel flourished, in defiance of all opposition. An Indian assistant came every Sunday to this place, to serve as interpreter to Brother Buening, who was preacher and schoolmaster. An instance of the simplicity of one of the Brethren whom he instructed in writing, gave him pleasure.
He brought him a prayer written out of the fulness of heart, as follows: "My dear Savior! my name is Niel! I will open my whole heart to thee, in writing my preference: I am very deficient in every thing. I that I have not yet devoted my whole heart unto thee and yet thou hast died for me. Jesus Christ! I with a heart that thou couldst rejoice over me! dear Savior, I would willingly live so as to please thee." An old man of seventy-two, came and told him that he had lived with the white people in the Jerseys, with whom he frequently conversed about religion. He had been poor all denominations, and wished to know, which religion the best. Brother Buening answered, that he would take upon him to judge, but that in all men one thing quired, which is, to believe in, and love Jesus Christ, the creator of all things, who became a man, died for our sins and rose for our justification. Whoever in any denomination sacrifices the truth of this, is sinned, and possest eternal life.

The Brethren Martin Mack and Grube visited Shon and several places on the Susquehanna, endeavoring to claim the straying sheep, and to awaken the heathen among the flocks of sin. With this view, Grube made a journey into several neighboring places, and was graciously permitted by many surrounding dangers. In one place, a ill-desiring Shawanoe and Delawares came to his hooft, and unknown to him, demanded his life, asking "That he was a wicked man and a seducer." His hosts answered: "You mistake your man, I have never seen such an amiss in him; he is in my house, and I will defend him there, nor shall any man on earth dare to injure him!" The day after, he accompanied Brother Grube part of the way to Shomokin, but did not tell him in what danger he had been. Some time after he believed the Gospel to be true with his whole heart unto the Lord, and then related the circumstances.

Brother Christian Froelich was meanwhile engaged rescuing the negroes in several parts of the Jerseys, by he was well received. He preached the Gospel to above a hundred of them, and likewise visited them in their plantations. At New York he heard of a criminal who was to be hanged the following day, whom he with another Brother visited in prison. Here he described to him the great love of Jesus to all repenting and returning prodigals, encouraging him to turn unto the Lord, by quoting the instance of the pardoned thief; and great indeed was his joy, when he saw the poor criminal receive this word of comfort and pardon, with a believing heart, and with numberless tears of unsought repentance.

C H A P T E R X I.

1754.

The course of the Indian congregation had hitherto been, in general, pleasing and un molested, notwithstanding its various defects and vicissitudes; but now troubles began, both of the most unpleasant kind, and grievous in their consequences. They chiefly originated in the above-mentioned proposal to transplant the congregation from Gnadenhuetten to Wajomic.

For the reasons above stated, the Brethren in Bethlehem long wished, that the converted Indians might withdraw into that country, and make a settlement. But it gradually became evident, that the savages were secretly determined to join the French, and commence hostilities, again English. They first wished to furnish a safe retreat their countrymen, the Indians of Gnadenhütten, that might the more easily fall upon the white people in parts. In this view the Iroquois had called the Nars from Wajomic to their neighborhood, to make for the Christian Indians. They supposed this would not be disagreeable to the Brethren at Bethleh the believing Indians at Shekomeko having nine ago obtained leave from the great council at Onond by means of a treaty with Bishop Spangenberg, to to Wajomic. Thus their plot appeared upon the well contrived, and the pressing invitation sent converted Indians to go to Wajomic, was part of scheme.

In this point of view the Brethren at Bethlehem rea on to rejoice at the offer, nor could the misfortune encourage the Indians to accept of it; yet they very much not to dissuade them, lest it should be again reported they made slaves of their Indians, and deprived them that free exercise of their judgment, upon which vi vages pride themselves so much. They therefore interfered in the consultations of the inhabitants of Gnadenhütten on this subject. The latter were averse their pleasant settlement, more especially after they vered the true motives of the Iroquois, justly fearing they would at last be deprived of their teachers, and even intercourse with the Brethren. Several however g better of their scruples, and resolved to move to Wajomic.

Abraham and Gideon were the most active in prose this affair. The latter, formerly called Tadeuskun had waited long for baptism, as mentioned above proved by his whole behavior, that the doubts of the missionaries concerning his steadiness were too well founded. He was like a reed, shaken with the wind. Hearing the heathen Delawares had nominated him their chief, gan to side with Abraham, who being now a captain of the Mahican nation, insisted, that the converted Indians, having once accepted the invitation, could not refuse going to Wajomick. These two men fought to make a party, and though they did not meet with much success at first, yet it occasioned much contention between husbands and wives, parents and their children. They gained their point so far, that on the 24th of April, sixty-five persons, and shortly after five more, removed from Gnadenhuetten to Wajomick without a missionary. Most of them burst into tears at taking leave, promising, that they would cleave unto the Lord Jesus, and remain faithful. Fifteen more repaired to Neckspecko without any invitation; and all representations of the inevitable injury which would accrue to their souls, were in vain. To see these people depart, filled the missionaries with the most pungent grief. They and the Elders of the congregation at Bethlehem, could do nothing, but wait in silence, and comfort themselves with considering, that though the enemy designs mischief, God has all things in his power, and can bring good out of evil.

Gnadenhuetten had scarcely suffered this great loss of inhabitants, when it was partly supplied from another quarter. The new proprietor of Meniolagomakah declared that the Indians should quit that place. The believing Indians applied immediately to the Brethren, who sent them a cordial invitation by the missionary Martin Mack to remove to Gnadenhuetten. Their joy was inexplicable. They said: "Let us instantly break up! our Brethren have opened their arms to receive us, and call unto us, to fly to them in our distress." They got ready in great haste, and before the end of April, the whole congregation, consisting of forty-nine persons, moved to Gnadenhuetten.

The Indian inhabitants were now excited to new zeal and attachment, in promoting the real welfare of their people. They owned, that their former deficiency in love to our Savior, and the consequent want of true brotherly love, had weakened their hands in the execution of New Gnadenbutten built.

of their office. They now solemnly renewed their covenant, to be faithful unto the Lord and his people.

Soon after, it became necessary for the inhabitants of Gnadenbutten to remove to the north side of the river Lesha, the land on the Mahony being too much impoverished, and other circumstances requiring a change of situation. Jacob, an affiant, expressed himself concerning the future course of the congregation, thus: "When the snakes come forth out of the ground in spring, they have till their old winter-coat on; but by creeping through a narrow hole, they rid themselves of the old skin, and appear as new-born. Thus I wish, that we may leave every thing by which we have displeased the Lord in the old place and bring nothing into the new, that is not well-pleasing to him."

In the removal of the buildings, the chapel only excepted the Indians were kindly assisted by the congregations at Bethlehem, Nazareth, Christianbrunn, and Gnadenburg who furnished not only workmen and materials, but even contributions in money. Unanimity and diligence contributed so much, towards the progress of this work, that the first twenty houses were inhabited by the 4th, and the foundation-stone of the new chapel laid, on the 11th June. Bishop Spangenberg offered up a most fervent prayer and delivered a powerful discourse on this solemn occasion. The houses were soon after completed, and all the families for the children of ca fex to be properly taken care of. The dwellings placed in such order, that the Mahikans lived on one side, the Delaware on the other side. The Brethren at Bethleham took the culture of the old land on the Maho upon themselves, made a plantation of it for the use of the Indian congregation, and converted the old chapel in a dwelling, both for the use of those Brethren and Siute who had the care of the plantations, and for millionarues passing on their visits to the heathen.

A sym.
A synod was held in New Gnadenhütten, from the 6th, to the 11th of August, and the chapel consecrated. Many Indian affidants were invited to this synod, the chief intention being maturely to consider the situation of the Indian missions.

Towards the end of June, the missionary Mack feeling a strong impulse to visit the emigrants at Wajomiack, set out for that place with Brother Gottfried Roeller. The river was much overflowed; but no difficulties or perils could deter him from proceeding. God graciously regarded his faith, and saved him out of many dangers, in a manner almost miraculous. He was greatly comforted, when he found that the Indian Brethren had not departed from the Lord, but that even some, whose conduct at Gnadenhütten had not been the most pleasing, had turned to Him with their whole heart, and received pardon and peace. They were very desirous to have a missionary residing amongst them, and in this view propofed to send deputies to Onondago, who should likewise request the council to grant them land on the Susquehannah as their hereditary property, where they might all live together undisturbed, as a church of God. Some of them had borne such testimonies of our Lord and Savior to the neighboring heathen, that when the missionary arrived, they were prepared to hear him with gladness, though formerly particularly attached to their heathen sacrifices, to which they ascribed all the good they enjoyed. One observed: "I am one of those, who with to hear your words, for I believe, that I have hitherto been in the wrong, and shall mis of salvation. I am therefore uneasy, and desirous to know the right way." Others spoke to the same effect, and Brother Mack preached with great freedom, pointing out the right way, by inviting them to become partakers of the free grace, offered unto us through the meritorious sufferings of Jesus. He found here several of the baptized, who had formerly stayed from Shekomeko, and rejoiced to have this opportunity of affuring them again of his love; but he felt much much uneasiness in discovering an Indian book circulad here, which the savages affirmed to contain every thing they wanted to know, of God, of the world, and of hunting and consequently affirmed that the Bible was useless. By this delusion the poor heathen were more confirmed in their unbelief. The missionary found all the people living on the Sulquannah in great fear and dread, both of the inroads made in the country by the Catawbas, then at war with the Six Nations, and of the French, who threatened the Indians with fire and sword, unless they acted in concert with them against the English. Besides this, the people of New England, who laid claim to Wajomick, were advancing, and intended to seize the land by force.

Soon after Brother Mack's return, the Brethren Grube and Gottlieb Rundt set out on a visit to Wajomick and Neko-pakok; in both places their discourses were so well received by the Indians, that they desired the interpreter to repeat them. The Brethren were always sorry to be obliged to preach to the heathen by an interpreter; and therefore began to look out for men, who might make it their principal study, to learn the language of the heathen to whom they were called. For this purpose two students, Fabricius a Wedfaedt, came this year to Gnadenhuetten, the former learn the Delaware, and the latter the Shawanoese language.
Fabricius made a quick progress, and was soon able to compose some Delaware hymns, and to translate several pations of the Scriptures into the Delaware language: Broth-Grube did the same, and kept a singing-school for the and young brethren, by which he himself greatly improvin the language, for the Indians always corrected him if made any fault. His scholars learnt the hymns and tunes with great ease, and one of them brought him an hymn composed by himself. Brother Schmick likewise had made quick a progress in the Mahikian dialect, that he preachfluently, translated the history of our Savior's sufferings composed some hymns, and now and then translated short counts of the Missions among the Greenlanders and Negroes which were read to the Indian congregation. David Zeisberger spoke the Maquaw language fluently; yet the learning of these difficult languages was greatly impeded by the want of the proper means of instruction.

The congregation at Pachgatgoch, consisting of more than one hundred Indians, proceeded this year in a pleasing course. The missionaries praised God, especially for the unreserved manner in which the Indians owned their defects and asked for grace. One of them said, "that he was in doubt, how he should behave in future, his heart being as unbroken as that of a stubborn horse." He added: "A man may be a very wild horse, but if he can only once make it fall out of his hand, then it will always come to him in time; but I am not so disposed towards our Savior, who is continually offering me his grace. I have once tasted grace out of his hand, yet my heart still runs away; even then, when he holds out his grace unto me. Thus we Indians are so very stupid, that we have not even the feline of beasts."

As to externals, they had much disturbance towards the end of this year. Four white people having been murdered by some unknown Indians at Stockbridge, the inhabitants of the neighboring town of Sharen were in the utmost consternation, and the magistrates sent a peremptory order to Pachgatgoch, that no Indian should set foot upon the land, under pain of death. A suspicion arising, that one of the murderers was secreted here, the Brethren were ordered to submit to disagreeable examinations, by which never their innocence was fully proved.

This year Brother David Zeisberger returned to his post at Onondago, with Brother Charles Frederic, and resided there almost a whole year. The great council was again so well attended as to assemble in the house, in which these Brethren lodged; and a council held soon after their arrival, devoted particular notice. They had in consideration a matter of the Nantikoks, deferring the Iroquois seriously to weigh the cause, why the Indians so remarkably diminished niished in number, adding, that in their opinion, it proceed ed merely from drunkenness; that they should thereof resolve to drink no rum for the space of four years; and it would then appear that they would increase; th en also they would not be so often ill, nor die so early for all this was owing to their drinking rum. They fo that drunkenness was also the reason that the Indians did not plant at the proper season, and thus suffered to starve by famine. This was more earnestly enforced by a drawing upon wood, representing that God sees those who are drank, and how the devil would hereafter torment all who are addicted to this vice on earth.

Though this remonstrance was made with great earnestness, yet the members of the great council themselves could not resolve to attend to it, but continued to drink as usual, which at length proved so troublesome to the Brethren, that they begged and obtained leave to build a small house for their private use. This dwelling, though very small, was the neatest in Onondago, and proved such a comfortable retirement, that they resolved to stay there during the winter. They earned their livelihood by cutting timber, grinding hatchets, and chiefly building houses for other people, yet they frequently suffered want, and were obliged to forage for roots in the forest. The Indians would sometimes express their affrontment at their submitting to live in poverty, merely out of love to them; and their chaffed to suffer hunger, when they might have plenty in their own country. But the Brethren thought themselves sufficiently rewarded, when now and then they could enter into a familiar conversation with the Indians, and describe them the love of God, the Savior of all men, which he had given them also.

In New Gnadenhuetten, the mission workers had much reason to rejoice at the internal course of their congregation. The shop Spangenberg having returned from Europe, took pains to teach, exhort, and comfort the whole congregation and every division of it, particularly instructing the people.
educate their children in the fear of the Lord; and even tending to the children with the greatest diligence. God undoubtedly blessed his labors, and the missionaries were indebted for his advice and assistance in the performance of their respective duties. Notwithstanding the grief excited by the above-mentioned divisions, they had now reason to rejoice at the many instances of the power of the Gospel on the hearts of the heathen visitors, and at the condence and faith of many Indians, who departed this life.
child seeing its mother weep, said shortly before it expired, "My poor mother, why do you weep so much? you need not be anxious about me, for I am going to our Savior." The latter end of a brother called Jeptha, above 20 years old, was truly edifying: he sent for all his children, taking an affectionate leave of them made them pro-life, that they would faithfully adhere to Christ and to a congregation, and never suffer themselves to be seduced the world. He then expressed his desire to depart and to with Christ, and soon after fell asleep. He had been an dian of great rank; and the lawful possessor of a large diff of land in the district of New York, but was expelled
the white people.
The external troubles of Gnadenhuetten still continued.
the inhabitants were not only charged with a kind of ute, to show their dependence upon the Iroquois, but armed the following very singular message, brought by above-mentioned old Chief of the Shawanofo, called know, and Gideon Tadeuskund, who had proved unfaithto their cause: "The great head, that is, the council of the Iroquois in Onondago, speak the truth, and lie not:
key rejoice that some of the believing Indians have moved to Wagemick, but now they lift up the remaining Ma-sikans and Delawares, and set them also down in Waemick; for there a fire is kindled for them, and there they may plant and think on God: but if they will not bear, the great head, or council, will come and clean their ears with a red-hot iron:" that is, set their houses on fire, and send musket-balls through their heads. Parnous then
then turned to the missionaries, earnestly demanding them, not to hinder the Indians from removing to Wajmick; for that the road was free, therefore they might visit their friends there, stay with them till they were tire and then return to their own country. These last words occasioned much reflection and uneasiness in the minds of the believing Indians, as they supposed them to be a sure token that the Iroquois only pretended to favour them, but truth had evil designs against their peace. They gave an answer, but said, that they should consult their great com in Bethlehem, concerning the contents of this message.

CHAPTER XII.

1755.

Thus was the congregation situated, at the beginning of the year 1755; a year of great trouble and affliction. The more the inhabitants of Gnadenhuetten considered and debated upon the above message, sent by the Iroquois, the more their uneasiness increased, and a variety of opinions took place. Some thought best to repair to Wajmick; others refused to emigrate. The adventurers especially those in Neskopeko, used all their endeavors to strengthen the former, representing the inevitable danger they would expose themselves to, in disobeying the orders
New Troubles.

vois: these infinuations had also too great weight, as the believers could not forget that threat, that should be cleaned with a red-hot iron.

while the Brethren at Bethlehem had received au-telligence, that the removal of the Indian con-to Wajomick did not originate in the great council x Nations, but that only the Oneida tribe, with the delawares and Mahikans, had formed this plan, and scribed it to the Iroquois in general. It had wise discovered, that several persons of charafter elphia joined them in endeavoring to remove the Indians to Wajomick, hoping, that the people of land would thereby be prevented from taking pos-that place, to which they themselves laid some The Brethren heard also, that the happy course of red Indians at Wajomick had not been of long and that many of these poor people had not only in their own hearts, but had done harm to others. ended to increase the scruples of the Brethren with the removal of the Christian Indians; and though not chuse to inform them of the stratagem made Oneidas, Delawares, and Mahikans, nor of the of the gentlemen of Philadelphia, yet they could n from giving them a faithful and timely caution. rs of Bethlehem sent therefore a deputation to üetten, in the beginning of February; confiding kethren, Christian Henry Rauch, Nathanael and Seidel, who appointed a meeting of all the bapconversce with them in a friendly and cordial manner, speak with their children. Having first reminded the rich grace they had received from God our Say declared the deep grief, felt by the Brethren for; who had gone astray, and relapsed into heathen-showed, from recent instances, the misery of thus flighted the grace of God, pointing out signs of an hour of temptation, and representing intent danger of giving ear to seducers. They further
ther observed, that the Brethren did not prohibit any one from leaving Gnadenhuetten, but would only guard them against all hurt to their souls, and thus, on some future day, be able to prove to them, that in warning them, they had did charged their duty. Then kneeling down with the whole congregation, they with many tears recommended this beloved people to the grace, mercy, and protection of God.

This declaration of the Brethren produced the desired effect in most of the Indians. Several who had not only deviated, but endeavored to draw others aside, public and of their own accord, owned their transgressions, begging forgiveness of the rest; which was granted with joy.

The missionaries observe in their account, that perhaps the powerful grace of God was never more evident, than in seeing an Indian, naturally obstinate and inflexible to the last degree, appear before a whole body of people as an humbled sinner, confess his faults, and ask pardon of God and of those whom he had offended. Some however, still supposing that the above-mentioned message was really sent by the head-chiefs of the Iroquois, and that they must follow their dictates as obedient children, would not yield to conviction.

However when Paxnous returned on the 11th of February with thirteen persons in his retinue, to demand an answer to the message he had brought last year, they were all so far agreed that an answer was delivered to him in Bethlehem, with belt of wampum, to the following effect: "That the Brethren would confer with the Iroquois themselves, concerning the intended removal of the Indians at Gnadenhuetten, ten to Wajomic." Paxnous, being only an ambassador in this business, was satisfied, and even formed a closer acquaintance with the Brethren. His wife, who heard the Gospel preachd daily, was so overcome by its divine power, that she began to see her lost estate by nature, prayed and wept earnestly for the forgiveness of sins in the blood of Jesus, and earnestly begged for baptism. Her husband, however, lived thirty-eight years with her in marriage, to mutual willingly gave his consent, prolonged his stay em, was present in the chapel, and deeply af- en his wife was baptized by Bishop Spangenberg, powerful sensation of the presence of God. The ing they returned home, Parnous' wife declaring, elt as happy as a child new born. Frederic spanied them to Wajomick, partly to look after red, who lived dispersed on the Susquehanna, to lodge those missionaries, who should visit them in Gnadenhuette or Bethlehem.
New Troubles.

g after, another message was sent from Wajomick nhuetten, commanding the baptized in a severe for the last time, to go to Wajomick. To this ered undauntedly, "No one has persuaded us to inadenhuettten, it is our free choice, and there- e we will stay; where we may both hear the words savior, and live in rest and peace." An Indian bro-

"What can the head-captain of the Six Nations in exchange for my soul? He never considers it will fare at last!" Another said, "God, who daved me, can protect me, if he please. I am id of the anger of men; for not one hair of my 1 fall to the ground, without his will." A third exnent thus: "If even any one should lift up his against me and say, Depart from the Lord and the s; I would not do it." Thus most of them declared ce upon God, and remained firm.

aggregation in Gnadenhuettten had now a short f, and proceeded in the usual order, to general . The Brethren availed themselves of this period, 7 renew the observance of those principles, laid the synods and other conferences, concerning the mong the heathen, as also to send missionaries to administer the sacraments to the Christian In- ling in other places, and to spread the Gospel heathen far and near.

view, the Brethren Christian Seidel and Henry to Wajomick and Netkopeko. In returning from L
the latter place they were graciously preferred from imminent danger. Some Indians, who were averse to the preaching of the Gospel, lay in ambush in the wood, intending to tomahawk or shoot them, but providentially missing the direct road, the Brethren escaped.

Christian Seidel twice this year to Pachagatoch, baptized several Indians, administered the Lord’s Supper to the communicants, passing through Oblong, Salisbury, Shekomeko, and Reinsbeck, where his animated testimony of the Gospel was well received by many. He rejoiced greatly over the small church of God in Pachagatoch, which truly deserved the character given it by an Indian brother: “Me-thinks,” said he, “we are a small seed, fown in the ground, where it first lies dormant, but gradually springs up, gets into ear and ripens. Our Savior has planted a small seed in this place: it has sprung up, the plant is now nurtured, and I wish that we may all ripen and bear fruit.” They were even an example to their Christian neighbors. One of them visited a sepulchre, and conversed with him and his family till past midnight, concerning his first awakening, and what the Lord had done for his soul, not without blessing. Another being questioned by a company of Christians concerning the fear of death, replied, “I am not afraid, for now I have more a bad conscience. My Savior died for me upon the cross; I believe in Him, and shall live with Him for ever because He Himself has promised it.” They heard him with astonishment, and said, “You are an Indian of a particular turn of thinking indeed.”

As to externals, the troubles at Pachagatoch increased.

The neighborhood in great dread of the French the young people were called upon to serve against them. Some of the baptized suffered themselves to be persuaded to take the field, and repented, when it was too late.

The missionary, Brother Grube, went meanwhile to the west branch of the Susquehannan, and to Queniffachhachaki, where some baptized Indians lived. The Chief opposed him, but he preached the Gospel wherever he found an opportunity.
Bethlehem and Gnadenhuetten forsook their dwellings, fearing a sudden invasion of the French Indians. But the Brethren made a covenant together, to remain undaunted in the place allotted to them by Providence. The peace of God comforted them in a special manner, and preferred their hearts from fear and despair.

However, no caution was omitted; and because the white people considered every Indian as an enemy, the Indian Brethren in Gnadenhuetten were advised, as much as possible, to keep out of their way; to buy no powder or shot, but to strive to maintain themselves without hunting, which they very willingly complied with.

November 18th, some messengers arrived in Gnadenhuetten from the Indians at Wajomick, who, with many complaints, delivered the following message: "We, being friends of the English government, are in great fear and distress. We are in danger of being attacked on all sides by enemies, who are much enraged. We are no less afraid of the white people, who suspect us of having been accessory to the murders, committed in various places. We wish to speak of these matters to the governor of Philadelphia. But we cannot go thither without a proper passport. We are in danger of being murdered by the white people. Tell us therefore what to do." The Brethren in Bethlehem could give no answer to this message; for they were nearly in the same predicament with these Indians, and knew that the rage of the enemy was more particularly directed against them. They therefore mentioned the request of the Wajomick deputies to the justices of the county of Northampton, upon which they granted them the desired passport. By this circumstance and other accounts, received at the same time, it was evident, that the Christian Indians at Gnadenhuetten, being considered as friends to the British government, were in the most imminent danger of being destroyed by the French Indians; and dreadful reports multiplying fast from all quarters, some were so much intimidated, that they fled into the woods. The greatest number...
Murder of the Brethren on the Mahony. P. II.

ber laid in the place, resigned to the will of the Lord, and giving the most encouraging assurances, that they would not forsake each other, but remain united in life and death.

But God had otherwise ordained. On a sudden the mission-house on the Mahony, described in the former chapter, was late in the evening of the 24th of November, attacked by the French Indians, burnt, and eleven of the inhabitants murdered. These were, Brother Gottlieb Anders, his wife, and daughter of fifteen months old; Martin Nitschman and his wife Susanna; the married sister Anna Catharine Senfman; Leonhard Gattermeyer, a widower; and the single Brethren Christian Fabricius, George Schweiger, Martin Preffer, and John Frederic Leify.

The circumstances attending this catastrophe were as follows: The family being at supper, they heard an uncommon barking of dogs, upon which Brother Senfman went out at the back-door, to see what was the matter. On the report of a gun, several ran together to open the house door. Here the Indians stood with their pieces pointed towards the door, and firing immediately upon its being opened, Martin Nitschman was instantly killed. His wife and some others were wounded, but fled with the rest up stairs into the garret, and barricaded the door with beds. Brother Partsch escaped by jumping out of a back window. Brother Worbas, who was ill in bed, in an adjoining room, also escaped, though the enemies had placed a guard before his door. Meanwhile the savages pursued those who had taken refuge in the garret, and forced hard to burst the door open; but finding it too well secured, they set fire to the house, which was soon in flames. A boy, called Seger, standing upon the flaming roof, ventured to look off, and escaped, though at first, upon opening the back door, a ball had grazed his cheek, and one side of his head was much burnt. Sister Partsch seeing this, took courage and leaped like-wise from the burning roof. She ca June and July, the Brethren Christian Seidel and Dacisberger, who had returned from Onondago in spring to Wajomick and other places on the Susque-

a, shunning neither difficulties nor danger, but ex-ing the Indians residing there, who then suffered greater, to put their trust in the grace and mercy of God

lor. They were soon followed by Martin Mack and dian assistant from Gnadenhuettten, who preached the c in all places with great power, in the Mahikan lan-

. During one of his discourses, he observed a strange listening with great attention, who had travelled 300 from the north-west country, and related the occasion journey as follows, viz.: His elder brother, living in ual, had been many days and nights in great perplexity, g to learn to know God, till at length he resolved to into the woods, supposing that he should succeed bea state of separation from all mankind. Having weeks alone in great affliction, he thought in man of majestic appearance, who informed him, that were Indians living to the south-east, who were aced with God and the way to everlasting life; adding, should go home again and tell the people what he had heard. "This," said the Indian, "is the reason why ome hither. When I heard my brother speak, I felt mediately a desire to go in search of the people he deed. Now I have heard your discourse, and your ds have been welcome to my heart." He then fat out return, rejoicing to be able to make known this dis-ty to his countrymen.

after Brother Mack's return, Brother Schmick, his

and an Indian assistant, went to the country on the annah, and the declarations of many, both bapand unbaptized Indians, proved, that God was with and blessed his testimony.

Shomokin the sufferings of the Brethren increased so , as to be almost unsupportable; but they improved every tunity to preach the crofs of Christ with boldness and

Ma ferrency, fervency, in which they were also greatly encouraged by visits from the Brethren at Bethlehem.

At this time all was peace in Gnadenhuettten: but suddenly the scene changed, and fear, horror, and inexpressible distress filled the whole country. A cruel Indian war, occasioned by the contest between the English and French, burst at once into flames, spreading terror and confusion, especially throughout Pennsylvania.

The first outrage was committed about five miles from Shomokin, where the French Indians fell upon fix English plantations, plundered and set fire to the dwellings, and murdered fourteen white people. The three Brethren, Kiefer, Roeller, and Wefa, residing in Shomokin, were exposed to the most imminent danger: but not willing to forsake their station without advice from Bethlehem, Wefa went thither to represent their situation. He was accompanied part of the way by Brother Roeller; but as the latter was returning to Shomokin, he was stopped by white people, and obliged to follow Wefa to Bethlehem. Upon hearing that Brother Kiefer was left alone in Shomokin, the Brethren, Anthony Schmidt and Henry Frey, immediately set out to conduct him home, but being considered in Tulpochkin as Deserters, they were not permitted to proceed, and obliged to return. However, did not deter them; but J. Jacob Schmick and Henry Frey went in all haste to Wajomicke, and brought the following formal message to the Chief Paxnous: "Go and conduct our brother in Shomokin safe home." Paxnous immediately sent his two sons, giving them proper instructions, how to rescue Brother Kiefer, if he even should be in the hands of the enemy. Meanwhile Kiefer had set out alone to go to Wajomicke, and was met on the road by Paxnous' sons, who conducted him safe to Gnadenhuettten.

Every day disclosed new scenes of barbarity committed by the Indians. The whole country was in an uproar; and people knew not what course to take. Some fled to the east; some to the west. Some sought safety in places from which others had fled. Even the neighbors of the Brethren in Bethlehem down unhurt and unobserved by the enemies, and thus the fervent prayer of her husband was fulfilled, who in jumping out of the back-window, cried aloud to God to save his wife. Brother Fabricius then leaped also off the roof, but before he could escape, was perceived by the Indians, and instantly wounded with two balls. He was the only one, whom they seized upon alive, and having dispatched him with their hatchets, took his scalp and left him dead on the ground. The rest were all burnt alive, and Brother Senfman, who first went out at the back-door, had the inexpressible grief to see his wife consumed by the flames. Sister Partrich could not run far, for fear and trembling, but hid herself behind a tree, upon an hill near the house. From hence she saw Sister Senfman, already surrounded by the flames, standing with folded hands, and heard her call out: "Tis all well, dear Savior, I expected nothing else!" The house being consumed, the murderers set fire to the barns and stables, by which all the corn, hay, and cattle were destroyed. Then they divided the spoil, looted some bread in milk, made an hearty meal, and departed; Sister Partich looking on unperceived.
Ch. XII. Escape of the Christian Indians at Gnadenhütten. 167.

This melancholy event proved the deliverance of the Indian congregation at Gnadenhütten: for upon hearing the report of the guns, fleeing the flames, and soon hearing the dreadful cause from those who had escaped; the Indian Brethren immediately went to the missionary, and offered to attack the enemy without delay. But being divided to the contrary, they all fled into the woods, and Gnadenhütten was cleared in a few minutes; some who were already in bed, having scarce time to dress themselves.

Brother Zeisberger, who had just arrived in Gnadenhütten from Bethlehem, hastened back to give notice of this event to a body of English militia, which had marched within five miles of the spot: but they did not venture to pursue the enemy in the dark.

M 8 November
November 24th, at three in the morning, Brother Zeilberger arrived in Bethlehem with the melancholy account of the murder of so many of our people, and at five it was made known to the whole congregation. The grief, occasioned by these doleful tidings, may be better conceived than described. Though all were affected with the deepest grief, yet a perfect resignation to the adorable will of the Lord prevailed in the whole congregation. He has not promised unto his followers, an exemption from the troubles and calamities of this world, but requires of them, by patiently suffering their share of the general distress, to demean themselves as true children of God. The Brethren, Worfas, and Partsch with his wife, arrived soon after, and related the further particulars of this afflicting event.

Part of the fugitive Indian congregation joined Brother Sengenman, and another part flocked to the missionaries Martin Mack, Schmick, and Grube, and their wives, who notwithstanding the darkness of the night, had set out on the road to Bethlehem, and by the mercy and protection of God arrived there safe. Brother Scheboich remained alone in Gnadenhuetten, and by walking up and down the streets the next day, encouraged several of the Indian Brethren and Sisters, who had hid themselves in the neighboring woods, to return. The missionaries Martin Mack and Grube went also from Bethlehem towards Gnadenhuetten, to seek the soul of the congregation who were still missing; for being flattered, they were in danger of being killed, not only the hostile Indians, but by the white people, who much enraged at all Indians without exception. God granted success to these faithful missionaries: for having found most of the fugitives, they returned with them, and those collected in Gnadenhuetten by Brother Scheboich praising the Lord for their deliverance. All these Indians were lodged, clothed, and fed by the inhabitants of Bethlehem, with great kindness. Such as were still missing, to Wajomic, which place they reached in safety.
Dangerous Situation of the Brethren's Settlements. 169

As the French Indians had been driven from those remains of the Brethren and Sifters, killed on my, were carefully collected out of the ashes and their dwellings, and solemnly interred. Amidst all this, it gave us some comfort that the bodies of men and Sifters had not fallen into the hands of the Brethren Fabricius was only burnt on.

The image is a page from a historical text discussing the dangerous situation of the Brethren's Settlements. The text mentions the French Indians being driven from their settlements, the remains being collected, and the bodies of the Brethren and Sifters being interred. It also notes the comfort given by the preservation of the bodies and the burning of a specific person, Fabricius. The text reflects on the events from a critical perspective, noting that the destruction was not merely an act of evil but a result of the providence of God to take place and to avert a greater evil, to destroy the whole work of the care of the Brethren in North America entirely to overturn their whole establishment.

A bitter enemy of the Gospel had forged perhaps without considering the dreadful consequence of his malice, pretending that it had been written in Quebec, and intercepted by the British. This letter was published in all the newspapers. That the French were certain of their own coming, the English, for not only the Indians had taken the Brethren were also their good friends, and were given every assistance in their power. General suspicion raised by this lying accusation was by the calm and steady behavior of the Brethren. That clear up, which proceeded from their respect to the will of God, and enabled them to continue in their usual daily employments, was misconducted by the deluded multitude as a certain proof of the the above-mentioned charge. It was therefore asserted, "That the Brethren were certainly in with the Indians and French, for otherwise they would not be so contented, nor tranquil their business with composure of mind." The common people were enraged, and the Brethren were under continual suspicion of being attacked by the mob: nor could Government vermiment have defended them, though well convinced of the sincerity of their intentions. Travellers were not safe in the streets and inns. Bishop Spangenberg was insulted by an inn-keeper, who, with one hand lifting up a large flake and threatening to knock his brains out, held in the other the newspaper containing the above-mentioned letter. Bishop Spangenberg endeavored to pacify him, but his answer was: "If what I say of the Brethren were not true, it would "not be printed here." In the Jerfeys a public declaration was made with beat of drum, that Bethlehem should be destroyed, and the most dreadful threats were added, that in Bethlehem, Gnadenhutten, and other places, a carnival should be made, such as had never before been heard of in North America. It afterwards appeared, from the best authority, that a party of an hundred men who came to Bethlehem, were purposely sent to seek an opportunity of raising a mob; but the friendly and hospitable treatment they met with from the Brethren, who knew nothing of their intentions, changed their resolution. The suspicion against the Brethren gained daily more ground in all the English colonies, and every body considered them as snakes in the grass, and friends to the French. But after the attack made upon the Brethren on the Mahony became publicly known, the eyes of the people were opened. Even before the remains of the murdered persons were interred, many hundred people came from distant parts, and seeing the settlement in ashes, and the corpses of the Brethren and Sifters burnt and scalped, were fully convinced of the untruth of the reports against them. Many shed tears, and smiting upon their breasts, exclaimed: "Ahas, how greatly have we sinned "against an innocent people," accusing them of being in league "with the Indians and French." One said: "I myself "have entertained these wicked thoughts, and I am now not "only convinced of their innocence, but find that they are "the first in this country, against whom the rage of the "savages has been directed. Ah, what should we have had "to answer for, had we followed our design of extermi" "nating of brotherly love, that all the letters received at that from Bethlehem, seemed dictated by a spirit of thanks praise. The courage of the Brethren in keeping their in, proved a comfort and protection to the neighbors; if they had fled, nothing could have obstructed the ins of the savages. The whole country from Bethlehem Philadelphia would have been exposed to their ravages, even Philadelphia itself have been rendered unsafe: but government considered the Brethren's settlements bulwark, raised up in defence of the neighboring coun-

It afterwards appeared, that the Indians frequently asked in their councils, that if they could only put the thereon to flight, every thing else must yield to them. therefore formed various plans to attack their settles with their combined force. Though the Brethren y relied upon the help of the Lord, they neglected that might tend to their safety. The children were children from the different schools to Bethlehem. Bethlehem itself was surrounded by palisadoes, and well guarded night and day, Europeans and Indians taking their with great willingness; though this duty was attended inconvenience, as sometimes forty were out upon guard night, most of whom had to attend their usual business, that day-time. In every other settlement of the Bre-

in North America, a discreet person was appoint-give the proper directions, and to keep strict watch. those at work in the plantations were guarded. was chiefly committed to Indian Brethren, who med it a favor, to be thought worthy of such an iment charge. "Who am I," said one of them, "that should watch over children of God? I, poor man, am t worthy of this grace. Nor can I do it properly. therefore watch thou thyself over them, gracious Savior, thou alone canst protect them!" his watchfulness was not only a necessary caution, but ed very effectual in defending the place, for the Brewere, according to their own expression, surrounded by

by wolves, tygers, and wild beasts: the savages continuing by murder and fire to lay waste the neighboring country, and wherever they came, to do as much mischief as they possibly could. They plundered and destroyed several villages to near to Bethlehem, that the flames of the houses were distinctly seen. The murderers approached even near to the place itself, lurking about with torches, and endeavoring to shoot burning wadding upon the thatched roofs. They attempted five or six times in the night, to make a sudden attack upon this and some other settlements of the Brethren, but when their spies, who always precede, observed the great watchfulness of the inhabitants, they were afraid and withdrew, as they themselves afterwards owned. Once in the day-time, a party of them came to attack a large field in which about forty filters were picking flax, whom they intended to seize and carry off prisoners, and were already close to it, creeping upon their bellies in the Indian manner. But perceiving a strong guard of Indian Brethren with their pieces loaded, just as they were retiring from their ambush, they made off, and thus an engagement was avoided; for which the Brethren always thanked and praised the Lord. For though they were very unwilling to shed the blood of their enemies, yet they were resolved at all events, to defend the women and children entrusted to their care, and consequently must have fired upon and killed many of the assailants, which would have caused them and the missionaries inexpressible grief.

God raised also some friends among the savages, who prevented much mischief. Four soldiers, who defected from their regiment lying at Easton, and fled to the Indians, told them, that they came from Bethlehem, and had seen the Brethren cut off the heads of all the Indians, who fled to them from Gnadenhuetten, put them into bags and sent them to Philadelphia, where they got fifty Spanish dollars a head; and that they had only left two of these poor fugitives alive, to use them as spies. Upon hearing this, the Indians were so enraged, that, though not very well disposed towards the
b. XII. Dangerous Situation of the Brethren's Settlements. 171 nating the Brethren, and destroying their men, women, and children, upon the supposition that they were our enemies."

has the sting of the adversaries in a great measure loft its power, and the Brethren now praised and thanked the Lord, so by permitting the enemy to fiend the blood of a few of our number, and to burn their dwellings, had entirely de royed the designs of Satan, to deliver them altogether to the fury of an enraged mob. And had Gnadenhüttens remained standing on the old spot, then in all probability, the Indian congregation would have been attacked, and suffered a much greater carnage than that at the Fallson. It was likewise a consolation to the Brethren, that ere had been no occasion to stain their hands with the blood of the enemy, but that all could join, together with the ood of their murdered Brethren, to cry for mercy and favours from God for the murderers.

It could not then be ascertained, to what nation the latter belonged, but they were, most probably, partly Shawnee, formerly residing in Wajomick, who went over to the French in great numbers, and partly Delawares, who were enemies both to the English and the Iroquois, though they intended that the latter had put the hatchet into their ends, and encouraged them to go to war.

Under these circumstances the fugitive Indian congrega-on in Bethlehem presented a petition to Government, den-ing their loyalty, and recommending themselves to the protection of the governor and other magistrates. His Excellency assured them of his good will and protection, living them to remain in Bethlehem for the present. And both they and the missionaries had left their effects and

est in Gnadenhüttens, he kindly ordered a party of soldiers to march into those parts, to defend the property of the Christian Indians, and the country in general. But on New Year's Day 1756, the savages attacked these troops, set fire to Gnadenhüttens and the mill, and destroyed all the plantations; by which the Indian congregation and its missionaries were reduced to the greatest poverty.

The
The situation of the Brethren in Bethlehem became very critical, by the number of Indians refusing in place. The savages insulted upon their taking up against the English, threatening to murder them in refusal. Moreover, a set of fanatics sprung up, demanding the total extirpation of the Indian tribes, God's vengeance should fall upon the Christians, for destroying the Indians, as the Israelites, by his consent destroyed the Canaanites of old. These people, greatly incensed against Bethlehem, on account of the devotion and assistance granted to a race of beings, deemed them to be accursed. The inhabitants of Bethlehem, therefore, considered themselves as sheep ready for slaughter; when they went to bed, never knew whether they should live the next morning. Fathers and mothers wept for their children, representing to themselves the cruelties might expect to endure from the fury of the blood-thirsty venge.

Yet resignation to the will of the Lord was the get disposition of all the inhabitants; not one fought for leaving the town, but the chief concern of each individual was, to be prepared and willing at every moment, by and by, to appear before the presence of God, and to enter into eternal rest. They were led the more firmly unite in praying unto God, in the words of Hezekiah:

"Lord our God, we beseech thee, save thou us, that all may be saved that thou art the Lord, even thou only." not only from common boastings of the Indians: "We shall soon see whether the God of the Brethren be able to deliver;" from our hatchets;" but likewise from the ridiculous white neighbor, who had said: "The Brethren are the dull people of our Savior, and praying to him: "we shall see whether He can save them." He heard their prayers, and filled their hearts with joy, peace, and extraordinary cheerfulrnes, proceeding from a firm reliance upon his protection. The daily worship of the congregation was attended with so powerful a sensation of the presence of ( Indian congregation, a large party set out, with a view to murder all the Brethren and to burn their settlements. Paxtous, the above-mentioned Chief of the Shawanose, man of great authority among his people, sent after them, with orders not to hurt the Brethren, whom he knew to be perfectly innocent; as they would find, upon a nearer examination. When the savages still persisted in their intentions, he sent a messenger with a large belt of wampum, as an express order for them immediately to return; adding, that he positively knew, that those people, whom they intended to destroy, were good men. Many obeyed and returned, and the few that remained, not thinking themselves match for the Brethren, dispersed. Neither watchfulness nor strength could have saved them if they had been attacked by so large a force. Sometimes well-disposed Indians, hearing of a plot laid against them by the warriors, could save all night to warn the Brethren, and thus their schemes were defeated: not to mention other instances of the providence of God in their behalf.

Both the firmness of the Brethren and their good political sagacity, caused their distressed neighbors in great numbers to take refuge in their settlements. Hundreds of women and children came even from distant places, crying and begging for shelter, some almost destitute, having left their land and fled in the night. Some Brethren were once going in three wagons to fetch corn from a mill beyond the Blue Mountains, when they were met by a great number of the inhabitants of that country, who were in the greatest distress and confusion, the savages having attacked their own homes, murdered many white people, and set fire to their dwellings. The wagons therefore returned, loaded with the wretched people, many of them having escaped from the enemy, almost without any covering. As long as there was room, these poor fugitives were protected and fed. Bethlehem, Nazareth, Friedenshals, Christianforum, and the like, were at this time considered as asylums for all, who were saved from the murder and rapine of the hostile Indians, and the the empty school-houses and mills were allotted to them for a temporary residence.

Thus God in his wisdom wrought an extraordinary change of affairs. The same people, who were but lately suspect of a secret correspondence with the enemy, and of mercenary afflicting confidence in God from treacherous motives, now protected and defended those, who in ignorance had calumniated and threatened them with destruction.

It may easily be conceived, that the Brethren were brought into great straits, by the number of people resorting uneasily and depending upon them for subsistence. There had been a great drought during the summer, and they reaped but a usual quantity of corn and fruit.

The lofs, sustained by the destruction of Gnaedegauettens the mill, and the Mahony farm, was very considerable. Besides this, the savages had set fire to upwards of a thousand bushels of wheat, belonging to the Brethren in different places. Their trades had greatly failed by the troubles of the war; the expense of providing for the Indian congregation, who were entirely impoverished, fell wholly upon them; the fugitives from other places were lodged, fed, and many of them clothed; and the troops marching through the settlement, whose number frequently exceeded a thousand in one week, were supplied gratis with provisions.

The Brethren however did not lose courage, but exerted themselves with all frugality to procure the necessaries of life for their guests and themselves, relying upon the support of our heavenly Father in this extraordinary emergency, and upon the active benevolence of the European congregations. Nor were their prayers in vain, or their hopes disappointed.
CHAPTER XIII.

1756, 1757, 1758.

Situation of the Indian Congregation at Bethlehem.

At this period, the Indian congregation had rest, dwelling safely under the care and protection of the Brethren in Bethlehem. The latter viewed their edifying course with joy, and afforded them all the assistance in their power. They were under the care of the missionaries Mack, Grube, and Schmick. Having hitherto been very much crowded, near seventy persons lodging in one house; two summer huts and a large hut for their daily meetings were built in spring. Both these and the schools were continued in the usual order. The Indians frequently attended the meetings of the Bethlehem congregation, and both old and young increased in the knowledge and grace of Jesus Christ. Several were particularly fervent, in devoting themselves with soul and body unto the service of the Lord. One circumstance however proved very distressing to the Indian Brethren. They could not venture to hunt, the English having promised a reward of one hundred and fifty pieces of eight for every living Delaware, and one hundred and thirty for every scalp. Indeed an exception was expressly made in favor of the Indians at Bethlehem, but at any distance from the
the town, they would have been taken for enemies, and that by the white people, who were greatly enraged at the Indians in general. The governor of Pennsylvania therefore thought proper, to warn our Indians by a letter, from staying far from home. This advice they promised to follow, and the Brethren kept them to a strict observance of their promise. They prayed fervently, that God would not only preserve the Indians committed to their care, but graciously avert the destruction of any hostile Indians, by the guards at night, left it should occasion a report throughout the country, that the Brethren enriched themselves by the Indian scalps. The Lord heard their prayer, and prevented this evil. Part of the Indian Brethren earned their livelihood by doing all kind of work as day-laboreys, and during the harvest in the year 1756, they guarded the reapers. The Indian Sifters made baskets and brooms. Yet this was not sufficient to procure a maintenance, and they were relieved by collections made for that purpose in other congregations of the Brethren.

Meanwhile the savages continued their depredations, and the governor of Pennsylvania published a proclamation, by which he declared war against all Indian nations, who should pervert in hostilities, inviting all thieves, who would lay down their hatchets, to meet at a treaty of peace. Colonel Johnston and Mr. Croghan went to Onondago, to treat with the Iroquois. The governor sent likewise an embassy to the Delawares, who spoke as yet in a very high tone, and another to the Indians on the Susquehanna. At his Excellency's particular request, one of the Indian Brethren from Bethlehem accompanied the latter. Several Indians accepted the invitation given by government, and came to Bethlehem, where they were well received.

The confidence placed in the Brethren was now so great, that both the English and the Indians twice attempted to hold the congress at Bethlehem. The second time, Mr. Croghan and a chief officer from Onondago came and insisted much upon it, adding, that the Iroquois had likewise determined, terminated, that it should be held here. Bishop Spangenberg earnestly entreated him, not to urge it, because the number of children then at Bethlehem, might receive great prejudice in their tender minds, having been hitherto carefully preserved from the very name of many vices, but too commonly praciticed on such occasions. This remonstrance was kindly attended to, and the congregs appointed to be held at Easton, the Indians being safely conducted to that place. On their journey, the captain of those savages, who had attacked and burnt the house of the Brethren on the Mahony, was killed by Tadeuskund in a violent dispute.
Ch XIII. Residence of the Christian Indians at Bethlehem. 179

No final agreement however was made at Easton; the Indians received presents from the English, and promised a return at a fixed period. Tadeuskund, who believed if he were king of the Indians, and very justly was called the Trumpet of War, undertook to go to all those nations, which had lifted up the hatchet, to persuade them to give up to a permanent peace.

After this congress, Bethlehem had a great number of Indian visitors, who were lodged in some houses belonging to the Brethren, on the other side of the Lecha. For they's sake, the justice of the peace, residing in Bethlehem, examined every new-comer concerning his intended stay, by which they were kept in order, though several of them did no good to the Indian congregation by their visit. TheBrethren, with particular regret, that Gideon Tadeuskund, baptized by them, had not only become one of the chief captains of the hostile Indians, but took great pains to raise diffusions among the baptized, and to draw them on their attachment to the Brethren. However, his attempts were then in vain; even his baptized wife declared, as she belonged to the people of God, she would live and die with the Brethren. The visits and residence of others in Bethlehem proved the means of their eternal salvation. They heard the word of reconciliation, owned their sins, tasted the rich comforts held forth in the doctrine
doctrine of Jesus Christ, and seeing living witnesses of that great truth, that Jesus came into the world to save sinners, they sought fellowship with them.

Among those who at this time obtained leave to live with the believers, one declared his sentiments in the following energetic manner:

"I beseech the Brethren to permit me to dwell with them. I will not abide with them only for a few days, or months, or years, but as long as I live: if the Brethren are persecuted, I will even die with them. This is my sincere determination. I desire not to save my life, if I could; nor do I seek an easy or convenient life among them, provided I gain life for my soul." He then began to weep aloud, and added: "Now you know, what I came for." An Indian woman said: "For several days past, I have been very sorrowful, and pray, that our Saviour would have mercy upon me, and impart faith unto me. I consider the Sifters as fine flour, but I am no thing but chaff, and know that I cannot be freed and go to God, unless I am cleansed from all my sins in his blood, and baptized into his death." She and several others were soon after baptized. Even some of the inconsiderable came to Bethlehem, with their families, being driven thither by hunger and distress, and were lodged beyond the Lecha, at the request of government. They received their daily portion of provisions from Bethlehem, and the Brethren thanked God for this opportunity of doing good to their enemies.

Though both the magistrates and the Brethren showed great kindness to the Indians, yet the savages continued to commit murders in Allemangiel; and a lance, left by them on the road, proved them to be some of the very people, who had attended the congress at Eafbon. Roving parties infested the borders of the country, the public roads, and all those places in which they feared no resistance; so that the small colonies of Brethren settled in Allemangiel and Bethel on the Swatara, who had held out with uncommon tience, were at last obliged to take refuge, the Bethlehem, and the latter in Lebanon. Every he savages was a new source of danger to the Ingation, for many of the white people even now suffered insupportable dispositions. But God in mercy, and gave them favor in the eyes of the chief.
The governor himself came to Bethlehem on November 1756, visited them in their dwellings, in a very kind and condescending manner.
In the close of the year, the small-pox broke out among the Indians; and it was so regulated, that all those, affected, should retire beyond the Lecha, where were taken of them.
I these troubles, Pachgargoch was not forsworn. ary Jungman and his wife, and the sngle Bred-and Utley, resided there. The daily worship and inured in their usual course, and the magistrates protection. To the latter they freely showed how they received, thus preventing any suspicion, hey were in league with the French; which is had inraised. Here we cannot omit some instances of the power of Satan. Even a few zed relapsed into heathenism. One of these people, being drunk, ran against a large kettle of over the fire, overfet it, and was scaled to other stabbed his wife, wounded another Indian, illed himself. These dreadful examples caused consider their own fate, and earnestly to reflect able end of such, who reject the grace of God
: was entirely forsworn by the Indians in hey settled in or near Tiaogu. Many of them baptized by the Brethren, refused to be con-be war, but nevertheless suffered great harm, during the late troubles. They were like-ment danger of their lives. Their declaration, N. 3    that that they belonged to the Brethren, and would not fight, enraged the savages, who threatened to tomahawk every one of them; and the white people, defrous of obtaining the high reward set upon Delaware scalps, watched every opportunity to kill them, so that they did not venture out. Added to this, they suffered much from famine and cold, not being able to procure any clothing, and the Brethren, to their great grief, saw no possibility of coming to their assistance.

In January 1757, public service began to be performed in Bethlehem in the Indian language, the litany being translated into the Mahikan dialect by the missionary Jacob Schmick. Several parts of the Scriptures and many hymns were also translated into the Delaware language for the use both of the church and the schools. The children frequently came together and sang praises to our Savior, commemorating his death and sufferings, in German, Mahikan, and Delaware hymns.

Meanwhile the ravages of the wild Indians still continued. They went out in parties of twenty and thirty, murder and plundering the country people. The baptized Indians received a message from their heathen countrymen living on the Susquehannah, defying them to come and live there but their reply was, "that, if it were the will of God, they would rather suffer themselves to be destroyed with the Brethren, than prove unfaithful to him."

Taduskund was continually marching to and fro with large parties of warriors, pretending to use all his endeavors to make peace. In these circuits he came frequently to Bethlehem, where it evidently appeared, that he and other warriors chiefly sought to persuade the Indian congregation to go to Wajomic; but finding neither persuasion nor threats of any avail, they, with great assurance represented at a congress of peace held at Lancaster April, that their friends were kept prisoners in Bethlehem, and not even permitted to hunt, begging that they might be sent to Wajomic. The magistrates replied; the the Indians were a free people; and might go wherever they pleased: but this and other circumstances led the Brethren to endeavor to procure a proper residence for the Indian congregation; as they had hitherto been in Bethlehem only as guests. The Indian affiants and fathers of families being convened, they were unanimous in declaring, that, as they would not live after the vain traditions received from their forefathers, but after the will and commandments of Jesus Christ, they therefore must necessarily live separated from the other Indians, among whom they and their children would suffer inevitable damage in their souls, as they had already experienced. The Brethren at Bethlehem gave immediate information of this resolution to government, and the Indians accompanied it by a petition to the governor, recommending themselves to his future protection, and begging leave to build a town in the neighborhood of Bethlehem. To this a very favorable answer was given, and the Brethren obtained the consent of government to give them land, about a mile from Bethlehem, where they built a regular settlement, and called it Nain.

Meanwhile some Delaware families moved in May to Gnadenthal, a place belonging to the Brethren; and the missionary Grube and his wife went to live with and serve them with the Gospel.

June 10th, the first house was built at Nain, but the troubles of the war greatly retarded the progress of the other buildings. The internal course of the Indian congregations both in Bethlehem and Puchgatgoch was edifying. Many hundred savages heard the Gospel in both places, and several who believed were baptized. Among the latter were two accomplices in the Mahony murder.

Towards the close of the year 1757 it seemed, that peace would be established in these parts. But on the Susquehannock troubles increased, the French endeavoring to entice the Indians, to withdraw to the Ohio, where they might join the Iroquois against the English. Many also were persuaded; even Paxson and some of the baptized were drawn drawn into the snare, and though not engaged in the crime, were brought into spiritual and temporal misery, to the grief of the Indian congregation. Some turned again to the Lord, confessed their deviations, and departed this life reliance upon the merits of Jesus, as pardoned sinners. Others returned to the congregation, among whom were several of the former inhabitants of Gnadenhuetten.

might indeed be considered as patients, dangerously having by their transgressions and infidelity, grievously hurt themselves with spiritual diseases. In this state they were received with the greater love and compassion, and their recovery was not in vain.

The history of the year 1758 furnished many instances of the mercy of that good and faithful Shepherd, who feeds his lost sheep in the wilderness. Benjamin wrote a letter to the Indian congregation, owning his transgressions with many repenting tears declared his sincerity. His Abigail, related, that he frequently went out into the crying unto the Lord, that he would bring her back to his people; that she had been exceedingly persecuted by the savages, and frequently thought herself surrounded by devils; but that she well knew, that our Savior would have suffered her to come into such distresses, had she uprightly before him. Her mother added, "When I saw that so many of our brethren and sisters were killed by savage Indians, I wept exceedingly, and took it to heart that I wished I had died with them. I counted the weeks, and when four weeks were elapsed, I knew in my heart, and now I have twenty knots. So was I obliged to live among the savages. Now I do not so much as carefully entertain the congregation, to pardon all wrong against God and his people. Receive me again, I devote myself anew to Jesus, and as long as I live in this world, I will cleave to him alone."

The joy, occasioned by the return of such poor lost sheep, could not meet with a severer check, than when one who had stood firm in the greatest dangers, suffered:

Ch. XIII.  Residence of the Christian Indians at Bethlehem. 185

felves to be led astray by forlorn considerations, exchanging peace of mind for uneasiness and trouble. This was, alas! the case with Augustus, one of the affitants, whom his brother-in-law, Tadeuskund, found means to seduce and turn from the simplicity which is in Christ Jesus, by representing to him, that in Wajomicz he would be a man of much greater respectability, than in Bethlehem. The Brethren indeed used every persuasion to reclaim both him and Tadeuskund, who with about one hundred of his followers, lived this year for a long time in the neighborhood of Bethlehem. In the beginning their hopes were entertained of his return; he owned his dreadful deviations, and seemed truly contrite. Once he said: "As to externals, I possess every thing in plenty; but riches are of no use to me, for I have troubled conscience. I still remember well, what it is to feel peace in the heart, but I have now lost all." He even felt to beg the Brethren to appoint some one to preach the Gospel on the other side of the Lecha, where he and many other Indians lived, who were at home to go to Bethlehem chapel. But, alas! he soon turned back, and all hopes of his recovery were lost; he now even endeavored to destroy the peace and comfort of the Indian congregation, taking occasion from the present negotiations of peace to raise a disturbance. Matters having been so farsettled, that the English government made peace with 300 Indian deputies, met at Easton, as representatives of ten nations, Tadeuskund pretended that this peace had been agreed to upon a private condition, viz. that government should build a town on the Susquahannah for the Indians, send and maintain teachers for them, and give orders that those Indians living with the Brethren should move thither. Government had never given the Brethren the least intimation of such a measure, yet Tadeuskund pretended to have received full commission, to conduct all the Indians, and consequently also those of Bethlehem, to Wajomicz, demanding their compliance with these proposals; promising, moreover, that fields should be cleared and ploughed, houses built, and provisions provided; that their teachers should attend attend them; that they should live there unmolested; and that he himself would have no other teacher; and finally, that they should be at liberty to choose a detached place where they might dwell by themselves. To this the Indian Brethren replied, That they rather chose to live in their present situation; their wives, young people, and children, being well provided for; they therefore begged him to see his interest, to procure them peace and safety here; that this did not imply, that they intended to forsake him, but that they should remain his good friends. Tadeuskund, much enraged by this answer, behaved very insolently, uttered some severe threats, and set out for Philadelphia in great wrath.

Here a general peace with all the nations was in agitation, and those Indians likewise, who had moved from the Sauquehannah to the Ohio, were invited to come to the treaty, though not present at the congress held at Easton. As government could find no European who, at the risk of his life, would undertake to deliver this message, Brother Frederic Polk, then in Bethlehem, who had fled from the rage of the savages in Wajomick, was prevailed upon to perform the journey. He went twice to the Ohio, and was successful in persuading the Indians, to send deputies to the treaty. July 11th, he arrived with them in Bethlehem, and thence proceeded to Philadelphia with three Indian Brethren, who were called by government. The missionary, Gottlob Senfeman, accompanied them, and afterwards gave them that testimony, that their walk and conversation had been worthy of the Gospel, and had made a good impression on the minds of several gentlemen in power.

Meanwhile Augustus endeavored to persuade the congregation, that all Indians, living among the white people, would be obliged to remove to Wajomick, especially those residing at Bethlehem. Though not a word passed upon this subject during the whole treaty at Philadelphia, yet the Indian Brethren became perplexed, Augustus always mentioning government as his authority. The Brethren moreover received authentic information, that several enemies to the conversion of...
of the heathen were very active in using every effort in their power to disperse the two Indian congregations at Bethlehem and Pachgatgog. When Tadeuskund therefore returned from Philadelphia, and with great violence demanded their final answer, they thought prudent to give it in the following words: "If the Chiefs and the Governor have positively determined, that we shall not live here any longer, but remove to the Susquehannah, we will do it, but not by our own choice. This year we cannot think of moving, on account of the number of our children and old people."

Tadeuskund pretended to be satisfied, and his departure would have given great satisfaction, had he not seduced Augustus and his whole family to leave the believers and to follow him. But God in mercy prevented the bad consequences, which were apprehended from their great influence upon the minds of others. Many even declared, that they would never leave the place, their hearts revolting at the idea of being separated from their brethren. Jacob said, "I cannot conceive it possible for me to live any where but with you. I have now lived sixteen years with the Brethren. I consider myself as a young child, which, when supported with both hands, may stand or walk, but as soon as left to itself, instantly falls. The Brethren lead me to our Savior; but if I am separated from them, I must fall."

However, with a view to silence the adversaries, the Brethren declared publicly and repeatedly, that if any Indian wished to leave Bethlehem, he should have perfect liberty to depart; and if any one behaved improperly, he would even be desired to go away, contrary to his inclination.

Amidst all these troubles, the building of Nain had made much progress, that the Indians could remove thither in autumn. October 18th, their chapel was consecrated, to the great joy of the believing Indians. The same regulations were made at Nain as before at Gnadenhuetten. The public and private worship was attended with peculiar bleffing, and the Brethren at Bethlehem frequently assisted the missionaries. Those appointed to preserve order, were diligent in in the performance of their duty, and great attention was paid to the schools. In general, the education of youth was particularly attended to in this period, and the parents were often exhorted to encourage it. The Indian auxiliaries were also of great use to the missionaries, by their timely and unfavored remarks, made upon proper occasions. John, happening to be present, when some mothers were correcting their children, in a fit of passion, on account of their levity and disobedience, gave them a severe reprimand, adding: "My dear Sisters! I perceive, that you have a very wrong idea of the behavior of your children. Children of God ought not to behave thus. Whence proceeds their levity and disobedience? From you; therefore you ought first to be ashamed, and to beg the Lord's pardon, praying for grace, to give your children a better example: if you become more earnest and diligent in your prayers to him in their behalf, you will do more good than by this harshness; for they are yet tender sprigs, and you must study the true method of rearing them." The mothers humbly thanked him for his advice, nor was it given in vain.

Nain had now as many Indian visitors as Bethlehem. The missionaries had once an opportunity of conversing with twenty strange Indians, baptized by Romish priests; telling them, that a true and living faith in Jesus Christ is the only way to happiness, and that they would grossly deceive themselves, if they continued in sin, and refuted their hopes upon the mere form of baptism.

Among other visitors, a very wild young Indian attracted the notice and compulsion of the Brethren. He happened to be in one of the huts, where the school-bell rung, upon which a child of three years exclaimed: "I am now going to school, to learn to sing a verse." Hearing this, he addressed the father of the child: "I have not yet forgiven my mother, that she took me away from the Brethren: I had a feeling of the grace of God in my heart, and, after I had left them, used in spirit to place myself among the children at school, and thought I heard them sing; but when I come..."
XIII.  Account of Nain.  189 consider my present state, and what a bad life I lead, eing a wild Indian, I always lay the blame to my mother. with to be converted, but cannot find the way. Alas, las! I am a wretched man!"

About this time, most of the baptized who moved to Wa-nick in 1754, or fled to the Sulqueannah, after the attack of the savages upon the Mahony farm, returned, and led to live at Nain. But they were all lodged beyond river Lecha, until they had given full proof of their true enterprise and change of heart. When this was perceived, y were gladly readmitted to fellowship.

In these years many Indian Brothers and Sisters ended their race. It often happened, that the dying believers made surviving relations give them their hands, in token of milk to remain faithful to the end, and to forswear the Lord nor the congregation; which was always attended with a remarkable impression upon their souls. The edifying departure of an aged Brother, Mi-sel, whom the missionaries in their letters used to call the "father of the Indian congregation, deserves particular notice: In his younger days he had been an experienced and brave warrior. In an engagement which was kept up for four or eight hours with great fury, he undauntedly kept fast at a tree, though above twenty musket-balls lodged it. He was one of the first, who turned with his solemn heart unto the Lord, was baptized in 1742, and renewed in an happy, even course. His walk was an honor the doctrine of Christ, his mind cheerful, and his end and full of joy. The serenity of his countenance, was hid in his collar, made a singular contrast with the wrath, fearfully upon his face when a warrior. These were follows: upon the right cheek and temple, a large snake; on the under-lip a pole passed over the nose, and between eyes to the top of his forehead, ornamented at every artery of an inch with round marks, representing scalps; on the left cheek, two lances crosting each other; and on the lower jaw the head of a wild boar. All these marks were executed with remarkable neatness.
CHAPTER XIV.

1759, 1760, 1761, 176:

Rejoicing at the Conclusion of Peace. Inci Congregation. Account of Pachgaioeb. of Wechquetank. Various Accounts. Bigenberg returns to Europe. Melancholy in Pachgaioeb. Frederic Poif is unsuccess fully sent to Ohio.

The French having taken and burnt Fort Du froyed the works, and left the place; built a new fort on the same spot, called Fort Pitt:
this, the whole scene of the war in North Amand from the beginning of the year 1759, nei-vania, not the neighboring provinces, were diffig Indians. This cauaged universal joy in all the of the Brethren, but particularly in Nain, whe thanks and praises were offered up by the whole nation to God our Savior, not only because he had the Indian congregation, during the above-men calamities and grievous trials, in one mind and in of heart, but had also cauaged his word to per the hearts of many fathers, even in the midst of bloodshed; so that, being awakened from the they were baptized into the death of Jesus.

Nain soon increased and became a very ple ment. A separate burying-ground was made for ants, and they provided a church-bell, by a colle among themselves. Those Indians who had re-zared, removed now to Nain, and became more ef grace. The single Brethren built an house for use, and Brother Rothe being appointed to att of them, he was very diligent, when at home, in conversing with them about the word of God. They had their own family worship, and while he served them as teacher and orator, his constant familiar conversation with them, gave him an opportunity of making a good progress in learning Delaware language.

The measles appearing at Nain in March 1739, the Indians were greatly alarmed; but when, out of forty-seven who were infected, not one died, those who had been afraid and terrified, for a while, at the appearance of death, were ashamed of their fears; knowing that the dissolution of this mortal body, would have translated them into the fence of Christ, their beloved.

The harvest proved a year remarkably plentiful, both the gardens and plantations; they were likewise successful in hunting, and were graciously preferred in many dispensations. A young Indian called Joshua, was in great danger of his life. He had shot a young bear; and the dam heard the cry of its whelp, rushed upon him in great rage. He screamed so loud for fear, that she was terrified, and fled him to escape.

Among the visitors, the heathen teacher Papunhank from Whitingham deferves to be noticed. For several years he had been zealous in propagating his doctrines of heathen morality: but as both teacher and hearers were addicted to the commission of the most abominable vices, and worse and worse, several of the latter began to doubt, whether Papunhank were a teacher of truth; and being questioned, he frankly confessed, that he could not act in conformity to his own doctrines. When he heard the Gospel of the Saviour preached at Nain, he observed, that he had always believed in a Supreme Being, yet he never knew, that a love to man, God himself had become a man, and to save sinners, but that now he believed, that this was the saving doctrine he wanted. Then, bursting into tears, exclaimed: "O God! have mercy upon me, and grant, at the death of my Savior may be made manifest unto me."
"me." Some time after, he was present at a baptism in Bethlehem, and told one of the Brethren, that during that transaction, he had felt something in his heart, to express which, he could find no words in the Indian language, and that now his most fervent prayer was, that that God, whom the minister had described before the baptism, might reveal himself unto his spirit. Under these impressions, he went home, called his people together, and in a meditative manner related what he had experienced; adding: "My dear people. I have told you many good things, and pointed out a good way; but I have now learnt, that it was not the right one. If we wish to be saved, we must look to that Jesus, whom the Brethren preach."

The congregation at Pachagoch was served at this time by the missionary Grube, whose discourses proved useful, both to his congregation and to strangers. The missionaries here became also acquainted with several Indian separatists, who were formerly baptized by the Presbyterians, but afterwards excluded from their fellowship. They then chose a preacher from their own number, who once brought seventeen of his congregation to Pachagoch. They had three or four meetings every day, and conversed much with the Indian Brethren, but their conduct proved no honor to that Saviour, in whose name they had been baptized. Pachagoch was much troubled by recruiting parties, and many young people suffered themselves to be deceived by the infatuating representations of the life of a warrior; others were glad by this opportunity to escape from their creditors among the white people. Painful as this was to the missionaries, they could not oppose it, as the recruiting officers acted under the authority of government, and therefore only earnestly exhorted the Indians to remember the great imparted unto them; praying the Lord to deliver them from the misery, into which they would infallibly plunge themselves, by their inconsiderate conduct. It gave them no concern to perceive that some Christian neighbors endeavored to instruct the awakened Indians, that they need no ized; so that even one who had formerly most early begged for baptism, died without receiving it.

At Nain the number of inhabitants increased so fast, by return of many who had strayed during the troubles, it became expedient to divide the congregation. In view, fourteen hundred acres of land were purchased by congregation at Bethlehem behind the Blue Mountains, to a new settlement was begun, and called Wechquetank. In April 1760, the missionary Gottlob Senfeman went with thirty baptized Indians, whose number soon ceded. In a short time the necessary buildings were erected, and the same regulations made as at Nain. 329th, the congregation met together for the first time he open air, and this new settlement was recommended sayer to the grace and protection of God. May 6th, missionary moved into his house, and on the 20th of June, chapel was consecrated. Bishop Spangenberg and other then went frequently to Wechquetank, and a continual course was kept up between this new settlement and Nain. In both places, the public testimony of the precious Gospel, special care of souls, the schools, and the converse with number of Indian visitors, continued to be attended with blessing. Among the visitors was the above-mentioned Papanhank, his wife, and thirty-three of his fol-

In whom it appeared, that what they had heard dur-their last visit, was not in vain. They were followed by Nantikoks, who made another attempt, to persuade believing Indians to move to the Susquehannah, but the declared at once against the proposal, confirming like-the words of the missionaries, that no Indian residing in and Wechquetank, lived there by compulsion, but air own free choice.

August 1760, the affecting news of the death of Count andorf arrived at Bethlehem. This event was publicly known in Nain, Wechquetank, and Pachgatoc, and impression it made upon the Indian congregation was so how much they valued this servant of God, and faithful

ful witness of the Gospel among the Indians. They wept over his loss, and thanked the Lord for the blessings imparted unto them by means of his labors. Jacob said: "I am exceedingly grieved to hear it; I conceived a great love for this man of God at my baptism in Oly, and hoped to see him once more in this world. That is now over, but as long as I live, I shall not forget him." Either said: "He was the first who pointed out the wounds of Jesus unto me; when I was in Shekomeko, as the source from whence all salvation flows. His words penetrated into my heart; I felt a fervent love towards our Savior, and could surrender myself up to him. And now he is gone before us to our Savior, and sees the marks of those wounds which he described." Others who had seen and known him, as a man entirely devoted to the service of God, frequently described him to others, expressing their sorrow for his death in similar terms.

The course of the children this year gave the missionary particular pleasure. Rosina, an orphan, being under the care of an old unbaptized relation, said the night before her decease: "Dear grandmother, I am baptized and cleansed in our Savior's blood, and shall now soon go to him; I beg you, to seek to be likewise washed, and faved from your sins by the blood of Christ, that you may become happy as I am; otherwise, when you go hence, you will not be with the Lord." This exhortation from a dying infant, made such an impression upon the old woman's heart that she became anxiously concerned about her salvation, and wept for the remission of sins in the blood of Jesus, begging for baptism, and was added to the church.

A child, called Rachel, thinking herself alone and undone, uttered the following short prayer: "Dear Savior, take me home unto thyself; I am weary of this life; nay, heart desires to be with thee: and thou knowest that would be much better for me, to be in thy presence." She phia hearing, that an Indian brother met with a misfortune in hunting; his gun going off unawares, and the bal passing through his mouth, having torn him in a shocking manner; the prayed most fervently for her father, who was then in the forest: "Dear Savior, thou knowest that my father is hunting. Thou seest him, wherever he is. Preserve him, I pray thee, and bring him safe home."

The missionary Schmick being appointed in this year to the service of the congregation at Nain, Martin Mack went to Pechagoch, to relieve Brother Grube, pursuing the plan of his labors, which had been attended with so much blessing. The recruiting parties still continued to pass through. An English captain one day asked a baptized Indian, "whether he had a mind to be a soldier. "No," answered he, "I am already engaged." "Who is your captain?" replied the officer. "I have a very brave and excellent Captain," said the Indian, "his name is Jesus Christ, him I will serve, as long as I live, and my life is at his disposal;" upon which the English captain suffered him to pass un molested.

Nain became now more known in the country, and the inhabitants had the confidence of their European neighbors, having given undeniable proofs of their good disposition towards the white people. They had ever exerted themselves in recovering several white children, who were taken prisoners in the war, and not being restored to their mourning friends after the conclusion of peace, were supposed to be dead. Their return afforded inexpressible joy to their afflicted parents.

In February 1761, a white man came weeping to Nain, begging that a few Indian Brethren would assist him and his wife in searching for their little daughter, whom they had lost the day before. Some Indian Brethren set out immediately, discovered its footsteps, and at length the child itself. It lay about two miles from the parents house, covered with an old coat, and almost perished with cold. The parents spread the report of the good disposition and success of the baptized Indians all over the country, and both this and similar occurrences tended not only to quiet the minds of the white people with respect to this Indian town, the vicinity of of which to their settlements had appeared terrible to some; but rendered it even desirable.

In August 1761, the English government had another treaty at Eaton with the deputies of many Indian tribes, which occasioned frequent visits to Nain. Tadeuskund arrived with a retinue of above one hundred Indians, and according to the lift of this year, six hundred and fifty-two travellers were provided with food and lodging during their stay in Nain and Bethlehem. The missionaries and Indian assistants both here and in Wechquetank were very active in preaching the word of God to all that would hear, and its power was made manifest in many. But they were sorry to perceive in the above-mentioned moralist Papunhank, that, though he appeared very desirous of knowing God, the Creator of all things, yet he wished to keep his poor as a teacher of the people, persuading them, that he also was found in faith. Brother Schmick, therefore, told him the truth, in private, with a view to the conversation, that the Holy Ghost would impart to him a true sense of his unbelief, and of the great depravity of his soul, and that he might have an earnest desire for the pardon and remission of his sins, in the blood of Jesus: "then," added he, "you will learn to know your God and Savior Jesus Christ, as you Creator and Redeemer, and experience the saving power of his precious blood, to deliver you from the fetters of sin." Joachim, an assistant, entering the room, added, "Papunhank, you speak much of your faith, but you have not a grain. Your faith is much the same, as mine was. But, if I should now pretend to believe, that I had a pair of stockings, when my legs are bare and cold.""Kind of faith would that be?"

In Autumn 1761, a report was circulated in Nain, that an Indian had been killed by a white man in the Jersey. The whole country, still fertile of the cruelties attending on Indian wars, was thereby filled with fear and dread. Tadeuskund also, returning from Philadelphia, brought the melancholy news, that the war would soon break out again.
the Indians ascribed it solely to the Christians and their trade. Many fled from their dwellings, and the rest were chiefly anxious about the fate of Wechquetsuck, lay most exposed to the incursions of the enemy. The troubles ceased for the present, and peace and security were restored.

In 1762, David Zeisberger visited the Indians who lived at Wajomick, but especially Abraham, who had died, that he was sick. They all listened with great interest to the Gospel; many lamented the woeful condition in which they had plunged themselves, by acting contrary to their convictions and the repeated advice of the Brethren. Soon after Augustus and his wife Augustina, both of them, seduced by Taduskund, visited Nain, their unhappy state to the missionaries, owning their tears their sins, and expressing a great desire to return to the Lord and his people would but receive such prodigals. Their repentance being truly sincere, the Brethren willingly forgave and readmitted them to fellowship. They also received pardon and comfort as the only balm to heal their afflicted souls.

In returned to Wajomick, but the flux raging in those patients, again, lent a message to Bethlehem, begging one of the missionaries would come to them. Bro. Zeisberger therefore went, had the satisfaction of many of them in their last moments, and saw them pass with joy, in reliance upon the death and resurrection of the Savior. Augustus was of that number. Before his death, he entreated his friends, and addressing them with affection, "You know," said he, "that I have led a happy and wicked life during my stay here. I was a forlorn, and very miserable in heart, owing to my sinfulness and disobedience. I pray you not to forget all I have returned unto the Lord, and wept for mercy for the forgiveness of my sins; and my good and is Lord has had mercy upon me, and pardoned all my offenses. The Brethren have also forgiven me."

"Now
"Now my trembling heart is comforted; and I shall soon "unto my Savior: remember my wicked life no more; "avoid my bad example, think on God your Savior, and fol- "low him and his people: thus alone you will prosper. "And now," added he, "I will lie down and rest," and ex- "pired immediately. His wife died some days before, and her "sister, Taduaskun's wife, followed him soon to eternal reft."

Daniel, another baptized Indian, went to Nain, and said that during a late illness he had felt the fear of death, and therefore begged leave to stay there, that he might hear daily of our Savior, if he should be taken ill. He was soon after seized with the flux, and prayed without ceasing for comfort and peace in Jesus. His prayers were heard, and he re- ceived a divine assurance of eternal happiness, which made him greatly desirous to depart and to be with Christ, and thus his last moments were truly edifying. Thus the good Shep- herd found and saved these poor sheep, concerning whom the missionaries had been much perplexed, scarcely expect- ing ever to see their return.

In Nain many pleasing fruits of the Gospel appeared in the numerous visitors, especially in the year 1762, when go- vernment held another council with the Iroquois, Delawares, and other Indian tribes, at Lancaster. Almost all who attended this council, went to Nain, where they heard the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and many experienced in power to the salvation of their souls. One said, "Never did I hear anything like this, that my God and Creator will receive and save sinners who come unto him; and that they may even come loaded with their sins." He added: "Praised be God, that I came and heard such sweet words," and burst into a flood of tears. A young Mat- tikok, who had spent a month at Nain, was taken very ill, after his return to Philadelphia. Before his death, he said to his two brothers: "In Nain, they teach the right way to eternal life. There I have often heard, that our Creator became a man, died on the cross for our sins, was buried, and rose" role again, and ascended up into heaven, and that whoner believes in him, shall not perish; but when he dies, shall live with him for ever. If you with to hear these good words, go to Nain; and when I die, suffer my bones to rest quietly in the earth, and do not remove them, according to your custom." Soon after, his brothers came to in, and related this story, adding, that their brother had said much to God, crying for mercy and pardon, to his last sigh.
In the year 1762, Bishop Spangenberg returned to Europe. gathered the Indian congregation felt, at taking a final visiting of this beloved and respected servant of God, was very
at. From the year 1736, and especially since 1744, God blessed his labor and activity in his cause in North America, in an extraordinary manner, and his love and faithfulness towards the Indian congregation will never be for-taken. The Bishops Peter Boehler and Nathaniel Siedel, ceeded him in the general superintendency of the congregations in North America, and paid particular attention in mission among the Indians.

to those, who in their last hours proved, that they lived in the faith of the Son of God, Abigail deserves be mentioned. Her cheerfulness, composure, and great love to be with Christ, was edifying to all who saw her. bened: "I am now soon going to my Savior, who loved me unto death; I have him in my heart. O how do I swoon, that he has received me poor sinner in mercy!" likewise exhorted her husband and friends, to devote middles to the Lord and abide in him, upon which the saw rejoicing, aged twenty-five. The departure of her was equally edifying. Before his end, he said to a sister: "My body is very ill, but my heart is well, and joy and night in communion with our Savior, to whom depart with great joy."
A boy, called Abraham, not yet four years old, was not remarked by many patient and resigned during his last illness, this conversation proved an abiding blessing to his father. who happened then to be in an unhappy state of mind. On the day before he died, he asked him, "Father, do you love me?"
The father replied, "Yes, I do." Upon repeating his question, he received the same answer. "But then," added he, "do you love our Savior?"—"No," replied the father, "I am just now very poor and miserable."—"Ah," said the child, "if you do not love our Savior, you cannot love me as you ought." Another child, though very ill, whenever it heard the bell ring, begged its parents to carry it into the chapel, and when they sometimes replied, "You are ill, lie down and rest!" it used to say, "No, first we will go to the chapel, and there hear words of our Savior, then I will lie down." Thus filled with love to Jesus, the poor child remained cheerful and resigned, till its soul took flight.

The congregation at Pachaugoch was supported in the year 1762 under many difficulties. The neighboring country being much resorted to by Europeans, the Indians were confined to very narrow limits. One piece of land after the other was taken from them, by which they lost the means of their support. Thus they were obliged to run into debt, and to live defaced among the white people, to earn a livelihood. If they could not pay, they were treated with the greatest severity, and even their poor furniture taken from them. This behavior exasperated the unbaptized Indians to such a degree, that they abused the baptized on account of their sobriety and better management of their outward concerns, attacking them on the highway, and in other places cruelly beating them. This occasioned some of the baptized to waver, and to become low and dispirited. Some young people were even seduced to sin, and brought into misery. A certain melancholy pervaded the congregation, and the missionary himself began to lose courage. At length the Lord strengthened him with new power, and he revived, when he perceived the grace attending his testimony of the Gospel, which not only the Indians, but likewise the Europeans, came in great numbers to hear. The continued friendship and countenance of the magistracy proved like-an encouragement. The justice of the peace frequently noted the Indian congregation to be obedient to their her, adding, that if any thing displeasing should occur, ought first to go to the missionary, and endeavor amicly to settle their disputes, for he would determine in all s, whether the affair required the interference of the pilarate. Thus many complaints were removed, for the missionaries always advised the baptized Indians, rather to erjury, than to go to law with any one, according to the ice of the apostle (1 Cor. vi. 7.).
XIV. Troubles at Pachgatsch. 204

Nothing could be done as yet, to serve those baptized Indians with the Gospel, who had retired to the Ohio. Brother Poßf to live about a hundred miles beyond Pittsburg in Scarora town, intending to begin a mission among the ians there. The Brethren with him all possible suc- gand upon his sending to Bethlehem for an assistant in housekeeping, who might have an opportunity of learn- the Delaware language. Brother John Heckenwaelder ed to go thither, and soon made good progress. But other Poßf's view of establishing a mission, failed.
CHAPTER XV.

1763.

In the beginning of the year 1763, the congregations in Nain and Wechquetank enjoyed peace and prosperity. The good regulations made among them were improving every day, new houses were built, and even the outward appearance of their settlements, gave great pleasure to every thinking mind. March 24, the foundation-stone was laid for an enlarged chapel at Nain, which was consecrated the 29th of May following.

But the greatest prosperity of these congregations was the gracious visitation of God our Savior, in the hearts of the Indians, which was particularly evident during Lent and the Easter holidays. They then devoted themselves anew unto the Lord, as his eternal property, and all declared, that during these days they experienced what they could not express in words; it was truly, as if Christ crucified was set forth before their eyes. One said: "I feel, that I have been the reason of all his bitter sufferings, but now I rejoice that..."
XV. D. Zeibergers's Journ'y to Machuhiung. 303 has overcome for me, and liveth for ever." An old Indian Sister could not sufficiently express her gratitude or Savior; that he had showed such mercy unto her soul, condescended to alleviate her spiritual trouble. "Whenner I feel oppressed, he appears unto my spirit, I view pierced side, his wounds in hands and feet, and then every thing which would diminish my consolation in him, uses me."

his joy in the Lord in both places, was connected with earnest desire to follow those who had strayed from the regeneration; and to see them return to the enjoyment of ease and comfort. On this account the death of Tadeusl in April, gave them great pain. He was burnt in house at Wajomic, without having given any proof spontaneous. The drunken savages, setting his house in fire to the whole village, which was soon consumed.
Among those who returned, and were received joy, was Sarah, Abraham's widow, who came with daughter from the Susquehannah to Wechquettank, and so earnestly for re-admission. She declared, that she not have forsaken the congregation, but for her husband; and that he had said to her before he died; "I am ly of having led you to this place; forgive me, return unto my Savior, beg him to show mercy unto you, and entrast the Brethren to receive you again." She followed twice, the inhabitants of Wechquettank received her well, and a small cottage was built for her.

May 1762, Zeibeger and the Indian Brother Anthony up the Susquehannah as far as Machwihlinung. The on of this journey was a report of a remarkable awakin those parts, and that the Indians were very desirous some one, who could point out to them the true of obtaining rest and peace in their conscience. Popunhaving lost all his credit by the apparent inefficacy of his inca. Before Brother Zeibeger reached the town, he met by an inhabitant of Machwihlinung, called Job way, who spoke English well, and told him, that their council
council had met six days successively, to consider how they might procure a teacher of the truth; that they had come to no resolution, except to desist from attending Papunhank's sermons, not believing that he preached the genuine word of God. Brother Zeilberger, whose heart glowed with desire to preach the Gospel, considering this as a call from God, hastened to the town, where he was kindly received and lodged by Papunhank himself. In the evening the whole town assembled, desiring that he would preach the word of God to them. In their speech made to him, they said:
"We all greatly rejoiced at your arrival, and said to each other: 'These are the people whom we have so long waited for; they will show us the right way to salvation." Brother Zeilberger then spoke from the abundance of his heart, and great power attended the word of reconciliation. He concluded his discourse thus: "This, this alone, is the pure and genuine doctrine of salvation: thus it is written in the Bible, thus I have experienced it in my own soul, and therefore am assured, and assure you, that there is no other way to obtain salvation, but alone through the Lord Jesus Christ, who became a man, died, and is risen again for us." Anthony confirmed the missionaries words from his own experience, and though fatigued by the journey, continued preaching, and extolling the power of the blood of Jesus, before his astonished countrymen, till after midnight. The next day, at five in the morning, the people assembled again; for the women being then engaged in planting, they desired to hear the "great word" before they got to the fields. The same was done every day during their stay. Messengers were then sent to a party of Indians who had removed about twenty miles higher up the river, invite them also, to come and hear the Gospel, which they did with great eagerness. Brother Zeilberger experienced here in a particular manner, how pleasing it is to preach souls already awakened by the Spirit of God to seek after Savior and Deliverer, and having perceived that some had already endeavored to lead a pious and virtuous life in the strength, doing good, with a view to merit heaven; he ved to them in a discourse held for that purpose, that was not the right way to come to God, but that we must without exception, come first to Jesus Christ, as ched and forlorn sinners, and receive hearts cleansed changed by the power of his blood; before we can do its acceptable unto God; but that then it would be a stant duty to do good and to keep his commandments.

The emotion occasioned by Zeisberger's discourses was eral. Some wept day and night for the remission of their even Papunhank was so moved in these meetings, that ted aloud for mercy through Jesus Christ. The fathers families assembled, and resolved to send a message to th, to request that they would send a teacher to live and preach the Gospel to them. With this message Zeisberger and his companion returned to Bethlewhere, after mature deliberation, it was thought , that he himself should return to Machwhilufung, as da missionary, and he gladly accepted of this call. On road he had the misfortune, in making an hut for his
's lodging, to wound himself very dangerously with an
, so that he fainted away, from a loss of blood. But the ian assistant, Nathanael, who accompanied him, foot ured an healing plant, known to him, and applied it to the
and, by which Brother Zeisberger not only recovered his swoon, but to his great altonishment, the wound losed and healed. After suffering many hardships, y at length arrived safe in Machwhilufung, where they again kindly received by Papunhank and the whole , and Brother Zeisberger rejoiced to find the people ager to hear the word of God.
Soon after this, some well-meaning people of a different asion arrived at Machwhilufung, having been invited other Indians to preach in the neighborhood. Brother berger received them kindly, and was willing, that they ded speak to the people. But the Indians having sum-ted a council of all the men, invited these new teachers
to
to be present. Papunhank then addressed them in the of the rest, giving them an account of their former readings, adding, that God had heard their prayers sent the Brethren to them; whose words made such as prelson upon them, that they could not but believe their trine to be the truth, and therefore desired to other. Upon the teachers expressed themselves satisfied and wished their Zeitberger much success, justly observing, that he undertaken a very arduous task. The missionary having no manner of influence in the above decision of the Indi was greatly encouraged to preach faith in Christ Jesus unwearied perseverance. Many of his hearers came Wajomick and other places, some above 100 miles dill Others sent word that they should soon come and live that they might also be instructed in the Gospel, and I peared as if the Lord would set up his standard in this Papunhank, a man naturally vain and high in his own cite, was in a short time so overcome by the divine attending the word of the crofs, that he cast all his fighteounece aside, bemoaning his wretched life and the depravity he found within himself, with true contri
The extraordinary change wrought in him was remark obvious; he would hardly eat or drink, and at length brother Zeitberger, confessing the gross sins he had Guilty of in his former life, though a preacher of mon and begged earnestly to be baptized. His request granted on the 26th of June. At his baptism, he made solemn declaration of his faith before all the people, lating how his almighty Savior had convinced him of sinfulness and depravity. He added, that he had for preached to them, believing himself to be a good man knowing, that he was such a miserable creature, yet chief of sinners amongst them, and now begged the forgive and forget every thing he had formerly done! / this affecting speech, Brother Zeitberger baptized this eling of the Machwhihilung Indians into the death of This transaction was attended with so powerful a fen

206 Papunhank's Conversion and Baptism. the presence of God, that the whole assembly sat down over-me with awe and devotion, and the missionary was filled th praise and thanksgiving. He was named John, and whole demeanor bespoke the regeneration of his heart.
other Indian, who had formerly been Papunbunk’s oppotee, was baptized after him, and called Peter. This man med at a loss how to express his joy of heart, and said, at now his heart was easy, and freed from a burden which ately appeared insupportable to him.

But in the midst of all this joy, at the power and blessing he Gospel, Brother Zeitberger was unexpectedly reed to Bethlehem, the most dreadful intelligence having received, of hostilities committed by the Indians near great lakes of Canada and on the Ohio, where they murdered several hundred white people. They had beming to make incursions into Pennsylvania, and there was sen reason to fear a repetition of those dreadful scenes bind in 1755. The above-mentioned fanatics revived d doctrines, publishing every-where, that this new war was just punishment of God, because the Europeans, like Israelites of old, had not destroyed the Canaanites, and more declared that all Indians, without exception, ought be put to the sword.

The inhabitants of Nain and Wechquenamah were most armed on this account. The men, who were then hunt-g a great distance from the settlements, were recalled home. Both congregations joined in sending an humble red to the Governor of Pennsylvania, in which they ferred their abhorrence of the cruelties committed by their trampmen, and begged his Excellency’s protection. He nferred, that as long as they should keep themselves out of the war, he would do every thing in his power to screen men from danger.

It was then said, that the Iroquois would not suffer any murder to be committed on the east side of the Susquehannah, and as the province of Pennsylvania had engaged some companies of soldiers, drest much like Indian warriors, to defend the frontiers, and these troops came into the neighborhood of Nain and Wechquetank. the Indians thought themselves in no great danger of being surprised by the hostile Indians. But what then promised to ensure their safety, proved the source of inexpressible distress, as the following narrative will show:
"

Four strange Indians from the Ohio, pretending to wish to hear the Gospel, visited Wechquetank, Nain, and Beh lehem. They proved afterwards to belong to a band of murderers, who were meditating an attack upon the country, but wishing first to remove their friends and relations from Wechquetank. But observing so many soldiers in ever-part of the country; they hastened back with fear and decipitation. The soldiers then suspected some danger correpondence between the Christian Indians and the enemy; and our people, finding that they had to fear an attack both from the white people and the savages, came to resolution not to oppose the former, but boldly to defend themselves against the latter. They even confeated to the fire of the officers, to wear a certain mark, by which the white people might know them to be peaceful Indians.

All the neighbors attended now to the motions of the Indians at Wechquetank; many calling it their only bast confolation, and resoluing not to fly, as long as the Christian Indians maintained their ground, but frequently repealing the request; that if their flight was resolved upon, it might be informed in time to save themselves.

In August, Zachary and his wife, who had left the congregation in Wechquetank some time ago, came as a visit and did all in their power to disquiet the minds of the Berthren, respecting the intentions of the white people. A woman, called Zippora, was persuaded to follow them;
But these poor people verified that saying of our blessed Se-vior: "He that loveth his life, shall lose it." On their return they said at the river Buchkabuchka over-night, where Ca-tain Wetterfold lay with a company of soldiers, and were unconcerned to sleep in a hay-loft. But in the night the Dangerous Situation of Wechquetank. 209 ized by the soldiers; Zippora was thrown down arching-floor, and killed: Zachary escaped out of but was pursued, and with his wife and little to the sword, though the mother begged for their her knees.
is event, the soldiers became still more suspicious ians of Wechquetank, naturally supposing, that four brothers, living there, would endeavor to death, and that all the inhabitants would take They therefore prohibited the Indians to staining to kill the first they should meet in however Captain Wetterhold was at last per-destitute from this measure, by the firm and reonfrances of the missionary, Brother Grube.
re was restored for some time, and the congregachank was greatly encouraged by the steady d conduct of their missionary. He always comfort-diminishing them to be of one mind, and stedep to their resolution, not to forfake each other, d out together to the last extremity, and bear the watching day by day. He cared for them as a fa-was never weary of speaking in their behalf to
of the militia, though sometimes roughly treated. difficult task he had, was to pacify a party of Irish , who in great rage declared, that no Indians d themselves in the woods, or they hot and immediately, and that if only one white should be murder'd in this neighborhood, the settlement would rise in arms and scalp the of Wechquetank, without waiting for an order ment, or for a warrant from the justice of the threating messages were sent to Nain, and Indians were under the special protection of Go-and rode legal passports whenever they travwent out to hunt at a small distance from the
it was next to a miracle, that they returned home safe.
They were frequently disturbed by false alarms. On the 8th of October, a messenger arrived at midnight with intelligence, that the savages had attacked an Irish settlement, eight miles from Bethlehem, and killed a captain, lieutenant, several soldiers, and a Mr. [illegible], whose wife narrowly escaped, though she was the sole cause of all the mischief, by dropping four inconclusive words against company of Indians, who assembled there.

This dreadful event placed the congregations at Nain a Wechquetank, and their missionaries, in a critical situation both the savages and the white people being their enemies. The latter were now so enraged against all the Indians, that they threatened after revenge. Thus situated, the Brethren could do nothing but resign themselves to God, their mighty Protector, awaiting the fulfillment of his will, and depending upon his help in the time of trouble. In places a strict watch was kept by night and day. The Indian Brethren were full of faith and courage: one of them said: "Wicked people are as weak as worms in the fight of our Savior; he can and will protect us, and cause fear to come upon them." His words were verified the very next day, for on the 9th of October, about fifty white men assembled on the opposite side of the Lecha, with view to surprize Nain in the night, and to murder all the inhabitants. But a neighboring friend representing the danger and difficulty of such an attempt, weakly the enemy forsook their intentions and returned home. This very merciful preference excited the Indian congregation to join in praise and thanksgiving to God, and adore him for his protection.

The same day on which Nain was in such imminent danger, a party of outrageously Irish freebooters came to Wechquetank, fully intending to murder all the Indian inhabitants accusing them of having been accomplices in the murder committed in their settlement. Brother Grube could have restrained them, by representing the impossibility of their being present, he and his people being daily in danger... of being attacked by the savages, and on that account of daring to venture out of the place. But when he saw that the exasperated people would not refrain from revenging the murder of their countrymen, by shedding the blood of these innocent Indians; he was obliged to endeavor to pacify them by presents, and by giving them enough to eat and to drink, brought them at length to reason. At depar ting, they were heard to say, that if the Indians of Wechquetank did not soon quit that place, they would re turn and execute their barbarous design. The text of Scrip ture appointed for that day was: "God shall help her, and she right early," Psa. xlvi. 5, which being particularly impressed upon Brother Grube's mind, proved a great con vulsion unto him. In the evening-meeting he delivered a discourse upon it, by which his intimidated congregation was much strengthened, and encouraged never to doubt of the help of the Lord. During the night, all the men were upon the watch; several spies were discovered lurking about the settlement, and a fire at some distance betrayed a neighboring encampment, so that a sudden attack was suspected.
This was probably prevented solely by an extraordinary violent rain, which fell during this dark and gloomy night.
It was now apparent, that it would have been temerity in the extreme, to postpone their flight any longer, and the mis sionary received an express from Bethlehem, with the most pressing solicitations, to break up immediately and to retire with his whole congregation to Nazareth, promising that wagons should be provided and sent to meet them. When they were preparing to depart, ten musket-shots were heard near the settlement, the report of which alarmed the Indians, impelling that the savages had attacked the white peo ple, resolved to go out in defence of the latter. The mis sionary urged them not to quit the place, upon which they formed a circle to repel any attack. Meanwhile Brother Grube's wife was engaged in comforting the Indian Sitters, and he exhorted the Brethren to stand firm, and to expect deliverance from God. Peter answered: "Very true; only P 2
"don't
"don't you stand before me, but go behind, for I will be shot first." Suddenly the party from whom the attack was feared, marched off with the Indian war-whoop, and it was afterwards discovered, that they were a party of soldiers, who wished to draw our people into the field, to fight them.

The wagons arrived soon after from Nazareth, and the whole congregation set out on the 1st of October, not without regret, that they were obliged to quit so pleasant a log as Wechquetank, with good houses and large plantations especially as they were obliged to leave their harvest and great part of their cattle behind them. The Brethren had a good look-out on both sides of the road through the woods especially during the night, when they encamped in the open air; and on the day following the Lord conduced them safe to Nazareth, where they were received with great joy, welcomed at a love-feast, and liberally provided with clothing and every thing necessary. Thus the congregation at Nazareth had likewise the pleasure to entertain an Indian congregation, as Bethlehem had done in 1755.

Some days after their arrival, the governor sent for Brother Crube to Philadelphia, and gave him an opportunity to speak fully with him, concerning the bitter accusation made against the Brethren. His Excellency was convinced of their fidelity, and spoke of the mission with great kindness. Upon the missionary's informing the Indian Brethren of the good disposition of the governor towards them, they expressed their joy and gratitude, in the most lively term. They had now, for several weeks together, a time of rest at peace, and their edifying walk afforded much pleasure to the congregation at Nazareth.

In the mean time, the congregation at Nain was bloated on all sides. The savages continued to lay waste the country with fire and sword, and killed most of the English people living in Wacomick. This increased the fears of the white people against the Indians in general, and inhabitants of Nain ventured no longer to go to Bethlehem on business, as the white fugitives, who had resorted thither from various parts, abused and assaulted them. An European Brother was therefore appointed to carry their meagre stores. No Indian ventured to fetch wood, or to look after his cattle, without a white Brother to accompany him, or a passport in his pocket. Even at home the men were obliged to keep strict watch, by day and night, that they might meet quietly in the chapel, defend the Sistars in gathering the crops from the plantations, and spend the night with their families in safety. They agreed, that, in case of an attack from the white people, the Sistars and children should assemble in the chapel, and the Brethren and boys in some houses appointed for that purpose: that Brother Jacob Schmick, then missionary at Nain, should go to meet the enemy, and endeavor to persuade them to desist from their purpose, but that if the savages should venture an attack, the Indian Brethren would all join in marching against them, firmly believing, that the Lord would assist them to conquer their enemies.

In this trying situation they held out patiently for four weeks, though much fatigued by watching during the cold nights. The peace of God and the brotherly love, which then prevailed in a great degree among them, preferred their courage and patience.

Their joy was every morning renewed, when, after the fears of the night, they met together in the chapel, and strengthened themselves in fellowship, by considering the Word of God, and experiencing the consolations of his Spirit.

Having made such good regulations, that the enemy could not attempt an attack without danger, they began to flatter themselves, that Government would support them with more energy, and procure for them rest and safety in their own dwellings. But unexpectedly, their affairs took a different turn. October 19th, an harmless Indian, called Renatus, son of the venerable aged Jacob, was unexpectedly seized, as the murderer of one of the Irish settlers, and his person having been been sworn to by the widow, he was conveyed to Philaphia and imprisoned.

It may easily be conceived, how soon the report of transaotion spread through the country, and how fury of the white people rose against the Indian con-tation at Nain. They therefore expected nothing less than cruel death. But God inclined the hearts of the chiegistrates to protect them, before it was too late. N New 6th, an express arrived from Philadelphia, bringing order, that all the baptized Indians from Nain and Que-terkank should be brought to Philadelphia, and be pr ed in that city, having first delivered up their arms.

Congregation at Bethlehem was exhorted to offer up and supplication to God, that he would prevent all the cious effects this measure might have upon the among the heathen, and grant grace and strength to nians, to approve themselves, under these circum-truly children of God, and to possess their souls in

The day following, a message was sent to Nain, to a the Indian congregation with the order of Government. were comforted by the text for that day, "What tim afraid, I will trust in her," Ps. 116:5 and though one man, lifted up their voices and wept, yet they exp themselves fully resigned to the will of the Lord, and patiently to go whither they were ordered; but declare they would rather die than leave their teachers. Be-sure that the missionaries would not forsake them, the pared for the journey on the 7th of November, the ogation at Bethlehem generously providing them with cient clothing, of which they stood greatly in need soon as the sheriff, Mr. Jennings, arrived, the Indian then delivered their guns to him, with a compofure of which most strikingly proved the change wrought in for an heathen Indian would rather part with his with his gun.

In the mean time the Indians of Wechquetank, of Nazareth, were likewise informed of the above-men er of Government, and showed the same obedience. They set out on the 8th of November in wagons, with the best huts and prayers of that congregation, numberless tears shed by the emigrants upon leaving this place of rest. Soon they arrived in Bethlehem, and went directly to the pen, where Bishop Peter Boehler delivered a farewell prayer upon the text for the day, "Make thy way straight for my face." Psa. v. 8. The congregation at Bethlehem greeted them also with apparel, and with sympathizing words bid them farewell.

In the same day in the afternoon the congregation at a emigrated. They felt great pain in leaving this place, where the Lord had so graciously walked in the midst of them, and went in silence, weeping, towards the Lecha, where they were joined by the congregation of Wechquet. Thus the whole Indian flock was again united, and set upon their pilgrimage in the name of the Lord, congregation of Bethlehem standing spectators, and as they passed, commending them to the grace and protection of God with supplication and tears. It was a most affecting scene, to behold these beloved people, among whom were aged, infirm, and sick persons, besides pregnant women, young children, proceeding patiently, ignorant of what their fate. They derived great comfort from this: their faithful teachers did not forsake them; the missionaries Grube and Schmick with their wives, and the single brethren David Zeitsberger and John Rothe going with them. Brethren accompanied them to Philadelphia, and the care for them as a father. The sick, the aged, and men were conveyed in wagons, the rest went on foot. the rains had made the roads very heavy, many fainted under fatigue, one fell down and dislocated his arm; two lost their companions in the dark. They suffered most from the malice of some white people on the 4, who abused and loaded them with cursles. In passing through Germantown they were insulted by the populace, who spoke of nothing but burning, hanging, and other modes of punishment, to be insulted on them. A party of malicious persons had been resolved, immediately upon their arrival, to treat them some mischief, but the night and the violent rains prevented it.

November 11th, they arrived at the barracks in Philadelphia, in which, by order of Government, they were to be lodged: but the soldiers quartered there forcibly refused them admittance, in spite of the positive command of the governor. Thus the poor Indians were detained in the street, from ten o'clock in the forenoon to three in the after noon. A dreadful mob gathered around them, denouncing, reviling, and chastising them with all the outrages common by the savages, threatening to kill them on the spot; which they certainly would have done, had the Indians returned evil for evil. But they were all silent, and afterwards said that they had comforted themselves, by considering the insult and mockery our Savior had suffered on their account. The missionaries, who, for their zealous interference and endeavors in behalf of their congregations, were treated with contempt, declared that they ascribed it to the miraculous providence of God alone, that they were not sacrificed to the fury of this misfortune and exasperated mob.

After five hours delay, the magistrates, perceiving that the soldiers persisted in refusing to admit the Indians into the barracks, sent an order, that they should proceed. They passed along through this great city, thousands following them with such tumultuous clamor, that they might truly be considered as sheep among wolves. They were at last conducted six miles further, to Province Island, in the Delaware, which joined the main-land by a dam, and lodged in some large buildings. They afterward acknowledged this circumstance with gratitude, as a gracious providence of God, for in the barracks at Philadelphia would not have enjoyed it. The text of the day gives them great comfort, “I will teach thee in the way thou shalt go.” Psa. xxiii. 8.
V. The Christian Indians reside at Province Island. 217

if they settled as well as circumstances would permit; missionaries assisted in bringing their affairs into some and regularity: they had their usual meetings every hich at that time proved a great comfort to their souls.
if of the time was spent by each family as usefully as
c. At first they were in want of fire, food and provisbut Brother Neiberger's petition in their behalf was attended to by the governor, and by his order they were wards well supplied with all things. Several men from adelphia, especially some of the people called Quakers, ly endeavored by benefactions to render the inconveance of their situation less grievous, though their curiosity my inhabitants of Philadelphia to visit the converted yet they enjoyed peace and safety in their place.
Veak was burnt by the white people, and in the the 18th of November, some incendiaries endeavored to set fire to Bethlehem. The oil-mill was consumed, the fury of the flames was such, that the adjoining works were with great difficulty saved from destruc-y the end of the month, John Papunha's came ty-one Indians to Bethlehem, seeking protection.

were directed to Philadelphia, and thence proceeded Indian congregation. Brother Frederick William von all went from Bethlehem to Philadelphia, and de-istry to the Indians, as agent in their transactions prent.
Brothers felt the greatest gratitude, in seeing the rest tection enjoyed by this persecuted congregation.
more especially when they heard with ror, that a party of peaceable Indians, who had quently among the white people, were attacked on th of December in the small village of Canestoga near er, by fifty-seven so-called Christians from Paxton, teen of them murdered in their huts. The rest fled to her, where the magistrates protected, and lodged them work-house, a strong building and well secured. They were however followed by the murderers, who marched into the town at noon-day, broke into the work-house, and though the Indians begged their lives on their knees, yet their barbarians cruelly murdered them all, throwing their mangled bodies into the street. They then departed with a dreadful shout of victory, threatening that the Indians in Province Island should share the same fate.

Government indeed issued a proclamation against these outrages, forbidding any one to molest the Indians in Province Island, under the severest penalties, and promising a reward of 200l. to any who should bring the two ringleaders of the abovementioned party to justice. But it soon became evident, that an incredible number of persons, and even many of the inhabitants of Philadelphia, were in a secret connexion with the ringleaders, and people in general had so little respect for Government at that time, that they were taken up, though they walked publicly in the street and even stood before the governor's house, bidding him defiance. As he feared a general mob, he thought it then most prudent to take no notice of them. The rioters however became more numerous and daring, and both in Philadelpia and other parts of the country of Lancaster, many hundred persons agreed to go to Philadelphia and not to retreat till all the Indians, taken into protection by Government, were sacrificed.

December 20th, intelligence was received in Philadelphia, that a large party of those people were on the move, intending to fall upon the Christian Indians. The governor instantly sent word to the millionaries, advising them to keep upon their guard, and on the 31st of December, when the danger seemed approaching, sent some large vessels ordering them and their people immediately to go on board and take flight. In a short time they were all on board, and rowed to Leck Island, where they were to expect further orders. Some hours after, the millionaries received a letter from his Excellency, in which he informed them, that it had been altogether a false alarm, that they therefore should return.
CHAPTER XVI.

1764. 1765.

The Christian Indians are ordered to go to the English Army, but quartered, and lodged in the Barracks at Philadelphia. By of during their Confinement: yet not without Blessings. Re-lease from Prison. Peace concluded. The Indian Congregation leaves the Barracks: Trouble the Journey to Machuhihying on the Susquehannah.

The Indian congregation had scarcely celebrated the Lord's Supper at the commencement of the year 1764, resolved their Covenant to show forth His death in their walk and conversation, when the troubles broke out.

Government having received more certain information, concerning the murderous intentions of the rioters, resolved to persevere in the persecution into safety, and to send by way of New York to the English army, and particularly to recommend them to Sir William Johnson, agent for
for the Crown among the Northern Indians. January 28, late in the evening, the missionaries received orders to prepare for this journey, without loss of time, and at midnight they set out, proceeding by water to a place about five miles from Philadelphia, where they found Mr. Lewis and Jacob Weiss ready to conduct them. They passed early and almost unobserved through Philadelphia to the house of the Brethren, where a number of Brethren and Sisters met to receive them, having provided a breakfast for them in the meeting-hall. Here they were visited by the missionary, Mr. Fox, who was appointed by Government to escort their future journey. The gentleman was so struck at the sight of these poor emigrants, that he immediately ordered a number of blankets to be distributed among them; that they might defend themselves better against the severe cold. Wagons being provided for the aged, the blind, the sick, the children, and the heavy baggage, they set out, accompanied by the missionaries, amid so great a crowd of people, that they could hardly proceed. The mob cried and reviled them in a dreadful manner, but no one ventured to lay hands on them. Several Brethren accompanied them a little way out of town, and forced further they were met by Captain Robertson with some Highlanders, who had been in the last engagement with the Indians, and were ordered to escort them. These soldiers behaved at first very wild and unfriendly, being particularly troublesome to the young women by their profane conversation, but were persuaded by degrees to conduct themselves with more order and decency. The missionaries Meffers. Fox and Logan went with them as far as Trenton, where the latter addressed them in the name of the governor, declaring the governor's abhorrence of the murders committed in Canestoga and Lancaister upon the innocent Indians, and delivering two belts of wampum, desiring that they might be sent to the Iroquois. By the first, they were exhorted to make peace, having begun the war without cause; to the second, some pieces of black cloth and handkerchiefs were added, for the friends of the poor murdered Indians.
over the graves of their relations, and to wipe away their tears, with this assurance, that Government would severely punish the murderers.

Logan having delivered this speech, the Indians took of both gentlemen, expressing their humble thanks to and the governor, for the many favors they had received during these troubles. In Trenton, the commissary took charge of them, and provided every thing needful for their convenience on the road. They arrived in the towns through which the road lay, the mob insulted the Indians; but God preserved them from mischief, and led them safe to Amboy, where two were ready to carry them to New York. They were ready to go on board on the 11th of January, '64, when a large party unexpectedly arrived from the governor of New York. The orders of Captain Robertson were ordered by General Gage to prevent them from proceeding; the ferrymen were likewise prohibited, by a severe penalty, from crossing the river with them. Mr. Eby immediately withdrew from the proceedings to Philadelphia, deferring his orders.

The mean time the travelling congregation lay in Amboy, where they were visited by the Brethren of New York. They held their daily meetings in the usual order, and the peace of God, great numbers of people being present, the missionary Green preached with great success. The white people, who thus attended the services of the Indians, were highly pleased with their singing, especially with their singing, and conceived a more favorable opinion of them. One of the soldiers exclaimed: "God, all the white people were as good Christians, as these Indians." The orders sent by the governor at Philadelphia, Indian congregation set out with cheerfulness on their journey, in full confidence that the Lord was on their side.
dence, for wife purposes, best known to himself, had dained their travelling thus to and fro. . . This belief is reported them under all the difficulties they met with in their journeys, made in the severest part of winter. The guard of Highlanders under Captain Robertson was now relieved by one hundred and seventy men from Gen. Gage's army, commanded by Captain Schloffer, one leading the van, and the other bringing up the rear. The soldiers had just come from Niagara, and had suffered from the savages near Lake Erie, which rendered then the beginning so severe to the Indians, that nothing farable could be expected from them; but God in his changed their disposition, their unfriendly behavior softened into cordiality, and they conversed familiarly with the Indian brethren, relating their sufferings in the war, the savages.

The daily meetings were held without molestation, attended by great numbers of white people, who heard with astonishment and edification. Near Brunswick they were in great danger in passing over the ice, and the firm and aged were obliged to creep over the frozen water upon their hands and feet. However, the journey was formed with safety. January 24th, they arrived inadelphia, where they were lodged in the barracks. The first met to render thanks to God for the blessing and protection, experienced from him during this singular peregrination, and especially, that he had preserved their fowls from harm, in conversing with the soldiers, some of whom were inconsiderate and wild. In the barracks of Philadelphia they were guarded by day and night, regulated the meetings and housekeeping, and hoped to have found and safety. But soon after their arrival they were so troubled by the mob, especially by the young people, the first guard granted to them, was not sufficient for protection. The ringleaders of the above-mentioned disturbers endeavored by force to put their wicked designs into execution. They marched in large bodies towards Phila.
VI. in the Barracks at Philadelphia. 223.

Having been highly offended by the action, lately fitted by the governor, they now would sit, till all the Indians protected by government, were red over to them. This occasioned the guard at the barracks to be doubled, the magistrates were at length obliged to repel force by force. February 3d, eight heavy pieces of cannon were up before the barracks, and a rampart thrown up in the middle of the square. The citizens, and even many Quakers, took up arms, and repaired to the barracks to the soldiers in defending the poor Indians, who had in mean time been brought in great haste out of the city into the upper story. At midnight, the governor's visit to them, bidding them be of good cheer, soothing their fears by his condescending behavior. Sensations of diffusion likewise came, and showed their disposition towards the Indians: some even stood in arms, supposing they could be no where more safe. February 4th, intelligence was received of the approach of rioters; every body prepared to receive them, and whole town was in an uproar. The report of guns was heard, and the soldiers made a dreadful noise. The8, orders were discharged, and our poor Indians, having heard the report of such large cannon, were exceedingly afraid; for they stood so near the building, that transverse rows were broken by the shock. The rebels however ventured to approach, and the citizens returned home. In the night between the 5th and 6th a report prevailed the rioters were again on the road, and whole town in motion. The church bells were rung, the streets inaded, and the inhabitants, being waked out of their beds, were ordered to attend at the town-house, where arms and ammunition were distributed among them. Two companies of armed citizens repaired to the barracks, and four cannon were mounted. Thus the following day was in terror.

Two companies of armed citizens repaired to the barracks, and four cannon were mounted. Thus the following day was in terror. In hourly expectation of the rebels: the white men at Philadelphia were also exposed to much abuse and and fender from misinformed people, who ascribed all disturbances to them and their Indian converts. The Indians, who were frequently told by their friends, that rebels thirsted after their blood, considered themselves devoted to slaughter, and thought they were very thankful the spirited preparations made by Government for defence, yet placed their only hope in the Lord. So said with composure and resignation: "God can help us in places; but if it be his will, we will willingly suf Some examined themselves, and finding they had no sufficient faith to go cheerfully out of time, turned in distresses to the Lord Jesus, who made these trials a bless them. The missionaries rejoiced greatly, that these afflicts manifestly proved that their conversion was not the wondrous man, but of God himself.

At length certain information was received that the rise hearing of the preparations made to receive them, and solved to proceed no further. Some gentlemen were sent by Government to ask them what they had to complain After much insolent behavior, they afforded, that there were several murderers among our Indians, whom they had seen Pittsburg, and demanded that they should be delivered to pacify them, one of the ringleaders was invited to the barracks, and to point out the people spoken of... con ingly he examined every individual, but did not find any whom he could charge with any crime. They then gave that the Quakers had secretly taken five of our Indians out the barracks and hid them in a place of safety. This was investigated and proved false, upon which the rioters mard off, and, as they declared, relinquished their design for premier. Yet it was very evident, that their plan was to murder our Indians, and then, by taking advantage of the general confusion, to overturn the whole form of government, and thus to spread devastation and misery the whole country.

The Christian Indians in the barracks now offered praises and thanksgiving to God, that he had so gracious ly
defeated the designs of their enemies. The missionaries reminded them of the beautiful words of Scripture appointed for these days of anxiety and danger. The first was: "Let the righteous be glad, ye exceedingly rejoice." Psa. lxviii. 3. "The Lord, it is nothing with thee to help, whether with many, or with them that have no power." 2 Chron. xiv. 11. And for the day when the rioters departed: "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." 1 Sam. vii. 12.

People of all ranks came to see the Indians, who were now literally become a spectacle to thousands. Their opinions concerning them were various. Some could now conceal their animosity both against them and the Brethren; many pitied them, as innocent sufferers, and congratulated them on their escape; others, not being able to comprehend how the missionaries could continue with them under such afflicting circumstances, expressed great reverence for their patience and love towards their congregation, and knew not how to show sufficient honor to these faithful ministers of the Lord. The public worship of the congregation, especially on Sundays, was attended by such crowds of hearers, that the chapel could not contain them; yet the greatest silence and order was preferred. Some were pleased with the singing of the Indians, others heard the Gospel attentively, and believed in the word of the cross. Several soldiers who had been a long time in camp, were glad to hear the sweet words of the Gospel again, after having been deprived of it for six or seven years. The Indians also, who came with John Papunbark from Machwiulungu, and several Indians from the Jereys, who had applied to Government for protection and were quartered in the barracks, had here a good opportunity of hearing the Gospel, and to most of them the word of the cross proved the power of God unto salvation.

About this time four single Indian women, who had lived several years in the house of the single Sisters at Bethlehem, but were no more safe in that place, were also sent to the barracks, and all who saw them admired their terror, modesty, and appearance, appearance, and prudent conduct. The soldiers respected them, and never disturbed them in their apartment.

In general the latter deserve that good testimony, that they always treated our Indians with kindness; and the friendly and wise conduct of the officers, who kept strict order among their men, cannot be sufficiently praised.

Another attempt to send the Christian Indians to the army having failed, and it appearing that their removal from the barracks could not be soon effected, the missionary Gould commenced an English school with the Indian youth, who took great delight in learning; and all the Indian families began to settle for a long stay. The missionaries met the congregation morning and evening, and at stated times administered the Holy Communion. They also baptized several, who had heard and believed the Gospel, and the grace of God was powerful in the congregation. As to externals, Government provided every thing needful for their ease and support. The continual visits of strangers, though sometimes attended with inconvenience, convinced many who were ill-disposed, both of their innocence and true conversion unto the Lord.

However, their present situation was a hard trial, and more afflicting to some of them, than all past dangers. Though it was rendered as easy as possible, they considered it little short of imprisonment. The good quality of their victuals, to which they were not used, was as ill suited to the state of their stomachs, as the want of bodily exercise and proper employment to that of their minds. Their living together began by degrees to appear insupportable; the men could not go into the forest to hunt, which being again of their very nature, a spirit of independence and liberty began to arise in them, especially in the young people; some of the latter grew low-spirited, others dissatisfied, and very refractory. Many suffered through their conversation with the strange Indians quartered in the same barracks. The missionaries found their task very difficult, being obliged to hear all the complaints of the dissatisfied. in the Barracks at Philadelphia.

In March, our Indians sent John Papunhank and an Indian Brother as messengers of peace to the warriors, to inform them that they were all alive, and to lay down the hatchet. Encouraged by the reply received, they addressed Government, and begged that they might be safely escorted to the frontiers, hence they would find their way to General Johnson. The war with the Indians still continued, Government not granting this request. By this refusal, their uneasiness increased. Nor was this all. As the summer advanced, and the small-pox broke out amongst them, which added such dread and horror, that many meditated their escape from the barracks.

Is distress God blessed the perseverance of the militia, whose friendly and encouraging admonitions prevailed. Their uneasiness was changed into a persistence to the will of the Lord. It was now a pleasure to visit the sick, and their declarations, testifying living faith in Jesus Christ, and full assurance of life, proved an edification to many strange visitors. Manne relief afforded to them by that benevolent acob Welsch in Philadelphia, was such, that God an reward him for his great attention and labors of charity among the patients had the favor to be released misery, pain, and distress, by a most happy and salutary blessing. The missionaries express themselves in their report: "We cannot describe the joy and comfort which most of them showed in the sight of seeing their Savior face to face: and we saw amazement in the power of the blood of Jesus in the case of poor sinners." Jacob, an aged Indian and servant of Renatus, then unjustly imprisoned, delivered to his captors. He was one of the first fruits, baptized in 1742. His walk was steady; he was repected by all. all as a father in Christ, and his conduct was always serene and cheerful. The imprisonment of his son greatly affected his mind. He knew his innocence, and was under much concern, lest he should begin to waiver in his faith and to doubt of the fidelity and just judgment of God our Saviour, and perhaps even suffer himself to be subdued by wicked people to drown his distress by drinking. The father therefore induced him in prison; till the Lord took him to himself by means of the small-pox. The Brethren in Philadelphia intended to bury his remains in their burying-ground, but some evil-minded persons filled up the grave in the night; in consequence of which the corpse was interred in the public burying-ground, the missionary Schmick performing the service, according to the Brethren's Liturgy. The other Indian Brethren and Sifters, who died of the small-pox, were buried in the Potter's Field, a burying-ground belonging to the people called Quakers. A week after the death of Jacob, his daughter-in-law, and soon after, her infant son, followed him into eternity. Poor Renatus, upon hearing these tidings, wept most bitterly. "This," said he, "is almost too much to bear; to lose my father, my wife "and child, while I myself am confined in prison!"

In due time, the Lord had mercy upon this afflicted man and graciously delivered him from his bonds. The missionaries visited him frequently, and he spent most of his time in reading an hymn-book, which was left in his cell. After an imprisonment of eight months and many examinations, occasioned by repeated accusations brought against him upon oath, that he was the perfidious and murderer Mr. S. in the Irish settlement, he was at last sent with a guard from Philadelphia to Easton, to take his trial. The witnesses having been unreasoned, the missionary Schmick attended on his part, accompanied by Brother Rothe. The trial took place on the 19th of June, and the jury having been thus put up a whole night, at length brought in their verdict, Not Guilty; upon which he was immediately dismissed. The word of Scripture for that day was: "God meant it unto good, to bring it to pass, as it is this day."
Ch. XVI. in the Barracks at Philadelphia. 229

"say, to save much people alive." Gen. l. 20. This was verified. By the above verdict the adversaries entirely lost their aim, which was to cast a general odium upon the believing Indians, and to render the Brethren's mission universally suspected. The Brethren therefore praised God for this decision, and the court at Easton gained much credit in the opinion of the Indians.

July 4th, our Indians had the satisfaction to see their beloved Renatus return, and join them in the barracks. Having often bemoaned his fate, they could not sufficiently express their thankfulness to God for his deliverance. He spoke of the abundance of his heart, praising and giving glory to the Lord his Redeemer.

In autumn, the confined Indians made another effort to procure their enlargement, and Government granted passports to some of the most steady, with leave to go to the Susquehanna; but could not with prudence extend this permission all. This occasioned a return of the former uneasiness, the minds of some young people, which greatly distressed the missionaries, who at this time labored under various trials. However, according to their own report, they forgot every hardship, as often as they contemplated the unwearied faithfulness and sufferings of the Lord Jesus a our account.

In the mean time the negotiations were continued, and the Complete being reconciled, they compelled the other Indian nations to lay down their arms.

December the 4th, 1764, was the happy day, on which an account of the peace arrived in Philadelphia, and on the 6th, a proclamation was published by Government in all the public papers, that hostilities should cease. Our Indians were soon formed of the conclusion of the war, and their joy on this occasion, which exceeded all description, was manifested in thanksgivings and praises to the Lord, to whom all power is given, both in heaven and on earth.

Soon after, those Indian Brethren, who had been on the Susquehanna, returned with a circumstantial detail of the Q3 miseries.
miseries endured by the Indians during the war, on account of their refusing to take share in it. Joshua said, "We thought ourselves great sufferers here in the barracks, but our sufferings bear no comparison to those of the Indians in the woods, and we now acknowledge, that the Lord most carefully directed our affairs, as our teachers have often told us."

The congregation at Pachgargoch, whose situation was very distressing in the year 1762, was still more oppressed during the war, and at length so much dispersed, that nothing remained, but the hopes, that they might unite again in time of peace.

The troubles of war being nearly at an end, the Brethren in Bethlehem seriously considered, in what manner to provide a settlement for the believing Indians; where they might enjoy more safety. It could not be expected, that they would remain long unmolested in the neighborhood of the white people; they were therefore advised to settle in the Indian country on the banks of the Susquehannah. They resolved to go first to Machwhililung, which had been deserted in the late war, and where the old huts were still standing. The missionaries and Indian assistants therefore applied to Government; the latter directed General Johnson, to assist them in putting this design into execution. To their inexpressible joy, they obtained leave to depart on the 26th of February, and in the following days, preparations were made, Government supplying them liberally with necessaries. Mr. Fox even procured a grant, by which our Indians were to be provided with flour, from their arrival on the Susquehannah, until their new-planted Indian corn should be ripe, and an order was issued, for them to receive it from Fort Allen, hastily built upon the site of Old Gnadenhuetten. This arrangement proved a great convenience to them.

In the mean time the missionary Grube, who left last year with the missionaries to Bethlehem on account of illness, returned to Philadelphia to take leave of his beloved congregation in the barracks. He brought a formal vocation to the missionaries. Schenck Schmick and Zeitberger, to move with the Indian congregation to the Susquehannah, which they gladly accepted, Government also approving of their appointment. March 18th, the Indian Brethren delivered the following address to the governor:

"We, the Christian Indians now residing in the barracks, and intending to return with our wives and children unto our own country, approach unto you, to take our leave, and to return to you our most sincere thanks. We acknowledge with unfeigned gratitude the great kindness and friendship you have shown unto us during the late war. We were indeed in danger of our lives; but you protected and defended us against our enemies, so that we have lived in peace. As a father, you have provided us with food and raiment. You have nursed us in sickness and buried our dead. We have likewise heard with joy, that you will in future give us flour until our corn is ripe. We thank you more particularly that we have been allowed to have our teachers with us, during these heavy trials, who have instructed us daily in the word of God. They have shown us the way to salvation, so that we are now become acquainted with our Creator, and can love all men. We therefore greatly rejoice, that our teachers Schmick and Zeitberger go with us into the Indian country, that they may continue to instruct us in the doctrine of salvation. Your kindness, protection, and benevolence, will never be forgotten by us. We shall bear your goodness in our hearts; we shall speak of it to the other Indians. As long as we live, we shall remain true friends to the English. We also beg permission to requite of you, to give us powder and shot, that we may provide food on the journey. Finally we pray, that God may bless you! We, the underwritten, do this in the name of all our people, remaining your faithful friends,

"JOHN PAPUNHANK; JOSHUA; ANTHONY; SHEM EVANS."

This
This address was graciously received; and the Ministers added their grateful thanks both to the governor Mr. Fox, who as commissary for Government had cast the Indians, from beginning to end, with unwearied attendance. The latter replied with tears, "I have willingly done what I could, knowing their innocence." Joshua went to Mr. Fox, to thank him in the name of all the Indian brethren and sisters, and was well received. March 20 there was no text of the day being. "Abraham rose up early in the morning, and went unto the place, of which God had told him to prepare a place," and with great joy, attended by some friends from the citadel, wished them the Lord's blessing. Their departure was peaceful, and they unanimously rendered praises to God, the heavenly Father, for all the love, grace, and privileges of life, and all the blessings of heaven and earth. They left Bethlehem congregation with great tenderness, and for some time in this place, so much valued by the inhabitants, the daily meetings being held in the usual meeting house to their great comfort.

Every thing being settled for their journey, and having been led to the brethren in Bethlehem, Bishop Nathanael Seidel, with part of the Bethel congregation, went to Nain, to attend a solemn farewell service. The missionary Grube delivered the farewell address, recommending this beloved flock to the faithful Shepherd, who gave his life for his flock, and thus closed his blessed labors among these people, which he had shown an extraordinary degree of faith and courage for the space of thirteen years.

April 3d, the whole congregation broke up and went on their journey, passing through Bethlehem, to the farewell of their former faithful neighbors, so closely united in the bonds of brotherly love. At parting, many tears were shed on both sides. Government had appointed the Ch. XVI. to Macoumbilising.

ing gentlemen to conduct them to the frontiers: Mr. Moore, justice of the peace, Mr. Kuhlin, high-sheriff, Lieutenant Hundfecker, and Mr. Epy, whose names I here insert with gratitude for their kindnecfs and attention to our Indians. Some Brethren from Bethlehem accompanied them likewise part of the way.

Waggons were provided for the children, the sick, and infirm, and for the heavy baggage: but they had a very difficult journey; for though peace was re-established, yet the enmity of many white people against the Indians was still so great, that, to avoid danger, they were obliged to take a long circuit. They also met with stormy weather attended with snow, and were obliged to take up their nights' lodgings chiefly in the woods, every family building an hut and keeping up fires all night. Sometimes they were obliged to stay all night in a swamp, not finding any dry ground near them. Hunting was their chief support. They carried the loads, which were not put in the waggons, over high, steep, and rocky hills, in small parcels, being thus often obliged several times to double the road. In some parts they cut their way for some miles, through the woods and once even for five miles together. The Brethren waded through many brooks and rivers: and for the women and children they made rafts, but the strong current often carried away the trees they had cut down for this purpose, before they could be fixed together, and they once lost twenty-five in this manner. Some rivers were so broad and deep, that they were obliged to encamp on their banks, till they had built canoes sufficient to cross them. The greatest difficulty they met with was the want of provisions, whenever they passed through regions where there was neither game nor fish. Thence, who had something in store, were always willing to distribute. At last their whole stock of flour was consumed, and it was an affecting sight to see them receive their last portion. They were frequently happy to find wild potatoes, the disagreeable flavor of which hunger alone could render palatable. To satisfy the children who cried for hunger, they peeled chestnut chestsnut trees, and made them suck the sweet juice under bark; and even the grown people were obliged to do it. They had frequently no other drink, but muddy water found in puddles. Some died during this journey. Once they were greatly terrified in the night, by the woods being on fire, and burning fiercely all round their encampments from ten till one in the morning. At length they arrived at the Sulquehannah, and got a few boats from Lechawachto to proceed up the river. Some went forward by land to Machwihilusfing, and procured more boats; but yet, for want of a sufficient number, many were obliged to proceed along the banks of the river, and were much fatigued by the flory roads over the hills. But all these trials were forgotten in their daily meetings, in which the presence of the Lord was most sensibly and comfortably felt. These were always held in the evening, around a large fire, in the open air. Thus they spent the Passion Week, in blessed contemplation of the meritorious sufferings of Jesus, and celebrated Easter in joyful commemoration of his resurrection, calling to mind their fellowship with the fifty-six Indian Brethren who departed to the Lord in Philadelphia, looking forward with joy to the time, when they also should arrive in that place, where we shall see Jesus face to face, and praise him in perfect happiness. His presence supported them under all afflictions, insomuch that they never loft their cheerfulness and resignation, and when at last they arrived at Machwihilusfing on the 9th of May, after a journey of five weeks, they forgot all their pain and trouble, for joy that they had reached the place of their future abode.

Thus ended the painful pilgrimage of the Indian congregation, which commenced with their flight from Wechusank and Nain in 1763; and all with one accord declared, that unless God himself had spread his wings over them, they never should have lived to see that day. To Him be all glory!

END OF PART II.
HISTORY OF THE MISSION OF THE UNITED BRETHREN AMONG THE INDIANS IN NORTH AMERICA.

PART III,

CHAPTER I.

1765, 1766.

agreeable Beginning of Friedenshuetten on the Susquehanna. Zeißberger's Journey to Cayuga and Onondaga. The Indian Congregation has rest and is edified.

A mariner rejoices, who after a long and severe storm has reached his desired haven, so likewise did the congregation and her faithful teachers rejoice. They forgot all their former distress, and with offers of e and thanksgiving, devoted themselves anew to Him had given them rest for the soles of their feet. They in their labors with renewed courage, and pitching upon aienent spot on the banks of the Susquehannab, built a lar settlement, which they called Friedenshuetten (Tents Peace). It consisted of thirteen Indian huts and upwards forty houses, built of wood in the European manner, ART III. B covered covered with shingles, and provided with windows and chimneys. A small, but convenient house was erected for the missionaries, and in the middle of the street, which was upwards of eighty feet broad, stood the chapel, neatly built, and covered with shingles. Next to the house the ground was laid out in gardens, and between the settlement and the river, about 250 acres were divided into regular plantations of Indian corn. Each family had their own boat. The burying-ground was situated at some distance, at the back of the buildings.

During the building of Friedenshuetten, the aged, infirm, and children, were lodged in the old cottages found on the spot. The rest dwelt in bark huts, and met for divine worship in the open field, whenever the weather was dry. In rainy weather, the Brethren and Sisternas assembled in small companies, in their huts, to sing and praise the Lord for his mercies. His presence and peace, and the brotherly love and concord which universally prevailed, greatly strengthened them. It was a pleasure to see how judiciously they planned and executed the work of each day. They appeared like a swarm of busy bees: each knew his proper task, and performed it readily. Some were employed in building houses; others in clearing the land; some in hunting and fishing, to provide for those at work; others cared for the housekeeping. The missionaries were not idle, but made their own gardens and plantations.

The stock of bread bought by our Indians their neighbors being soon consumed, a party of forty Brethren set out for Fort Allen, to fetch part of the corn given them by the government of Pennsylvania. But when they had got half way, they were obliged to return, hearing that the white people in the Irish settlement were again exasperated against them; two men having been murdered there, and the Christian Indians being accused of the deed; though it was impossible, that they could have had the least share in it. Herbs and roots, therefore, supplied the place of bread, till intelligence was brought, that Sir William Johnson had set tied a general peace with all the Indian nations, in the name of the king of England. This encouraged the Brethren to set out again. Accordingly almost all the men went to Fort Allen, and soon returned with their corn; praying for blessings on the English government for its liberality towards them. They had received enough to serve them till their own corn was ripe, and God granted so rich an harvest, that they had not even room enough for their store.

The building of Friedenshuetten being so far completed, that the proper regulations and statutes of a Christian settlement could be renewed and established, a meeting was held for this purpose, to the satisfaction of all; and the same regulations made as formerly in Gradenhuetten, Nain, and Wechquetank. As to the internal state of the congregation, it appeared that our Lord Jesus Christ had granted a double portion of his grace to his beloved Indian flock, and would now lay a special blessing upon them. The sensations of his divine presence attending the preaching of the Gospel, the administering of the sacraments, and all the meetings of the congregation, prevailed so powerfully, that the missionaries found frequent cause to exclaim in raptures of joy, “Behold how he loveth them!” (John, xi. 36.) and declare “lighthed to dwell among the children of men.”

October 20th, 1765, the sacrament of Holy Baptism was administered for the first time in Friedenshuetten to the wife of the Indian Sakima. Her declaration on this occasion, gave great pleasure to the missionaries. She said, “I feel very happy after my baptism, but have not yet enough. I now long more than ever for our Savior.” Her husband was present during her baptism, but could scarcely bear to stay for emotion, and immediately went into the woods to give vent to his tears. Upon his return, he saluted his wife, and bursting into tears, said, “O! how do I rejoice that you are cleansed in the blood of Christ. Ah! when shall I have that favor?” Before the close of the year, this grace was also imparted to him. He was baptized on Christmas Day, and such a general emotion was perceptible during his baptism, baptism, that the whole company went together with a missionary and catechumen; thus, without words, express the joy and gratitude of their hearts, in seeing how graciously Jesus receives sinners. Many unbaptized were I powerfully awakened, that they ardently desired the same favor. One of them observed: "If I should see the water for baptism brought into the chapel and hear the mission say, Whoever wishes to be baptized, come hither, I should not hesitate a moment to accept of so great an offer."

John Papunhank, the first Indian baptized at Machwiblungin, was also the first who was here made a partner in the Lord’s Supper, and it became every day more evident that God himself had truly converted him. His last acquaintance, and especially the fame of Friedenshuetten, drew a great number of visitors from all parts, and the missionaries, who in August received Brother Roth as an assistant from Bethlehem, had here the desirable opportunity of extolling the grace of Jesus before great numbers of hearers. Many believed the glad tidings, turned to the Lord and received joy and peace in the Holy Ghost. Some did not immediately comprehend the words of the missionaries, entertained the Indian assistants to repeat the discourse. The assistants most readily complied with their request, as they were more enlivened, by the repetition of the precious words of the Gospel, the truth and power of which they had experienced. Among the visitors were many Indians, belonging to the Cajugui, one of the Six Nations, or Iroquois. These seemed better prepared to receive the kingdom of God, more unrevered, and less entangled with political affairs than the other Iroquois. It was observed with pleasure, that Brother Zeisberger, by repeatedly reminding Onondago, had brought the Brethren and their cause into great esteem among the Iroquois. Once during his absence from Friedenshuetten, the missionary Schmick asked some of the Cajugui Indians, whether they knew Zeisberger? As soon as they heard his name, they expressed much joy, at placing two fingers together, said: "We are one: are ye still..."
Ch. I. Transactions with the Chief of Caujgu.

"ało one with him?" Schmick answered, "We are brethren." They then asked, "Are you one of the brethren of Bethlehem?" Answer: "Yes, they are all my brethren."—"Well," said they, "you must come to us, and build your house in our town." They then went to the chapel, saw and heard what they never before had seen witness to, and were powerfully struck with the gospel of Jesus Christ our Savior.

Besides the stated times for the daily service of the congregation, the missionaries were often called upon to preach the gospel of salvation; for the visitors came into their dwellings, going to hear more of those sweet and comfortable words, and as if they could never be satisfied with hearing, that frequently the missionaries had scarce time to eat or rest.

A reputed forcerer, in the neighborhood of Friedenshuetten, not venturing to enter the chapel, stood before the window to hear the sermon. When it was over, he said to an Indian brother, "I am indeed a very wicked man, and know, that I have committed many sins; yea, I am so loaded with them, that they weigh me down; but if I knew, that Jesus would accept of, and help me, I would nevertheless go to him and pray him to save me." The Indians wishing to live here in peace and safety, soon after their arrival sent a messenger with a string of wampum to the Chief of Caujgu, who as plenipotentiary of the Iroquois, claimed the lordship over all the lands on the Susquehanna, to inform him and his people, that the governor of Pennsylvania had defended them against the rage of the people, and fully provided them with food for a whole year: that with his approbation they had settled on the Quwannah, and pitched on a spot of ground, upon which they intended to build, and with their families to live in peace, if their uncle approved of it. They likewise left for their teachers to live with them, who would teach them the great words of their God and Creator, as they done for many years; adding, that they loved them, and all the Indians, instructing them in the way the loft of their friends in Philadelphia, and infor that peace was now re-established. But the an-to the request of the Indians was unexpec ted; vi the place they had chosen for a settlement was re because all that country had been stained with bl fore he would take them up and place them situation, near the upper end of the Cajugu La in might take their teachers with them, and as to trines, believe and hold what they pleased, and lefted in their daily worship." This proposal to the Cajugu Lake might have been well mean Indians did not approve of it, on account of the deer and other game, without which they could n They there fore postponed giving an immediate an the deputies only gave the Cajugu Chief hope, would reply, when the Indian corn was ripe. He sent the following message to Frieden sluetten in t of 1766: "That he did not know, what fort of Ir they might plant, for they had promised him a when it was ripe: that his Indian corn had been long ago, and was almost consumed, and he tended to plant again; they ought therefore to l promise." As it was evident that our Indians living in Friedensluetten, four deputies were cho that he had seen many Indians baptized by the French in Canada, but never found the least difference between them and the unbaptized. This made the deputies almost afraid to propose their message in council; but Brother Zeilberger encouraged them, by assuring them, that God was present also in this council, and would direct every thing according to His good pleasure.

Of this they were fully convinced, for their message had the desired effect. It was as follows: "That having formerly been ignorant of God, they had now been taught to know Him as their Creator and Redeemer, and had received from Him life and salvation, loving Him above every thing, because He loved them so much. They therefore could and would no more live after the manner of the Indians, but having found their joy and pleasure in our Savior, they had quitted all sinful ways, and now endeavored to walk conformably to the word of God, which they, on that account, must hear often, and therefore met twice a-day to be instructed by their teachers: they also endeavored to preserve their children from evil: they would not go to war; but keep peace with all men, and therefore not meddle with the Indian state-affairs; they could consequently not agree to live near an Indian town, and as Friedenshuetten was well situated, and they had built and planted, they desired to remain there." As the Cajugus and the deputies did not perfectly understand each other's language, and the interpreter of the council found it difficult accurately to translate the message, the council desired the missionary, who spoke both the Cajugu and the Delaware language, to interpret, which he readily did, and then added the following in the name of the white Brethren: "Brother, you have heard the request made by your constituents: you see that their cause is good, and you love what is just. You have received them into your arms, which they consider as a great favor shown to them. I and my brethren are thankful for it; pray now extend your love towards them, and grant their request, that my brethren..."
"in Bethlehem may rejoice with me. You have land enough, therefore give a small piece to your cousins who believe in God, that they may live among you in rest and peace." This and the former speech had such an effect upon the council, that not only their request was granted, but the council gave them a larger tract of land, than they had desired, extending beyond Taogou; telling them, to make use of it as their own, and promising that the heathen Indians should not come and dwell upon it. They were allowed to have their teachers, and exhorted to be obedient to them and finally a resolution was taken, which among the Indians can never be too frequently repeated, on account of many lies being carried to and fro, that neither party should believe any evil report, without due examination.

The deputies were almost beside themselves for joy at this unexpected success, and when the result of the negotiations was mentioned to the congregation, the joy was so general that several exclaimed, "This is the Lord's doing, and a sure proof of his great love towards us!"

These rejoicings were soon disturbed by an Iroquois Indian, from Zeninge, who gave the Indians of Friedenshuett a circumstantial account of a great council held by the Iroquois in Zeninge, at which he pretended to have been present, and in which the Chief of Cayuga was reprimanded for having given land to the Indians of Friedenshuettten without their consent; because he well knew that the said lands had been given to other Indians, who had fled from them during the war; but would return to seek their former dwelling and then become troublesome to the believers: that the Cayuga Chief had said in apology, that he only did it from motives of pity, not being willing to refuse the petition of the deputies; and the time had been too short to communicate with the great council concerning the business.

As the Brethren believed that the Chief in Cayuga had granted their request, with full consent of the council, and yet the account given by the Indian from Zeninge bore the appearance of truth, and bad consequences might follow, it was resolved to send to Cayuga, that they might explain the circumstances more exactly.
Brother Zeiburger went to Bethlehem for advice. The affair appeared to the Brethren of such moment, that they desired him to go to Onondago, to learn the truth, and to renew his covenant of friendship with the Iroquois. The missionary undertook this journey with Brother Gottlob Senfman from Bethlehem, and about the middle of October 1766 they set out from Friedenshuetten for Onondago, with an Indian Brother.

In Zeninge they attempted to speak to the inhabitants, of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, but found no ears to hear. The Chief observed, that though they heard no sermons and knew not God, yet they were the best Indians, and no one could allege any thing against them. However, the Brethren, to their great molestation, found the contrary; for that very day the whole village was drunk to such a degree, that they committed the most shameful excesses.

After enduring many hardships, both by land and water, they arrived, October 26th, at Onondago, where they were well received, and lodged in the same house, in which Brother Zeiburger had formerly resided. At their request the council assembled the very next day, and the English flag was displayed upon the council-house, in honor of the missionaries. Brother Zeiburger's address was heard with great attention. He spoke of the labor of the Brethren among the heathen, their views in preaching the Gospel, of the present state of the Indian congregations, but chiefly of their late transactions with the Chief of Cajjugi; finally requesting the council of the Iroquois explicitly to declare, whether what was settled between them and the Cajjugi Chief, had been done with the knowledge and approbation of the council, or whether the Cajjugi Chief had acted for himself alone. The Chiefs inquired minutely concerning the establishment and constitution of Friedenshuetten, expressing great regard for Brother Zeiburger, whom they considered as belonging to the Iroquois. The letter in return assured them of his affection and regard, but still more of the great love of their Creator and Redeemer towards them. them and all men. According to their custom they refused his message to a future conference, promising an answer.

The Brethren made use of this interval to go to Cajuco. On the road they met a dangerous passage over the outlet of a large lake, which was extremely deep, crossing it upon two slender rafts, which went so much under them, that they went up to their knees in water.

In Cajuco they had a friendly conversation with the above-mentioned Chief, and learnt that the alarming account given by the Indian from Zeribe, was altogether false. They likewise refused many false accusations made by enemies of the Brethren to his entire satisfaction, and then returned without delay to Onxapua. Here they received the following answer of the council, with all the formality and ceremonies usual on such occasions: viz. "That the Cajuco Chief was without doubt their principal, and the guardian of all the lands on the Suquehannah; and that all he had settled with the deputies from Friedenshuetten had the full approbation of the great council; that they were well pleased with the settlement of the believing Indians in Friedenshuetten, where the great council had now a council fire committed to the care of the believing Indians, and which they should consider as a matter of the greatest importance: that they much approved of the white Brethren dwelling as teachers among the Indians on the Suquehannah, to instruct them, which the Delawares stood particularly in need of, it having appeared in the late war, that they were peculiarly given to evil ways, and that the great council wished the constitution and church-service to remain the same at Friedenshuetten, as hitherto." The conclusion of the speech ran thus: "When your Indians, our cousins, have any thing to treat of with us, they shall have full liberty, to come straight to us, and settle their affairs without the interference of any other Chief, who may not be of the same mind with them."

By this deliberate declaration of the council of the Iroquois, the Brethren received for the first time legal permission to have Account of Friedenshuetten.

1 to preach the Gospel in those countries possessed by the Indians. The great council itself seemed to have no inclination at present to receive the Gospel. One of the council, Brother Zeisberger, that lately a minister from New gland came and offered to live among and preach to them; they had refused, saying: "that as soon as they chose; they would let him know: for the present, he might return to his own home." This anecdote was purposely mentioned as an hint, that the Brethren should not attempt carry the Gospel too far into the country belonging to the Quoïs. The missionaries, Zeisberger and Senfesman, received thanks to the Lord, for the success of their negotiations, and the account, given on their return to the congregation at Friedenshuetten, occasioned universal satisfaction and gratitude.

In the year 1766 the inward and outward state of this element was truly blessed, and an extraordinary number of Indian visitors came from all parts. These were not only struck with the exterior regular appearance of the place, desiring that it was the most beautiful and regular Indian village they had ever seen, but they paid great attention to the Gospel, and its power in their hearts was often remarkably evident. Frequently the whole assembly was so moved, at the weeping of the congregation so general and loud, at the missionaries were obliged to stop and give vent to their own tears. Some, who heard the Gospel for the first time, seemed suddenly roused from the sleep of sin, and having mourned over their transgressions and found pardon and peace with Jesus, began, by faith in Him, truly to taste the sweet of the doctrines of the Gospel. This was generally followed by a desire to dwell with the believers. An Indian, for instance, having with his wife spent the Passions and Easter in Friedenshuetten, and speaking together of what they had heard of our Savior and his love to mankind: a woman said, "I never before heard any thing like this; what I then felt I cannot express; but my heart was most tenderly moved." Her husband asked her, "What would you
"you now with to do? I would willingly know it." She answered, "I am glad that you ask me, I have only said "for this; my wish is, to love and believe in our Saviour; "but I should find it difficult without you. I cannot live "here alone; nor can I part with you." He said, "I will "not hinder you; for if I did, and you should be left, I "should bring your guilt upon myself, and I have, alas! sins "enough of my own. God forbid I should do this! We "will rather both beg leave to live here, that we may hear "daily of our Savior, learn to love him, and become happy "people." They then came to the missionaries, related their conversation, and obtained leave to live in Friedens- huette. Her sister expressed her sensations during the rend- ring of the history of our Lord's sufferings, to the following effect: "My heart tells me, that my sins have occasioned "the torments, distresses, wounds, and death of our Saviour. "When I heard that he had suffered all this to redeem me, "a child of hell, from Satan, sin, and eternal death, and "to grant unto me everlasting life, I felt, that I ought to "love and believe on Him, in order to obtain salvation, "for otherwise I should be lost." Another said, "I am "often terrified when I consider, that I have heard the Gos- pel so long, and have not yet attained to saving faith." On these occasions the Indian afflicted were all alive, and in their element. Nothing gave them more joy, than when the conversation of their visitors afforded an opportunity to testify of the truth; the afflicted Joseph, for instance, was one day speaking with the wife of the Delaware Chief, Newlike, concerning the love of our Savior to poor sinners, which he had truly experienced. She answered: "All that "may be true, but I cannot be forgiven, for I have sinned grievously against God." Joseph replied: "You may not "verthelks find forgiveness with our Savior. I formerly "thought as you do, and found it otherwise. Our Savior has "forgiven me many and great sins. He is even now the same "gracious Savior, and has died for your sins also; shedding "his blood upon the cross. As soon as you truly believe "this,"
Account of Friedenbüttel.

s, you will taste his love, and be assured, that he will give all your sins." Another visitor, who had already seen the usual belt of wampom in token of his being a captain, returned it of his own accord, and made a bow in sincere declaration to the assistants: "I am as assured for my salvation; my sins, which are many, lie upon me; sometimes I despairs of all help; but when I heard that our Savior receives the worst of sinners, encouraged me to hope, that even I might be saved. I then yielded to our Savior: 'Have mercy upon me, and let me know that there is grace, even for such a wretch as me.' He heard me, and I saw him as crucified for me; I was comforted that I have wound him with my sins, and this made me weep. I then said, 'Dear Savior! I desire to be sealed and favored by thy wounds, and to be washed from my sins in thy blood. I often thought and felt, that, as truly converted, I should bid farewell to the world; therefore returned the belt of wampom. I do not receive any such honor among the Indians; if I may only sin mercy, receive the forgiveness of my sins, become a child of God and live happy among his people; then I see all my heart can wish for.'

A heathen Indian had asked the assistant Abraham a great question, but none relating to the state of his soul: Abraham said: "I am surprised to see you so desirous to know every thing, and yet not to hear you ask a question. Do you know your Creator? This is one thing needful! Study to know Him, and you will find out many things, of which, as yet, you know nothing of those who, during the troubles of the war, had left the congregation, returned again and were gladly received, especially when they were so hungry and thirsty after ord Iesus and his grace, as one of them declared himself to be, in the following manner: "I am like one plunged in water, and every moment expecting to be drowned. thing can save me, unless our Savior, and his people, pardon Account of Friedenshuetten.

"pardon my past deviations." Among those, who earnestly desired baptism, was a young Nantikok. He said: "I have experienced something remarkable in my mind to-day; I have a great desire to be saved, but, alas! I feel myself a slave of sin and Satan, and it is as if he kept me fast bound, unwilling to quit me, though I strive to get from him; for I am resolved to become the property of our Saviour." Upon another occasion he burst into a flood of tears, and said: "Brethren, have mercy upon me; I am the most wretched creature upon earth; ever since yesterday morning I have felt nothing but sorrow, anxiety, and perplexity. I can find no place, where I can bear my existence. This whole afternoon I have lain like a dead man; I have no strength, and am quite exhausted. Have mercy upon me; O that I were baptized and washed from my sins in the blood of our Saviour; that alone can help and give me rest!"

But as he could not dwell at Friedenshuetten, unless he were baptized, the missionaries could not come to a speedy determination, on account of a strange custom peculiar to the Nantikok tribe (as mentioned in the First Part of this work), viz.: that when a Nantikok dies, the relations come, dig up the corpse, wherever it is buried, cut off the flesh, and carry away the bones. It was however at last impossible any longer to refuse the earnest petition of this Indian, and he became the first fruits of the Nantikok tribe; Brother Zeiberger baptizing him by the name of Samuel.

The great change, obvious in all those, who believed in Jesus and were baptized, was so astonishing to the heathen visitors, that many were obliged to confess, that the words of the Brethren must be true, for otherwise it would be impossible that the mere belief of them, should make them willing and able to deny the world and every ungodly flesh, and at the same time to be so serene and cheerful in the countenances and behavior.

However pleasing and desirable it might be, to behold such undeniable proofs of the power of the Gospel, yet frequent...
Account of Friedenshuettens.

ently occasioned long visits, and as some people of suspicion characters prolonged their abode at Friedenshuettens, the missionaries fearing some painful consequences, especially that the young people might be seduced by it, resolved to make some permanent regulations in regard to visitors. To this end they chose some of the most respected members of the congregation, whom they gave a commission, to meet and speak with all the Indians, especially with those, who wished to be inhabitants of Friedenshuettens, to examine into their situation, and to declare to them with kindness and firmness, all who were not truly desirous to turn unto their Creator Redeemer, should positively not dwell in the place, even pay in it for any considerable time. This was done diligently, and the faithfulness, prudence, and undauntedness, with which these men executed their commission, were very edifying. They had no respect of persons, nor did spare their own kindness, more than strangers. The effects of their zeal were soon visible, and several dangerous people quitted the place, and among them a Native-physician, who had murdered several of his own nation in vile practices, and, as it appeared, still retained the malicious intentions.

Another perplexity arose from the rum trade, which the Indians made frequent attempts to introduce into Friedenshuettens. An order was therefore found necessary, that all strangers' servants should examine these people immediately upon their arrival, to know whether they intended to use the rum at all times, in which case their rum was immediately seized, and not delivered to them till the following morning, unless they proceeded on their journey. Whoever refused to comply with this order, was defined to leave the settlement without delay. These regulations were strictly adhered to.

The white traders gave the most trouble to the settlement, they were not contented with trading in Friedenshuettens, but endeavored to make it a place of common resort. In 1766
Account of Friedenshuetten

1766 a large company of them came from Paxton, with an intent to gain a footing here, stayed several weeks in the place at different times, and occasioned much levity and dissipation among the young people. The missionaries themselves could not interfere, lest they should appear to usurp some kind of jurisdiction over the Indians. They therefore left the whole management of this affair to the Indian assistants, to whom the police was committed, and who at length were so much grieved at the disorders occasioned by these disagreeable guests, that they resolved to oppose it with firmer. They met: accordingly, deposed an interview with the Paxton people, and Anthony declared to them, in the name of his brethren, that for the future they would not suffer Friedenshuetten to be made a rendezvous of traders, nor should they be permitted to have their store-house upon this land, nor to stay above two or three days in the settlement. The traders were enraged at this declaration; but the Indians remaining firm, they were obliged to quit the place. These measures were the more zealously taken, because the Iroquois had already sent several serious remonstrances, desiring that Friedenshuetten might not be made a place of traffic.

In this year a solemn embassy arrived in Friedenshuetten, sent by the Delawarres in Gofchogchouenck on the Ohio, the Delamattennos and Gachpas, for themselves and thirteen other nations. They proceeded by way of Zeninge to Ooscope, and thence home again. Their view was to establish a general peace among all the Indian nations. They therefore invited all "to lay hold of the chain of friendship," and declared all those who refused to do it, to be enemies. Our Indians agreed to it of course, giving them a string of wampum in token and confirmation of their desire to promote and share in the general peace.

Sometimes messengers were sent to acquaint them with the distress and famine prevailing among different nations, who recommended themselves to their generosity; other deputies announced the arrival of large companies, passing through on their travels, desiring victuals and lodging; and the great willingness of the Christian Indians to assist and serve their fellow men to the utmost of their power, was soon spread abroad throughout the country.

Their generosity was frequently followed by want, which they cheerfully bore, as true children of God, not tormented by the cares of this life, but content with little, relying upon daily bread given them by their heavenly Father, who is not forget even the meanest of his creatures. Upon an occasion a poor woman said: "I have been thinking how poor I am: I have nothing of my own; and where shall I get enough for myself and my child?" This made me uneasy, and immediately I prayed thus to our Savior: "Forgive my care and anxiety about outward matters, how thou hast been very poor in this world, and hast not had as much of thine own, as I have." This comforted me, and my heart was satisfied."

Besides the want occasioned by the extraordinary number of visitors, the locusts did very great mischief to the fields and plantations. The missionaries mention their swarms to amount to millions in number.

The chief means by which the Indians provided a livelihood for themselves and their families, was by hunting bears, in, and deer, and catching beavers, foxes, and raccoons. The Brethren were on that account necessitated to go to parts above a day's journey distant from the settlement, missionaries always advised them, not to choose such places, where an unnecessary intercourse with the Indians might lead them astray; several lamentable instances of seduction having made this caution necessary. The article of food was maple sugar, which is described the First Part of this work. The congregation counselled that that employed in this business should keep others as much as possible, as well to be able to assist each other in the work, as to meet sometimes in prayer. Some would not follow this advice, were exposed to danger, were then left without assistance. One of the women ing separated herself from the rest, fixed her hut near the the banks of a river, which unexpectedly overflowing in a might, inundated the whole country to such a degree, the she and her daughter were obliged to take refuge upon the roof, and were almost starved before the waters subsided.

CHAPTER II.
1767, 1768.

Accounts from Friedenshuetten. Brother David Zeiberger's Journey to Gochgoschuenck on the Ohio.
Apprehensions of an Indian War. Hostilities for nately prevented. Brother Zeilberger's second journey to Gochgoschuenck with a view to establish Mission. He finds Entrance in the Beginning, or afterwards violent Opposition.

FRIEDENSHUETTEN increased so fast, and the numbers who attended constantly to hear the Gospel so great, that on January 28, 1767, they began to be a more spacious church, which being completed by 18th of February, was consecrated in the name of G to whom the whole settlement and mission was consecrated, with fervent prayer, that he would blest the preaching the word, and prevent every evil, which might injure cause in this place.
The strange Indians, who constantly attended, were of rious tribes and nations, chiefly Mohawks, Cughugs, C nekes, Tutelas, Delawares, Mahikans, Wampanoag, N tikoks, and Tuscaroras. Many were driven by the far then prevailing, to take refuge in Friedenshuetten; or preferred the road through Friedenshuetten in their to different parts of the Indian country, willing to f Account of Friedenshutten.

so renowned for its hospitality. Thus at one time y-five Tuscaroras from Carolina, and at another fifty-Nantikoks from Maryland came, driven by hunger, tai there some weeks. This proved an opportunity to hear the word of God, and several were on this so far awakened, that they thanked God for the fa-they had suffered, without which they never should one to Friedenshutten, nor heard the Gospel of fal-. This consideration made our Indians always will-feed the hungry, and even to connive at the imposi-if some, who abusing their generosity, ate up their ons, leading an idle and prodigal life, without ever-ing to the word of God.
he mean time enemies were not wanting, in different who were more particularly enraged at the million-believing that they alone occasioned the Christians to separate themselves from the rest, forming as it detached tribe, who would not enter into the cul-ticular to the Indians, and even endeavoring to make professors. The Nantikoks of Zeninge were more larily exasperated, and threatened to kill Brother
, because he had, according to their expression, Indians in his arms, holding them fast, and endeav-grasp more, and thus to rob them of their friends. ripture text for the day, on which he received this ning message, greatly comforted him: "The Lord is der, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me."
ili. 6.
at Whitfuntide the small-pox broke out in Friedenss; the same mode of proceeding was therefore adopted ing the time that the mealties raged in Bethlehem.
patients were immediately conveyed over the river me houses fitted up for that purpose, and properly at-
. The nurses afterwards could not sufficiently thank ife the Lord, for all the proofs of his mercy and own unto them and their patients; for his presence in of them, and for the great consolation afforded unto unto them in meditating upon his precious words in daily meetings.

In autumn 1765, the missionary David Zeisberger set out from Friedenshüetten, on the 30th of September, company with Anthony and John Papunhank, two assistants, the whole congregation uniting in prayer for preservation on this dangerous journey. They passed the Tiangos, a part of the Delaware, and a part of the Seneca country. His intention was to visit Gofchgochuck though he received everywhere a very unfavourable count of the inhabitants. He was however neither intimidated by these reports, nor by the great hardship suffered on the road, a detail of which would hardly be believed by a stranger to that country. They had frequently to cross over plains many miles in length, overgrown with high grass, that a man on horseback was completely covered by it; and when either dew or rain fallen, our travellers were wet through. October 6th, they reached a forsaken Indian town. Brother Zeisberger served with pleasure the first grove of silver fir he had seen in North America, at one of the sources of the Ohio. His Indian companions had never seen these trees before. The further they penetrated, the more horrid wilderness appeared, and it cost them immense labor to work their way through the thicket. Having thus passed four days through a country of so dreadful and uncouth appearance, that the missionary was at a loss to find words to describe it, they met at length the first time with an in the midst of the forest, in which they took up their lodging, having hitherunto spent the nights in the open wrapped up in blankets, and suffering great inconvenience from the continual rains.

Upon their arrival at the first Seneca town, the appearance of a white man was so uncommon a sight to the inhabitants, that one of them immediately set out on horseback... to announce this to the Chief of the next town, near thirty miles off. Brother Zeisberger therefore expected an unusual reception, and indeed upon his arrival he was met and acccepted by the Chief in a very rough manner. His mild behavior however had so much influence upon the Chief's mind, that he conducted him to his own house and invited him to eat. After dinner a conversation of near two hours took place, in which the Chief expressed his astonishment at the missionary's undertaking so considerable a journey, which no white person had ever done before, and desired him fully to explain his views. Brother Zeisberger seized this favorable opportunity to declare the Gospel unto him. The Chief then with great warmth affirmed that this word of God was not intended for the Indians. Among other remarks, he made the following: "If this be true, that the Creator of heaven and earth came into the world, became a man, and suffered so much, I assure you, that the Indians are not in fault, but the white people alone. To them God has given the Bible: but as for the Indians, they are a different creation. To them he has given the beasts of the forest for food, and their employ is to hunt them. They know nothing of the Bible, nor can they learn its contents: these are much too difficult for Indians to comprehend." The missionary answered this and other similar objections with such energy, that he was at length persuaded, became very friendly, and confessed, that he had at first taken Brother Zeisberger for a spy, sent by the white people, and that this was the cause of his first rough address. But being now convinced of the sincerity of his views, he would not prevent his proceeding to Goshogfochen, but would only give him a serious caution, not to trust the inhabitants of that place, who had not their equals in wickedness and thirst for blood. Brother Zeisberger answered: "That if they were really so wicked a people as described, then they would do much the more in need of the Gospel of their Redeemer, but that at all events, he did not fear them, as they could not injure him in the least.
The Gospel preached at Gochgofchuenk. P.H.I.

"without the permission of that God, whom he revered." After this he reached with his companions another town of the Seneca Indians, just as they were celebrating a great feast. Here he was obliged to stay and partake of two sumptuous meals, left them should imagine, that he despised the Indians. He found no opportunity of preaching the Gospel, but prayed the more fervently to the Lord, that He would soon open the eyes of these blind heathen, and grant them to experience a true joy in God their Savior. October 16th, our travellers arrived at Gochgofchuenk; where, to their great surprise, they were well received and lodged in the house of one of John Papunhank's relations.

Gochgofchuenk, a town of the Delawares, consisted of three villages, lying on the banks of the Ohio. The missionary lodged in the middle village, and soon after his arrival, sent his two companions to request of the inhabitants, that they, with their neighbors in the two other villages, would assemble, and hear the "great words" he had to tell them. He was much pleased to find here several persons, who knew him from his first visit at Machwihilusfing in 1653, where they had heard him preach. These people also remembered the outward order, observed in the Brethren's meetings, and now of their own accord, persuaded the men to place themselves on one side, and the women on the other. The missionary then informed them, that the only aim of his coming was, to bring to them also, the great good tidings, by which they might be brought from darkness into light, and obtain communion with God and a full enjoyment of eternal happiness through faith in Jesus Christ.

According to his own account, he felt great cheerfulness in preaching the Gospel for the first time in this wild country, being strengthened in spirit, boldly to declare, that life and salvation is to be found only in the death of our crucified Savior. The Indians, who hear the Gospel for the first time, frequently feel a powerful emotion of heart raised by a sudden joy to new; but as the words and expressions made use of are partly at first unintelligible to them, they always beg for explanation.
frequent repetitions, and thus Anthony and John Papunhank were engaged, till past midnight, in explaining and repeating "the great words" uttered by Brother Zeisberger. This gave them also an opportunity to bear a powerful testimony against all heathenish customs, superstition and infidelity, their own behavior proving the power of the blood of Christ, to deliver us from sin.

The whole town of Goschgochuenk seemed to rejoice at the novelty of this visit. Many, according to the missionary's account, could never hear enough of this great truth, that Christ came into the world to save sinners. They exclaimed frequently during the discourse, "Yes, that is certainly true; that is the only way to happiness!" A blind Chief, called Allemewi, was more powerfully awakened, as also a woman, said to be 120 years old, who, at her request, was carried from the lower to the middle village, to hear the good words of her Creator and Redeemer before she died.

Brother Zeisberger found however that the description given him of the people of Goschgochuenk, by the above-mentioned Senneca Chief, was, alas, too true. He had never yet seen the abominations of heathenism practiced to such a degree. In his report he makes use of these words: "Satan has here great power: he even seems to have cast off his throne in this place, and to be adored by the heathen; working uncontrolled in the children of disobedience." But he was grieved above measure at the abuse of the holy name of God, in the midst of their most shameful and diabolical superstitions. This proceeded from the Indian preachers, described in the First Part of this work, who spoke much of God, and declared, that their most execrable heathenish practices were all done to his glory, and even at his command.

A preacher of this description, called Wangomen, was just then in Goschgochuenk, who frequently told the people, in his public orations, that he was at home in the side of God; walking in and out, so safe and sure, that neither...
The Gospel preached at Goschgechburn. P. III.

fin nor Satan could hurt him in the least; but as to the God whom the missionary preached, and who became a man and died on the cross for us, he knew nothing of him, neither did he acknowledge him to be the true God. The visit of Brother Zeilberger was of course very disagreeable to him. Yet he was always present at the meeting; behaved quietly and with attention, and frequently conversed with the missionary and his companions. It even appeared as if the testimony of the truth had wrought some conviction within him, and made him rather less confident in his endeavor to oppose the Gospel by his preaching. However this proved soon to be otherwise, for when Brother Zeilberger, before his return, assembled all the men and asked them, whether they wished these visits to be repeated, and they unanimously declared their assent, Wangomen alone was silent; and the reft insisting that he should declare his mind, he began a public dispute, and by drawing a figure upon the ground, endeavored to explain, that two ways led to happiness, the way of the Indians being straight, and leading more immediately to God, than that of the white people. The missionary fought with meekness to convince him of his error; but Wangomen became bolder, declaring, that though he had been intimately acquainted with God thec many years, and enjoyed a familiar intercourse with him, he had never known that God had become a man, and fixed his blood that therefore the God whom Brother Zeilberger preached could not be the true God, for otherwise he should have been acquainted with this circumstance. The missionary declared, in the power of the Spirit, that the god whom Wangomen, preached to the Indians, and whose servant was, was no other than the devil, the father of lies. Upon this Wangomen answered in a more moderate tone: "I cannot not understand your doctrine, it is quite new and strange to me." Brother Zeilberger replied: "I will tell you the reason of it: Satan is the prince of darknes, he reigns, all is dark, and he dwells in you: therefore you are so dark, that you can comprehend nothing of God."

wh
Account of Friedenshuetten.

rd. But when you return, and come as a wretchloft sinner to Jesus Christ our Savior, calling for mercy; then it may be, that he will have upon you and deliver you from the power of Satan.
and not before, you will begin to understand some-of God and his word; but now you cannot compre-
. It is not yet too late: the Lord grants you time nt, and if you turn to him, you may yet be saved.
: delay, make haste, and save your poor soul.” Af-spirited address, flowing from a heart, filled with se poor man, Wangomen seemed struck with awe, feeling his misery and ignorance, joined the rest in g another visit. The Indians even met in council, ten being present, resolved to beg the Brethren a missionary to reside among them, and com-their request to Brother Zeilberger. Having de-sveral discourses to them, which were attended by ordinary display of the power and grace of God, rs being shed by his heathen audience, he closed with praise and thanksgiving to God for his mighty ce, and set out on his return. Having with his sons borne much fatigue, famine, and bad weather at cheerfulness, they arrived at Friedenshuetten on of November. The report made of his journey iversal rejoicing in that congregation, and he soon out for Bethlehem to give an account of the situaffairs on the Ohio.

bruary 1708 Friedenshuetten was again disturbed, ve having been received, that a white man had ten Indians from Shomokin, four men, four women, children. Our Indians were exceedingly alarmed, that the Indian nations would soon join to revenge act of cruelty. They were greatly concerned for ition of their teachers, who, as white people, are con-outlaws, and in danger of being sacrificed to the angered savages; for the latter never inquire in s, whether any one be innocent or guilty, but if he have a white skin, they look upon that as a sufficient reason to take his life, to revenge any murder committed by the white people upon an Indian. Our Indians therefore resolved never to suffer the missionaries to be left alone, but to keep strict watch about their persons. In the mean time, this dreadful event was mentioned both to Government and to General Johnson. The former immediately issued proclamations, offering a reward of 200L for the apprehension of the murderer of the ten Indians, promising to punish him with death, and sent this declaration with strings of wampum to all the Indians, living on the Susquehanna, desiring, that they would not break the peace. The same message was sent to Friedenshuetten, and at the express desire of the governor of Pennsylvania communicated to the Indians in public assembly, and then sent forward to other towns. Soon after a special message was sent to our Indians by Sir William Johnson, desiring that if they knew any of the relations of those persons, murdered near Shomokin, they would fend them to him, that he might dry up their tears, comfort their afflicted hearts, and satisfy them respecting all their grievances. The General also invited the Chiefs of the Iroquois and other Indian nations living on the Susquehanna and the Ohio, to an amicable convention. Friedenshuetten was likewise called upon to send delegates, and several neighboring Chiefs insisted upon it. But our Indians had no inclination to go, not wishing to interfere with any political affairs, and knowing from experience that these journeys and negotiations were attended with more harm than good to the souls of the delegations. They therefore gave the Cajuga Chief full commission to appear and treat with the rest in their name. But their verifiables seized this occasion, to molest and perplex the living Indians, pretending that General Johnson and the whole assembly of Chiefs had resolved to consider them enemies, for having refused to send delegates, and to defend them and their settlement. Improbable as this appears, great uneasiness was occasioned in Friedenshuetten, and onary, Brother Schmick, was hardly able to pacify the is of the people. At length their fears were removed, in intelligence being received, that, far from being fectd towards them, the General publicly praised their ufs, and expressed a with that many such Indian towns friedenshuetten might be establishe in the country. The fs of the Iroquois expressed likewise great regard for this ment.

\[ \text{millions} \]
Account of Friedenshuetten.

II.

race and friendship being thus re-establishe between the ifh and Indians, through the benevolent exertions of eral Johnston, and the Iroquois having settled their difs with the Cherokees, all fear of an Indian war vanished, the minds of the people were set at rest. The so-called of the Cherokees was led in solemn pomp through the e country of the Iroquois, accompanied by the Oneida e, and every where received as a friend. They alfo to Friedenshuetten, and the Oneida Chief availed him-of this occasion to declare the great joy which he and whole council at Onondago felt, when they considered, the Indians here learned to know God, and had teachers ling among them, to instruct them in His ways; exhoreour Indians, never to depart from them, but to remain s and faithful. In confirmation of this, he delivered a y of wampum, and the Indians, by another string, lared in reply, that it was their chief desire, to grow y in the knowledge and love of God their Creator and eemer, adding their fervent with, that all the Indian ons might become acquainted with their God and Savior: en peace and benevolence would inallibly reign among n.

The joy felt by the Indians at the restoration of peace was what lefened by an unexpected account, received at time, that the Iroquois had fold all the country eastward he Ohio, in which Friedenshuetten was included, to the ifth. They justly apprehended, that this would give rie new troubles, nor were they mistaken.
In the mean time the Indians at Goschgoschuenk on the Ohio were persuaded by an Indian preacher, living about a day's journey from that place, to send a message to Friedenshuetten. This man hearing of Brother Zeilberger's visit last year, and inquiring minutely into his doctrine, without being able to gain satisfactory information concerning it, expected great concern on that account, adding, that though he was a preacher himself, yet he perceived that his doctrine was not true; that he had heard many other preachers, who likewise did not preach the truth; that this had been revealed to him in a dream, in which somebody appeared, and told him, that they were all false teachers. This made him eager to hear the doctrine of the Brethren, because it might perhaps point out the true way to God. The messengers therefore earnestly desired, that a missionary might visit them again; or rather, according to their former request, come and live at Goschgoschuenk.

During this period a resolution had been taken in Bethlehem, that Brother Zeilberger should go again to Goschgoschuenk, take Brother Gottlob Senteman from Bethlehem, and some Indian families from Friedenshuetten with him, stay there some time and endeavor to establish a regular mission. He and Brother Senteman left Bethlehem in April 1768, and Brother John Ettwein (afterwards consecrated a bishop of the Church of the United Brethren) accompanied them to Friedenshuetten. Here they found the above-mentioned messengers from Goschgoschuenk, who immediately set out with the joyful news, that the Brethren were on the road, and would settle in that place. May 9th, they proceeded with the three Indian Brethren, Anthony, Abraham, and Peter, with their families, partly by water down the rivers Susquehanna, Tiaoqu, and Ohio, and partly over land across the country. But they soon discovered the error in not having previously informed the Iroquois of their journey, and obtained their consent. Near Tiaoqu, a party of twenty captains came up with them, and endeavored to prevent them from coming, but they were not allowed to do so. proceeding to the Ohio, and to compel them to re-But Brother Zeilberger boldly refused to comply, and inform them of the aim of their journey and retold them, he assured them, that every step should be fulfil their duty to the Iroquois, with which the ins at last seemed satisfied. The Cajugu Chief sent a message to Friedenhuetten, to inquire into this affair; but soon after, on visiting that settlement, was paid by the missionaries, who owned their omission, and his pardon. Our travellers proceeded now with good age. Those who went by land, were obliged to pass rh many fires in the forest, which rendered the air ex-early hot, and filled it with smoke and suffocating exha-
. They lost several nights rest, by the dreadful howl-
, and even bold attacks of the wolves, who sometimes rose to near their fires, that they were obliged to drive away by pelting them with firebrands. In general sent well, and after a journey of five weeks, they arrived, 9th, at Goschgochenenk, the inhabitants having sent them, laden with provisions, up the Ohio to meet them.
joy on their arrival seemed general, and they were not surprised, when they were lodged in the house of the mentioned preacher Wangomen, which was large and he having retired with his family into another, y to accommodate his guests.
other Zeilberger did not neglect, immediately upon his here, to send a message to the Cajugu Chief to in-him of the purpose of his journey; and Chief Alle-ent also the following message to the Seneca Chief, ing at Zonefchion, to whom the country in which Gosch-wenk lay, belonged: "Uncle! this is to acquaint you, some of our friends and two white Brethren are ared with us, whom we invited to tell us the great words our God and Creator. You have often sent messages us, admonishing us to lead a good life, and to follow r example. This we have not yet done. But now we resolved to change our lives, and to banish far from Mission at Gofchgochuenk.

"us all heathenish customs; such as feasts, dancing, and drunkenness; and our Brethren, who are now with us, shall instruct us in the word of God."

This indeed was the chief employment of the Brethren. Brother Zeilberger preached every day, held morning and evening meetings, and sung hymns in the Delaware language, which his new audience had never before heard. All these meetings were attended by great numbers, and it was curious to see so many assembled to hear the Gospel, with faces painted black and vermilion, and heads decorated with clusters of feathers and fox tails, which were much in use among the young people. They were very eager and apparently glad to hear the word of reconciliation, and the power of God attending it, enlivened and comforted the missionary.

The Brethren now resolved to build a blockhouse for themselves, that they might preach the Gospel more uninterruptedly. They chose for this purpose a convenient spot, a short distance from the town, and completed the work in a short time, being assisted by the inhabitants and even by the young people. They also planted Indian corn, having received land ready cleared from the inhabitants, who also helped them in planting. The believing Indians, the two above-mentioned messengers sent to Friedenshuetten, and some families from Gofchgochuenken, erected their huts around the missionary's house, thus forming a small village separated from the town. To this a great number referred, and there the Brethren ceased not, by day and night, to teach and preach Jesus, and that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself.

They also found here, that the natural man is not willing to acknowledge himself as wretched as he really is, and nothing was more difficult, than to convince these Indians, that unbelief in Jesus Christ is the greatest sin. One of them aspired the missionary very seriously, that the greatest crime he had ever committed, was his having stolen two sheep and an hen from the white people.
The Gospel having been preached for some time with power, a violent opposition succeeded, which was by occasioned by the malice of the captains, as was discovered by Chief Allemewi. These people, to possess a certain mysterious art, by which they kill any man in a manner unperceived, poison springs rivers, and spread sickness throughout whole villages. They feared that if any of their party were converted, their secret would be disclosed, and thus the whole class of captives be in danger of losing their lives, by the just revenge the populace. Upon their secret instigation there was a number of active adversaries made their appearance, when least expected. The greatest enemies of the missionaries were the old women, who went about, publicly complaining, that the Indian corn was blighted or destroyed by worms; that the deer and other game began to re from the woods; that no chestnuts and bilberries would any more, merely because Brother Zeitberger preached strange doctrine, and the Indians began to alter their manner of living and to believe in God. One in particular, was unusually enraged against him and his doctrine, and, with vehemence, that whoever went to his meetings and believed his words, would be tempted and tormented by Satan, and that therefore all men should carefully avoid the company of the white teacher. The forces appointed sacrifices to appease the wrath of those spirits, were offended by the presence of the Brethren, and red hogs by way of atonement. An Indian, who had baptized in New England, raised scruples in the minds of the hearers, by infusing, that the white people, under the baptised Indians, as he had experienced in England and Friedenshutten. Others spread reports, some New England Indians had been on the other side the great ocean, and brought a letter from the King of England to all the Indians in North America, cautioning them against following or believing the Brethren living at Bethlehem, for that they would lead them straight to Hell.
Others endeavored to terrify the people, by asserting, that as soon as the Brethren had gained sufficient power, and the baptized Indians were superior in number, they would kill all the unbaptized. Soon after, five Indians of the Seneca tribe, who were remarkably wild, dissembling, superstitious, and averse to the Gospel, came to Gofchegofchuenk, one of whom, being a Chief, declared his great displeasure, that the people had suffered white people to settle among them. The Chief in Zonefchio was likewise much enraged, and violently opposed the Brethren's dwelling in Gofchegofchuenk; suspecting, that other white people would soon follow, build a fort, and take possession of the country. He sent therefore the following messages as far as the land of the Shawanofo: "Cousins! I perceive that a man in a black coat, that is, a preacher, is come to you. This man will seduce you, and if you attend to him, he will make you forsake your old customs and manner of living. I advise you not to attend to him, but to send him away. If you do not follow my advice, you may possibly find him soon day lying dead by the way-side." Many secret messages arrived successively from the Iroquois, and it was afterwards discovered, that their import tended alone, to raise suspicions in the minds of the inhabitants against the missionaries, and to urge them either to banish or kill them. These messages had such an effect upon the minds of the people, that the whole town seemed in confusion, and it was presidential, that Chief Allemewi remained a friend and a firm defender of the Gospel. A forcerer was likewise sent from Gekelemukpechuenk, where heathenism and every abomination bore the sway, and every one was in danger of his life, who dared to open his mouth concerning God and his word. This man was commissioned to confound Brother Zeilberger in the presence of all the people, but his aim being frustrated, he retired with shame. An heathen preacher, living at a great distance from Gofchegofchuenk, sent a belt of wampom to Chief Allemewi, threatening that next summer the fun should stand perpendicularly over his head, and burn.
n and destroy all the Indian corn in the land. As these ages were soon noise abroad, the adverbaries became more outrageous, and sometimes so much disturbed the mind of the missionary, that he was obliged to desert from society.

Wangemen, who had hitherto been a silent hearer, and vowed with great kindness to the Brethren, now threw off their masks, going from house to house, and prohibiting the aborigines of Gofchgoschuenk to attend the meetings of Baptized. Several, fearing the reproach of men, stayed away, or came only by night to escape observation. Others went without, hearing in secret, to take, as it were, the mind of God by stealth. Young people were forbidden by their parents to visit the missionaries, and parents would willingly have come, but were prevented by their children.

Some who went boldly to the meetings, were abused, and persecuted in various ways. Some were even driven from their own houses, and took refuge among the Brethren, rough whose interference, they were received and protected. Chief Allemeowi in his own dwelling. Here the words of our Savior were literally fulfilled: "I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law, and a man's foes shall be they of his own household." Matt. x. 35, 36. The missionaries, to use their own expression, seemed to be in a close and pernicious atmosphere; for they saw themselves encompassed with bitter enemies, who wished daily to be away from their lives. Even many of those, who had thrown off all restraint upon their arrival, were so far changed, that they were ready to stone them. Some advised openly, to kill the white people. Others demanded, that not only the missionaries, but all the baptized Indians, should be murdered at once, and thrown into the Ohio; and the friends of the Brethren be afraid of being murdered in the night. Two Indians even entered into a covenant to kill the missionary. One evening several disagreeable visitors made their appearance, at a late hour, with an intent to murder them, but but had not the courage to execute their bloody design. The Brethren therefore thought themselves no longer safe, when alone in their houses, but always kept some of the baptized Indians with them, as a guard; and even these durst not venture twenty or thirty yards from their own houses, without being armed with an hatchet or gun, to keep off malicious people.

Notwithstanding these troubles, the Brethren were resolved not to quit their post, but built a small winter house, as a place of retirement, their large house being seldom free from visitors, where they might have an opportunity of administering the Lord's Supper to their Indian Brethren, and keep other meetings with them. The missionary never omitted preaching the Gospel at the usual time, being firmly resolved, in spite of the rage of Satan, to preach the word of life, in humility and meekness, relying upon the Lord for safety and defence; and to the praise of his holy name it must be owned, that at this trying juncture both he and Brother Senfeman were so peculiarly strengthened in faith, that no trials could conquer their confidence. The greatest harmony subsisted between them and the believing Indians, and they mutually exhorted each other to possess their souls in patience, and in the midst of danger and persecution to prove by their walk and conversation, what spirit they were of.

During these troubles the Brethren were greatly encouraged by an unexpected visit from an Indian woman, who with many tears described the divine effect produced in her by the word of God, and how she had obtained grace to believe, that Jesus Christ was her God and Savior. The above-mentioned blind Chief Allemewi experienced likewise the power of the Gospel in a particular manner, and he now publicly declared that he intended to believe on Jesus and to live unto him. Thus the Brethren saw that their labor was not in vain in the Lord, and covenanted anew, to suffer all things, even death itself, for the sake of Jesus and his Gospel.

It is worthy of remark, that at that very time, when they were daily threatened with death, their serious remonstrances had Mission at Gofchgochuwenk.

However so good an effect on the greater part of the inhabitants, that the rum trade, which had formerly been carried to a great extent at Gofchgochuwenk, was entirely abandoned, and neither Indians nor white people were suffered to ing rum into the town. Had this regulation not been kept, the Brethren would have found it impossible to remain any longer.

The inhabitants of Gofchgochuwenk were at length divided into two parties, one of which opposed the Gospel 'th all their might, and the other was so much attached to it as to declare, that they would rather quit Gofchgochuwenk, build a town in some other place, than be deprived of Light and darkness began now to separate from each other. Those who looked for a Savior, dismissed their fears, attended the meetings publicly and diligently, not fearing the severe weather to prevent them. For this they were exceedingly hated by the opposite party, who called them, Sunday Indians or Shwannaki, that is, white people, most opprobrious name they could invent.

In October 1768, the Brethren Zeisberger and Senefman made a journey of three weeks to the Chief of the Senekas Zonoschigo, an enemy to the Gospel, to give him and the council a just idea of their dwelling and preaching among the Indians on the Ohio. Chief Allemevi, the ad of that part of the inhabitants of Gofchgochuwenk, so favored the Gospel, sent two deputies to accompany them, with the following message: "Uncle! I would let you know, that I have joyfully received the good word of God, brought to me and my people by the Brethren, whom you now before you. I love to hear this precious word of God every day, for it is not enough to hear it once or twice, but I must be daily instructed in it. Gofchgochuwenk however is not a proper place for it; I therefore beg and intreat you, uncle, to take us up, and place us on the Onengeto Venango rivers, where there is convenience and room to build a town and to make plantations, that we may live alone unmolested by savages and and infidels, and be able to receive all those, who in future may with to hear and believe the Gospel.”

All came we sent also messengers, with the same words, to Pakanke, Chief of the Delawares, and to King Beaver, who lived further west. These messages were everywhere well received, even in Zonefchio, and the proposal to the Indians to remove from Gofchgoschuenk to the Venango as also their resolution to believe in God, was much recommended. They were moreover exhorted, to follow and be obedient to the Brethren. But this being merely the opinion of the council in Zonefchio, the unfriendly Chief, whoe at first was indispenably necessary, being absent, the affair remained undetermined, and the tedious and dangerous journey of the Brethren proved in vain.

Chapter III.

1769. 1770.

Beginning of the Mission at Tschchechoschuanink. Pleas- ing Course of the Congregation at Friedenshuetten. Some outward Trouble and Distress. The Miffion- aries are obliged to retire from Gofchgoschuenk.

Among the various places which were visited by the Brethren of Friedenshuetten, was a town about thirty miles higher up the Susquehannah, called Tschchechoschuan- nink, in which a great awakening took place. This was... occasionally by the account given by those who had been at Friedenshuetten, and related with energy what they had seen and heard. At the repeated request of all the inhabitants, the Brethren resolved to send a missionary to reside among them, and Brother John Rothe was appointed to this post. They however thought it prudent, first to send deputies to the Cajugu Chief, and through him to petition the great council at Oneondago, to permit a Brother to live among them as a teacher. This being done accordingly, leave was granted without any difficulty, the Cajugu Chief adding, that now he should frequently go to Tíchechíchequannink, to hear the “great word;” being convinced, that that was the right way to come to God and learn to know him.

February 4th, 1769, Brother Rothe moved thither, and preached the day following to all the inhabitants, who were eager to hear. At their request he regulated morning and evening service, which was numerously attended. The proofs of the grace and power of Jesus Christ, prevailing in these meetings, encouraged him boldly to preach repentance and forgiveness of sins in his name. Those who came with their faces painted and their caps adorned with tinkling bells, were, in a friendly manner, desired by their own countrymen first to wash their faces and take off their bells. In March two Indian auxiliants went thither from Friedenshuetten, to assist the missionary in the instruction of the people, by their edifying walk and conversation. Thus Tíchechíchequannink became as it were a chapel of ease to Friedenshuetten, and as Brother Rothe was not yet ordained, he always went thither with his people to receive the Holy Communion or to attend baptismal transactions.

About half a mile from Tíchechíchequannink the savages used at stated times to keep their feasts of sacrifice. On these occasions they roved about in the neighborhood, like so many evil spirits, making such hideous noises and bellowings, that the air was constantly filled with a roar. But they never approached near enough to molest the inhabitants of Tíchechíchequannink, where the preaching of the Gospel continued uninterrupted.
rupted, and the power of the Spirit of God was manifested to the hearers. A white man, being present at a meeting, and seeing the Indians moved to tears by the words of the Scripture, said to Brother Rothe, "I am baptized, and call myself a Christian, but my heart is far from being touched by the Gospel." Concerning this emotion, which even caused the wildest savages to shed tears, an Indian thus expressed himself: "Whenever I saw a man the tears, I used to doubt his being a man. I would not have wept, if my enemies had even cut the flesh from my bones. So hard was my heart at that time; that I now weep. It is of God, who has softened the hardness of my heart." Brother Rothe had the pleasure to see many similar proofs of the power of the word of God, and it appeared for some time, as if all the people in the town and neighborhood of Tíchechechequannink would turn to the Lord. Some time after an enmity against the Gospel began to show itself. Some said openly, "We cannot live, according to the precepts of the Brethren; if God had intended us to live like them, we should certainly have been born among them." A division like this arose between the Chiefs of the town and the neighboring country, one of whom, called James Davis, became a follower of the Gospel, and on that account was persecuted and reviled by the rest. The forcerers threatened, that if he killed his cattle, then he himself, and soon after the missionary should die. Others were persecuted in the same manner, both by the heathen Chiefs, the forcerers, and by their nearest relations. These troubles however were not able to hinder the progress of the Gospel in Tíchechechequannink, and on the 18th of May, Brother Rothe had the joy to see the Chiefs, James Davis, baptized in Friedenshutten, being the first fruits of Tíchechechequannink. Others were soon partakers of the same grace, and their cheerful countenances and godly walk fully proved the true conversion of their hearts. The baptized converted of their own accord with the heathen visitors, concerning the power of the Gospel, and frequently made made an abiding impression upon them by their energetic and experimental declarations. A strange Indian expressing his desire to believe in Jesus, Samuel exhorted him to consider well what he said; adding, "A man must know what he is about, and whether he intends to devote himself to the Lord for life, or he may become seven times worse than he was before."—"Yes, indeed," replied the heathen, "the devil is very strong."—"But our Savior," returned Samuel, "is much stronger."

The glorious work of God in Friedenshütten, flourished uninterrupted throughout the year 1769. The believers grew evidently in the grace and knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, and a great many of the heathen visitors were awakened from the sleep of sin. Several of these had been robbers and murderers; who now appeared hungry and thirsty after grace in the blood of Jesus, and by their unaffected declarations gave the philanthropists inexpressible satisfaction. One being asked, by Brother Schmick, why he swept so much, and what he wished for? answered, "Alas! I wish to obtain life eternal; my sinful heart longs for our Savior and his cleansing blood. You know, that I have often told you my desire, but to-day I have felt such an eager longing after our Savior in all the meetings, that I know not what to do, for the unfruitfulness of my heart. I cry continually, 'Lord have mercy upon me!' I remember even me, a wretched sinner, forgive me all my sins, and wash me in thy blood: take my heart, bad as it is, my soul and body, and save me." Another spent almost two whole nights in tears. The philanthropist inquiring into the cause of it, he answered: "Well may I weep, when I do not feel our Savior and the power of his blood in my heart! For without this, I am a lost and undone creature; I wish to be saved, and to believe in and love Jesus. I considered what might hinder me. Is it my wife," said I, "or any thing else that is in the way? My heart told me, It is not my wife; if I had no wife, I should be contriving to get one. It must be something else. It is my own bad heart!"
Account of Friedenshuetten and Tjebachschequannis. P. III.

When such poor and needy sinners, weeping for mercy, were afterwards absolved in the name of Jesus, and baptized, their joy, and that of the congregation, was infinitely great. A venerable old man, ninety years of age, was baptized, fell ill, died, and was buried within five days. The whole congregation praying God that he had lived to receive mercy in his old age, and to depart as a reconciled father, in so edifying a manner. Indeed the great difference between the baptized and the heathen was never more striking than on their death-beds.

As to outward matters, the course of the congregation at Friedenshuetten was very edifying. The missionaries rejoiced particularly to see industry, diligence, a desire to learn, and a benevolent behavior towards strangers, become universal. A Chief residing on the Ohio, having heard many good and evil reports concerning Friedenshuetten, came purposely to see the Christian Indians, and to inform himself of the truth. He afterwards said: "I have heard, that strange Indians come to you, you pay no regard to them, and that you are a disdainful set of people. But now I am convinced that this is a falsehood, and therefore I will not believe any evil report of this place."

Whenever any Chiefs came to Friedenshuetten, the missionary, Schmick, used to invite them to dinner, especially the Chiefs of the Iroquois; and being unaccustomed to such hospitable treatment from the generality of the white people, it made a good impression upon their minds, and was of great service to our Indians by removing misapprehensions, and giving the missionaries an opportunity of conversing familiarly with the Chiefs, and of hearing and answering their scruples and remarks. They were very attentive even to the smallest circumstances; for instance, their measuring the fields geometrically made some suspicious, who looked upon this as a mysterious contrivance to secure the land as their own property. The missionary's house and the church being shown to them, some paintings representing the nativity, the passion on Mount Olivet, and the crucifixion, engaged their attention, III. Account of Friedenshuettten and Tschechschequannink. 41

cinion, and gave the missionaries an opportunity briefly relate to them the history of our Lord, which produced some a salutary thoughtfulness. Many became friends and adherers of the Brethren, and were reviled for it. Thus Chief of the Nantikok tribe, a prudent and sensible Indian, so convinced of the truth of the Gospel, and behaving ill to the Brethren, was deprived of his office by his own people, but the Chief in Onondaga reinfurced him with honor. Soon after this he paid a visit in Friedenshuettten, and said: "My people have indeed taken away my belts and rings of wampum; but they were obliged to leave me that understanding, which God has given me; and I may still make use of it, as I please, to do good."

The Brethren now learned with certainty from the Chiefs, that the Iroquois had even sold that spot of ground to the English which they gave to our Indians in the year 1765, thereby thought proper to send some deputies from Friedenshuettten to Philadelphia, to obtain a new grant of land from the Governor of Pennsylvania. His Excellency received them and the petition of the Indians very admiringly and returned them an answer in writing, in which he omitted, that as a quiet and peaceable people, they should not be disturbed in their possessions, and that he had ordered the surveyors not to take up any land within five miles of Friedenshuettten. They therefore should consider reports, of taking away their land, to be without foundation, and if any dared to molest them, he would protect them from satisfaction. But he also expected, that they would behave as they had done hitherto, and not join the chief, who raised disturbances in the country. He sent the favorable message to the converted Indians in Tschechschequannink. However, the confusion and troubles which missionaries had reason to fear, could not be prevented, for they were aware, one or another European came, attending that the governor had either sold or given the land, upon which our Indians lived, to them, and contrary the orders of the governor, the surveyors came to measure... fure the land, and were with difficulty convinced of their error.

Towards autumn our Indians began to feel some outward distress. Their provisions were at an end; and the little they had left, was consumed by visitors and travellers. It was very affecting to see families of five or six children without food, obliged to go ten or more miles from home in quest of bilberries. Happily no one perished with hunger, nor did any one lack his daily bread. They frequently experienced that the Lord liveth, and graciously provides for his people in every time of need: the barrel of meal wasted nor they neither did the crust of oil fail. 1 Kings, xvii. 14.

The Brethren, who had preached the Gospel in Golofschenau had in the year 1769 reason both for joy and sorrow. Six families and three widows remained firm, desiring to know Jesus Christ, and neither contempt nor persecution could shake them. Many savages also became concerned for their salvation, and took refuge among the Brethren. One of them was not content to stay all day, but remained till midnight, relating his course of life; what trouble he had taken to attain happiness, strictly following Wangomen's precepts, offering many sacrifices, and paying him twelve fathom of wampum; but all in vain. He therefore desired to know the true way to God, for he wished to be fixed. Such souls the Brethren received with particular kindness, pointing out to them Jesus Christ as the only way, being short, plain, and easy to find, as soon as a fool is only desirous to obtain forgivenes of sin and to forswear the service of Satan. In February they considered four persons in candidates for baptism.

The powers of darkness however soon exerted themselves with renewed force against this growing million. Wangomen, who had been some time absent on his travels, related on his return with great boldness, that some white people from Virginia having been in Gekelemukpechenek, and heard the Indian preachers with conviction, confessed with tears, that the Indians had the true doctrine, and they would adhere to their faith: for nothing would v in Virginia, and the famine they suffered was a sign to the wrath of God, because they had not the true faith. The Virginians therefore resolved to be converted next to the Indian doctrine. "And now, my friends," aimed Wangomen, "you see plainly that we have the true faith; for even the white people themselves intend to adopt it; why will ye therefore go to the white Brethren, not hear and believe them?" Wangomen appointed like many feasts of sacrifice, to keep the people from attending the meetings of the missionary. His party began now in a very furious manner, and to commit the most heathenish abominations, even in the presence of the Brethren. At length the rum trade was forcibly introduced, to all the repeated remonstrances of the missionary, the Indian assistants, and Chief Allemewi. This the Brethren, the believing Indians considered as a sign, given by the di himself, that they should stay no longer in Gofchuenk, and therefore they began to build boats for their return.

As they were thus employed, a Senneka Chief came with other Chiefs to Gofchuenk, and prohibited the missionary, by a black belt of wampum, which always signifies some evil intentions, to leave the town, till further instructions were received from Onondago. By another firing was added a strict injunction upon all the inhabitants, to refrain from going to hear Brother Zeilberger's sermons, affuring that God would be displeased, if they should forsake their ancient customs and practices and follow the white people.

Upon this occasion brothers Zeilberger stepping boldly ward, withstood the Chief with great confidence, and occasion to bear a powerful testimony of the love of revealed unto man in Christ Jesus our Lord, before the assembly. After this, he and Chief Allemewi proceeded to give an answer to the above-mentioned black firing, they both declared with firmness, that if they were not permitted permitted to go to Venango, they should however certainly quit Gofchgochuenk, and retire fifteen miles further, to a place called Lawunakahannek, situated on the opposite bank of the Ohio.

This they soon after accomplished, and chusing a suitable place in the wilderness, they built a new settlement, where they and the converted Indians might live, with those of the people of Gofchgochuenk, who were awakened, and desired to hear the Gospel without molestation. Their view was not to establish a regular mission-settlement in this place, but only to dwell here for a time, until the present affairs of the Indian mission in general should be more clearly settled.

April 7th, the missionaries and all the converted Indians left Gofchgochuenk, filled with thanks and praises to God for having miraculously preserved them thus far, even in the midst of their enemies. They were accompanied by Alle-mawi and all those who were concerned about their eternal salvation, and assembled that very evening in their new dwelling-place to praise and magnify the name of the Lord, who guideth and protecteth his people in all places by his mighty arm.

Wangomen now gained great ascendancy in Gofchgochuenk, meeting with no resistance. His joy soon got the better of his prudence; he frequently preached in a state of intoxication, and behaved so shamefully, that his hearers were obliged to seize and bind him; and at last became ashamed of their teacher. Yet their enmity to the Brethren continued, and they endeavored to molest them even in Lawunakahannek, inventing threats as coming from the neighboring Chiefs, and omitting no opportunity of showing their animosity. A woman, who had followed the Brethren to Lawunakahannek, went to Gofchgochuenk to buy Indian corn. The person to whom she applied refused her, saying: "I will not sell a grain to the Lawunakahannek men; for you say that whoever believes in God, is happy; but I say, that I am happy, when I have Indian corn enough." Lawunahannek on the Obis. 45

th. You may therefore keep to your faith, worship and suffer hunger; I will continue in my old way, worship and corn and eat my fill.

While Brother Zeisberger persevered in preaching the gospel and his Indian affluents, Anthony and Abraham, his faithful fellow-laborers, the latter made it his province to encourage and edify the newly awakened, unbaptized Indians who lived in the place, exhorting not to flout short in the work of their conversion, but to their whole hearts to Jesus, that by virtue of his death and resurrection, change might be wrought within them; for he had said in some, that though they heard the word of God, they withstood to keep to their corrupt inclinations therein manner of living. He addressed them upon this emphatically, thus: "We lead a life of misery, we have not a single eye towards our Savior, but bend him with only half an heart, and give the other half of the world. On the contrary, if we are wholly his, every thing is made easy. Confide," said he, "what others have done for us: they might live at home in good houses, and here they cannot even get a conven-dwelling, but must fit down among the thieves: they eat, drink, and live well, but here they must put up spoiled Indian corn. All this they undergo, to tell the great words of our Savior, and to show you the way to salvation." Anthony was diligent in attending and conversing with the visitors, who came in numbers from Gofeldt and other places to see Lawunahannek. He endeavored in various ways to serve and edify them, and with the Gospel with great boldness. At the close of one discourse, he observed: "I have not received these in a dream. The Indians may have revelations and in dreams, but I was in my right senses and broad awake, when I felt and experienced the power of the Savior in my heart." This saying made a great impression upon the savages. They said, "If any thing be true, "true, it is this doctrine; surely the Brethren teach the right "way to happiness."

The most distinguished character among the numerous visitors was Glkkikan, an eminent captain and warrior, counselor and speaker of the Delaware Chief in Kaka'kunk. This man came purposefully to dispute with and confound Brother Zeisberger, as he had formerly served the Roman priests in Canada; the Chiefs having appointed him, as the most able speaker, to refute their doctrines. He was likewise a teacher of his people, but never adhered strictly to one opinion, changing his faith, as he received new imprefsions. He afterwards confessed, that before he left Kaka'kunk, he had well considered, what he intended to reply, by way of confounding the Brethren, and came, as he thought, completely armed at all points. When he arrived at Lawnathannek his courage failed, and he resolved to hear the Brethren first, and then to reconsider his reply. Anthony, that active and cheerful witness of Jesus, whose heart continually burned with desire to lead souls to their Savior, b that he often forgot to take food and rest, in attending to this blessed work, invited Glkkikan and the Chiefs, who had come with him from Goshenofshuenek, to be witnesses of the missionary's defeat, to dine with him, after which he addressed them in the following manner: "My friends, listen "to me! I have great things to tell you. God created the "heavens and the earth, and every thing therein, and there "is nothing existing that was not made by him." He then passed for some time, and proceeded: "He also created us "and who is there among you that knows his Creator? A "tell you the truth, no one knows his Creator by his reason; "alone; for we are all fallen from God, and rendered blis-by sin." Here he made a longer pause, to give them time to consider his words, and proceeded: "This God, who "created all things, came into the world, and became a man; "like unto us; only he knew no sin. But why did he comdown from heaven and become a man? Consider this "lible." III. Glithkhan's Conversion.

the." After a long pause he added: "He became a man and took upon him our nature, that he might shed his blood or the remission of our sins, and suffer death on the cross, by which he has purchased for us everlasting life and happy-ness, and delivered us from eternal condemnation." Thus continued to dischose the whole will of God concerning salvation in short sentences, interrupted by pauses for mournful silence. Glithkhan's heart was captivated; he felt a power of this precious word, and confessed before the nec of Goshgoschuens, that all which they had now heard, is true. He then attended the usual daily meeting, and was exceedingly struck by seeing, when full awake, what he termed to have beheld in a vision, several years ago. He had dreamed that he came to a place, where a number of In-ans were assembled in a large room. They wore their hair and had no rings in their noses. In the midst of them, discovered a short white man, and the Indians beckoning him to come in, he entered and was presented by the white man with a book, who directed him to read: on his replying, I cannot read," the white man said: "After you have been with us some time, you will learn to read it." From this time he frequently told his hearers, that there were certainly white people somewhere, who knew the right way to, for he had seen them in a dream. Therefore when he he, and saw the Indians and the short white man, other Zeiiberger, exactly answering to the figure of him he in his dream, he was much astonished. He now fre-cently went to Lawunahlaneck, and converted earnestly the Brethren. He even once reproved the unbaptized ians, who lied there, for the slow progress they made in conversion. "What," said he, "have you heard the word of God upwards of a year, and not one of you believes and is baptized? You are certainly not in earnest about your faith, for such a long time is not required to turn unto the Lord." Upon his return to Kakaftunk, he briefly related the unexpected result of his undertaking, and delivered delivered a noble testimony concerning the Brethren and the labor among the heathen.

Upon this a solemn council was held at Gofchgochus to consider whether they should receive the Gospel? The council was divided in opinion, but contrary to expectation a great majority agreed to receive the word of God. The following answer was therefore returned to the Seneca Chief, who had given them the above-mentioned charge, to hear the words of the Brethren: "Uncle, you brought us words, implying that we are neither to believe the doctrine of the white people. This is not your part, that all our friends in Friedenshuetten received the word of God, and why should we not receive it? We will therefore hear the word of God, for one has full liberty to hear or not to hear it. Whoever has no mind to hear, may stay away. For the Indians are free people, and will never be slaves."

From this time the Brethren were more easily in their mission, a very different spirit seemed to prevail, and an earnest desire after the enjoyment of the grace of our Savior was perceived among the people.

As to their maintenance, the inhabitants of Lawunaknek met with great difficulties in the beginning. The wheat in their new plantations was not yet gathered; the stock of Indian corn was spoiled and half rotten, which ever they ate with thanks. When that was consumed, they could buy no more throughout the whole country. Brethren Zeisberger and Senefman therefore, with Indian Brethren, travelled to Pittsburg in July, and fortunate enough to procure a further supply.

Here they found the people in great confusion, for an Indian war, the treacherous Seneca Indians having stolen upwards of 150 horses, shot above 200 head of cattle, and even murdered some white men, under pretence that they had obtained possession of so much of the land that on that account they could neither rob, nor... them injury enough. This gave rise to an opinion in Pittsburg, that all the Indian nations had broken the articles of peace, and therefore the plantations around this fort were all deserted. Brother Zeisberger, who was better acquainted with the situation of affairs in the Indian country, thought it his duty to apprise the governor and officers in Pittsburg of this circumstance, and they so far attended to his propositions, as to lay aside their resolution of considering and treating all Indians as enemies, and resolved to send delegates to the Chiefs of the other Indian tribes, to complain of the injury done by the Sennekas, and to demand satisfaction. The missionary likewise advised, that an agent of Indian affairs might be again appointed in Pittsburg, who should make himself acquainted with their situation, constitution, and usages, preserve a friendly intercourse, hear their complaints against the white people, refer those of the latter to a court of justice, and endeavor to settle all disputes in an amicable manner. This advice was well received in Pittsburg, and the good effects of it soon became evident. Thus the missionary had the satisfaction to do an essential service to the whole country. He likewise took great pains, in passing through several Indian towns on his return, to pacify the minds of the inhabitants, and to advise them to keep peace. God blessed his endeavors in such a manner, that the principal Chiefs of these places agreed with Allemawi from Lawunakhannek to send deputies to Pittsburg, to assure the English of their good disposition towards them. The deputies were well received, treated asaceable Indians, and returned with a belt of wampum sent by all the Indian nations, by which the Sennekas alone were declared enemies, and the other Indians, friends to the English. But as not only the Sennekas continued to plunder, but the white people broke their word and frequently did injury to the Indians, the disturbances continued, and the negotiations of peace begun at Pittsburg, were suspended. The white brethren at Lawunakhannek having hitherto content to live in an hunting hut, began on the first of December to build a chapel and dwelling-house. They inhabited inhabited it before winter, and consecrated the chapel; a bell which they received from Bethlehem, was hung in convenient place.

Soon after they gathered in their harvest, and had a rich crop, which put the heathen publicly to shame, as had frequently prophesied, that the crops of all those believed in Jesus would fail.

Now that blessed period arrived, so long and so eagerly wished for by the missionaries, when they had the inestimable joy to baptize the firstlings of this country, namely, married couple and their child. This solemnity, which to place on the 3d of December, was attended with so powerful a sensation of the presence of God, and had such an effect upon the other Indians, that the Brethren were richly rewarded for all their toils and afflictions. Brother Zeisger called it, in his report, a festival without its equal. A baptized man was one of the two messengers sent in spring of 1768 to Friedenshutten to invite the Brethren to Gotchgochuenk, and could now not find words failing to express his gratitude to God for the grace bestowed upon him. His wife said afterwards to an Indian fighter, that she felt herself to-day quite a new creature, to what she had been yesterday, and was inexplicable happy: "Yet," added she, "I have done nothing to deserve it."

Several inhabitants of Gotchgochuenk who were at the baptism, proposed that a resolution might be taken in council, that they should all unanimously receive the Gosp. But the missionary represented to them, that this would answer no good purpose; and rather advised, that each should examine his own heart, and know whether he was to be devoted to Jesus Christ or not; as every one might determine this for himself, and had no occasion to ask the consent of the chiefs. Some time after, the blind Chief, Allemewi, desired to be carried to the Missionary's house. He seemed full of grief, and at length burst out in these words: "Brethren! I can bear it no longer; my mind open my mind to you. I have neither eaten nor..." for three days and nights; my heart is full within me, and I have no rest night nor day. I am convinced, that I am a lost sinner, and unless my heart shall soon receive comfort, I must die, for I cannot live so much longer. I am now sick both in soul and body.” He trembled all over, as he uttered these words. He was advised, to resolve without hesitation, to come unto Jesus, weary and heavy laden, for then he would find rest for his soul. At length, after much obstinate op-opposition on the part of his wife and nearest relations, and after many scruples raised in his own mind, he resolved to call himself with all his misery upon the mercy of his Re-dermer. His repeated request to be baptized was also granted on Christmas-day, when he received the name of Solomon; and afterwards could not sufficiently express, what the Lord had done for his soul. He said, “Not only my heart is at ease, but my body is even restored to health; in short, I feel that I am quite another man. I could not have believed, that I should enjoy such happiness.” The holidays were truly days of grace and consolation. Many scoffers were awakened and wept over their forlorn state. Others beggred for baptism, and Brother Zeißberger had the satisfaction to see, even in this country, that no opposition is so fierce, and no enemy so powerful, that may not be overcome by the blood of the Lamb and by perseverance in boldly reaching the word of the Cross.
Friedenshuitten took the greatest share in all these procedings on the river Ohio, and as the prayers of that congregation had been fervently offered up unto God in behalf f Brother Zeißberger and his assistants during their great offerings, so likewise they now offered up thanks and praises unto him for the happy change in their situation. The peaceful rest enjoyed both at Friedenshuitten and Tichechichequaninn were gratefully acknowledged as a singular mercy of God. In both places the preaching of the Gospel was uninterruptedly continued during the year 1770, with power and great blessing, the millionaries being frequently encon-traged in an extraordinary degree, when they saw themselves far-surrounded by such numbers of heathen, and bore witness of the power of that blood, which was shed for them also. The open and sincere declarations of the awakened gave them great comfort, as they plainly proved, how graciously the Holy Spirit labored upon them, to convince them both of their total depravity, and of the necessity of turning for help and mercy to Jesus. An unbaptized Indian said one day with great emotion: "A year is now elapsed, since I first said, "that I would devote myself to our Savior; yet I have not "done it, but deceived him and the Brethren. living in sin, "and having no peace of mind. I now see that I am full of "sin; wherever I look, there is nothing but sin; yea, it pervades my whole body, and unless our Savior has mercy "upon me, I must be lost, for I cannot help myself." An unbaptized Indian begged with great concern, that his dying child might be baptized, adding, "If my child is baptized, "and cleansed in the blood of Jesus Christ, I shall be satisfied,"ed, if it should even die; for then it will go to our Savior."

His request was granted. An Indian woman, 97 years of age, having been baptized by a clergyman of another persuasion, was, at her request, received as a member of the Brethren's congregation, and soon after departed this life rejoicing in God her Savior.

It was a matter of no small joy to observe the power of the Holy Ghost among the young people, for whose use two new spacious school-houses were built at Friedenshuetten. The missionaries considered it as a sufficient reward for all the trouble of instructing them, to see their good and obedient behavior, and their diligence in learning their lessons. Nor was it less pleasing to hear them sing hymns of praise to our Lord and Savior for his incarnation, sufferings, and death, in the Delaware and Mahican languages.

The Iroquois, who, as before mentioned, had deceitfully sold that land to the English, upon which Friedenshuetten was built, and which they had formerly given to the believing Indians, attempted now to unite them with the savage Indians on the Susquehannah, and to remove them altogether into the he neighborhood of Assimfink, where they all should join a building a large town. In this view they sent a message to Friedenahuetten in April 1770, which was rejected by the Christian Indians, who took this occasion to remonstrate with the Iroquois on their treacherous behavior, and without further hesitation, declared their proposal to be void of common sense and honesty. The Iroquois then sent another message to our Indians, with two Spanish dollars, as their share of the money received for the land sold to the English, during them, that Friedenahuetten was expressly excepted and should remain free. But our Indians returned the two dollars, with the following message: “We had no land to sell; it is your land, and the money is likewise yours; take it therefore, for we do not desire to reap the benefit of your labors.” The latter part of their message was left unanswered, our Indians knowing it to be an untruth. The same messages being sent to Tsecheshchequannink, they were answered in the same manner, and the missionaries were glad to perceive, that so little impression was made by them on the minds of the believers. They likewise enjoyed peace and felicity, and the general wishes and exertions of all were directed to this one point, richly to enjoy the salvation of God even in the midst of an heathen country, and by a walk conformable to the precepts of Christ, and a benevolent behavior towards all men, to prove a blessing and edification to the neighboring places.

Though the missionaries continually exhorted our Indians to treat their neighbors with kindness and courtesy, yet they always cautioned them against useless visits in other towns, which were often attended with danger, a melancholy instance of which happened to an Indian Sitter, on the 11th of May, who being on a visit in a neighboring town, was ruck with a tomahawk on the head by a drunken Indian, and killed on the spot.

At Lawunakhannek, the beginning of the year 1770 was distinguished by a gracious visitation of God our Savior. Several heathen, who did not repent the Spirit of God, were added to the fellowship of the believers by holy baptism. A meeting was held with the baptized alone, to remind them of the great grace bestowed upon them, and of the fruits of faith, which were expected in consequence of it. This had a blessed effect, and it was not long before the new baptized became active and zealous in the propagation of the truth. They now visited Gofchgochuenk, their former place of residence, with great boldness, and publicly confessed that they had formerly been slaves of sin, but were now made free through the mercy of God our Savior. This was the topic of their conversation with the visitors, both from Gofchgochuenk and other places, so that there was not an house in Lawunakhanek in which the gospel was not preached. This tended greatly to confirm the public testimony of the missionary, and many a visitor left the place with sentiments, widely different from those, which he brought with him. A strange Indian was conveying a barrel of rum to Gofchgochuenk for sale, but calling at Lawunakhanek by the way, he heard the gospel, was convinced of his unhappy condition without God in the world, resolved to stay with the Brethren and alter his manner of living, and returned the barrel of rum to the trader at Pittsburg, declaring that he would neither drink nor sell any more rum, as it was against his conscience; he therefore begged the trader to take the rum back, adding, that if he refused, he would pour it into the Ohio. The trader and other white people present, were greatly amazed, assured him that this was the first barrel of rum they had ever seen returned by the Indians, and took it back without further objection.
Account of Lawunakhanek.

During this time of grace, they were not without perturbations, though it appeared, as if the enemy had lost his power. One of the savages, who had determined last year to murder the Brethren, could not forget it, but resolved to do it this year in January. The better to accomplish his design, he first got drunk, but losing his way in coming to Lawunakhanek, was overtaken by the night and fell asleep in the woods. In the morning when he awoke sober, he lost his courage and returned. Wangomen also took great pains to prevent the Account of Lawunakhannek.

s from coming to hear the gospel, but now his misrec-tations made no impression upon their minds.
at this time a singular circumstance happened, which led another emigration. Lawunakhannek began to ch troubled by the warriors, who frequently passed
h. The Sennekas having broken the treaty, but made with the Cherokees, murdered several of the The Cherokees therefore caught two Sennekas, cut their fingers, and sent them home with the following:
"We had made a perpetual peace with you, and you us: but the treaty was an abridged conclusion, when you e it again: you had promised us to hold fast the chain friendship, but you have not done it. Now because you not hold the chain of friendship with your hands, we cut them off, and send you herewith a specimen." this, hostilities commenced, and as the Brethren and Indians wished to withdraw from the vicinity of the nd the numbers of those, who moved to Lawunak-t to hear the gospel, increased so fast, that they began at room, they at last resolved to accept of the friendly repeatedly made by the Chiefs in Kaskaskunk, and to n the neighborhood of that town.
 resolution occasioned much joy in Kaskaskunk, especi-Glikkikan; and in Lawunakhannek all hands were ligently employed in building canoes and preparing for nery. But in order to obviate any harm, that might om evil-minded people, who had threatened to hinder y force from quitting the place, or to kill them by the Brethren informed the council at Goshogoshunk ntention. The council sent for them, gave them erty to depart, and begged Brother Zeiiberger to all former injuries and the dangers he had been do to in their town, owning, that at that time a band of ers had sworn to take his life. Brother Zeiiberger gly forgave them, and improved the opportunity, to bear to the great and pardoning love of Jesus Christ, whose he was. The council further resolved, that consider-Brethren had come to them, merely in this good view.
to teach them the word of God, it was but just, that they should not continue in danger of their lives, and to this end they should be adopted members of the Musky tribe of the Delaware nation, and be regularly naturalized, by which they should never be considered as other white people, in time of war with the latter, but be treated as native Delaware. This resolution they ordered to be communicated to the other Chiefs and councils of the Delaware nation, and proposed to appoint an umpire, to watch over the due observance of the peace and covenant established between them and the white Brethren. The missionaries received this offer with thanks, as an event, that might prove beneficial in its consequences.

April 17th, 1770, the congregation of Lawunakhanak broke up, and set out in 16 canoes, passing down the river Ohio by Pittsburg to the mouth of the Beaver Creek, which they entered, and proceeded up to the falls, where they had to unload and transport their goods and canoes by land. One of these carrying places detained them two days. The frequent repetition of this troublesome work caused them to be very thankful when they met Gilikikan with some horses from Kaskaskia for their use.

Thus after a tedious journey, during which they had ever held their daily meetings as often as their situation would permit, refreshing their souls by the comfortable word of God, they at length arrived on the 3d of May in the country where they intended to build their new settlement. The place appointed for them could not have been better chosen, as there was good land sufficient to supply an hundred families. They now informed Pakanke, the head chief in Kaskaskia, and his council, of their arrival. During the formalities usual on such occasions, both Brother Zeilberger, and the Indian deputies, delivered several copious speeches, to give the inhabitants of Kaskaskia, from the very beginning, a just idea of their new neighbors, and Pakanke bid them welcome in the same number of speeches. Captain Gilikikan could no longer bear to live at Kaskaskia, but desired leave to dwell with the Brethren. The latter exhorted him well to confeder, that in so doing he would exchange an honorable office, power and friends, for reproach, contempt and persecution. But his declarations were so firm and sincere, that it was impossible for them to refuse his request.

The Indians were now diligent at work in their plantations, and dwelt in the mean time in bark huts. They also built a large hut for the meetings of the congregation, which were numerously attended by the people from Katkaftunk. The settlement made by the Brethren here, was called Langunto-nuten, or Friedensstadt, the Town of Peace. June 12th, the first baptism was administered in this place, to the wife of the blind chief Solomon, who had formerly opposed her husband with great violence, but afterwards became thoughtful, and anxious to obtain salvation. Glikkikan and others, who had never seen this transaction, were struck with wonder and amazement, and the whole assembly was so powerfully pervaded by the sensation of the presence of God, that the Brethren Zeilberger and Senfner were overcome with joy, and filled with renewed courage, boldly to maintain their post, even under the most grievous oppressions, and gladly to venture their lives in endeavoring to lead souls to Christ.

The Indians in the neighboring country were astonished or rather alarmed to see a people settle among them, so much differing in manners and customs from the heathen, and to hear a doctrine preached, of which they never before had any idea. In some this astonishment was soon changed into displeasure and animosity. Glikkikan's retiring from Kaf-kaftunk to Friedensstadt, occasioned universal dissatisfaction. His friends spared no pains to prevent it by kind persuasions; but finding them useless, they railed most bitterly against him, calling him a sorcerer, by which they even endangered his life. The old Chief, Pakanke, who had always employed him as his speaker, and looked upon him as his right hand, altered his friendly behavior towards the Brethren, and de- nied his having invited them into the country, charging...
Glikkikan with it. He even attacked him publicly, and in great wrath said, "And even you have gone over from this council to them. I suppose you intend to get a white skin? But I tell you, not even one of your feet will turn white, much less your body. Was you not a brave and honored man, sitting next to me in council, when wespread the blanket and considered the belts of wampum lying before us? Now you pretend to despise all this, and think to have found something better. Some time or other you will find yourself deceived." Glikkikan replied briefly thus: "It is very true, I have gone over to them, and with them I will live and die." Though Colonel Croghan, an English officer, exhorted Pakanke not to oppose the Brethren, but to suffer all those Indians, who wished to hear the Gospel, to go to them, adding, that they aimed at nothing, but the real welfare and interest of the Indians; and though Pakanke promised fair, yet he remained an enemy, and many were deterred from coming to Friedensstadt. About this time, a very bad epidemic disease prevailed among the Delawares, which took off great numbers, and was ascribed by the heathens to the power of magic. Many of the Chiefs and counsellors at Gekelemukpecheunk and other places conceived a notion, that they could not remedy this evil in any other way, than by unanimously resolving to receive and believe the word of God. As it was soon known that Pakanke was averse to the cause, the Chief and council of Gekelemukpecheunk sent him a black belt of wampum of a fathom in length, with the following message: "There is a contagion among us: many Indians die, and this evil has lasted some years: we shall all soon be destroyed, unless some help be procured. Convene a council upon this belt. Whoever does not receive this belt shall be considered as an enemy and murderer of his people; and we shall know how to treat him according to his desert." This message being of mysterious import, Pakanke was forced to guess its meaning. But he pretended not to understand it, that it implied, that they should receive the Gospel as the only remedy.
The Brethren found meanwhile, that it would be highly efficacious for the cause of the Gospel, to remove a misunderstanding which prevailed among the heathen to the prejudice of the Christian Indians. They asserted, that as soon as the or changed their mode of living and refused to join in their religion, they likewise withdrew their contributions towards the port of the affairs of the nation, and would no more assist in sustaining the usual quantity of wampum, allowed for the use of the Chiefs. The missionaries therefore took the necessary means to procure a formal declaration from the believing Indians, in all places, to this effect: "That though they ever intended to interfere, either with the affairs of state or with the wars of the savages, yet they were always willing to bear their share of the public burden in times of peace, and to contribute towards the expenses attending all measures adopted for the welfare of the nation, which were not meant to molest either the white people or the adian nations; but upon this positive condition, that the Chiefs, counsellors, and captains of all the different tribes would never claim the least authority over the missionaries, or leave them at full liberty to go where they pleased, was in case of their return to Bethlehem, to fend other brethren in their room." This declaration gave universal satisfaction, was answered by all the Chiefs in very civil terms, and by some, by formal embassies, and prevented all enmity, to which the believing Indians and their chiefs might have otherwise been exposed. At Gochshauenk, Wangomen was appointed deputy, and sent by council with a full and concise answer, couched in the most courteous terms, to Friedensstadt, and thence to Tanke at Kalkalkunk, to inform him and his council of the action of the Brethren into the Montsy tribe, defining him and the message forward to the rest of the Delaware tribes, with their consent to the Iroquois, Delamatteneos, and Wanofo, and to appoint and acknowledge the above-named umpire, appointed to watch over the due observance of the covenant, thus made between the Brethren and the the Indian nations. Wangomen executed all these commissions with much punctuality, and appeared to have laid all mity against the Brethren aside: he was even commissio-by old Pakanke, who also pretended to be reconciled t-them, to go in person to Friedenshuetten, and invite th-believing Indians to come to the neighborhood of Katskakul and build a town for themselves, upon any spot of grove they might choose.

In the mean time our Indians began on the 23d of July build a regular settlement on the west side of the Beaver Creek, erecting block-houses, and working with such perseverance and diligence, that before winter, they and their teacher were safely and conveniently housed. Then the statues of the congregation were made known to the inhabitants, and every thing regulated as in Friedenshuetten.

Oct. 28th, the missionary John George Jungman and his wife arrived from Bethlehem, to have the care of this congregation, and brought a firing of wampom from Colonel Croghan in Pittsburg to Pakanke, deferring him to recieve the missionary and his wife with kindness, as they came merely from benevolent motives to promote the welfare and prosperity of the Indians. This unsolicited kind interference of the Colonel gave much pleasure to our Indians and their teachers, and made a good impression upon Pakanke. Brother Senfeman returned to Bethlehem in November, having been a faithful and useful assistant to Brother Zeitberger, with whom he willingly shared duties and danger.

Both missionaries rejoiced greatly at the gracious visitation of this country by the Lord. The power of the Holy Ghost was remarkably evident during the preaching of the precious Gospel of Christ Jesus, and the heart of one poor sinner after the other was opened, and led to accept of the gracious invitation, which he gives to all that labor and are heavy laden. Glikkikan was so much moved by a discourse delivered in the daily meeting, that he afterwards wept aloud on his way home. The heathen were astonished, II.

Account of Friedensstadt.

...such a noted and valiant captain should weep in the presence of his former acquaintance; but the Brethren praised for such visible proofs, that the word of the crofters can even break and melt the most stubborn and heart of a wild Indian, One of Pakanok's sons, glistened with attention to a sermon, said: "I have lost to all I have now heard, and your words have penetrated into my heart: now I believe that they are true." Baptized Indian said to a visitor: "Whoever will come but for a moment, must plainly see, that the doctrine the Brethren is true; and even though our senses can: rightly comprehend its meaning, yet our hearts feel nothing of its power, as often as we hear it."

any people from distant places, especially from She... came to hear the comfortable Gospel, which encouraged with all their misery to turn to their Redeemer, to Friedensstadt itself, the peace of God, brotherly love, a desire to cleave to and love God our Savior, prevailed powerfully in the congregation. The baptized improved in a Christian walk and conversation, and greatly valued high and heavenly calling. One of them said to a stranger in; "I cannot indeed speak much to you at present, but will give you an opportunity to hear the precious words our Savior, with which the most delicious food in the world is not to be compared for sweetness" and then... him to the chapel. A noted forerunner, who came to fee... Friedensstadt, stood listening to an Indian Sifter, who was declar... the Gospel to some female visitors; and after-said that he had a great inclination to try his legions tricks upon her, and to do her an injury. When... heard this, she said: "I do not fear his threats: for if... one could even take away my life by such practices, I would then go home to our Savior, where I should enjoy such greater happiness, than in this life." The labor of the hour of God was likewise evident in the children, and the perfected praise even out of the mouths of babes, in such manner, that the missionaries were filled with astonishment.

Among
Among the unbaptized and catechumens the awakening was solid and general, and their longing after grace and the remission of sins in the blood of Jesus appeared on all occasions. The missionaries were more particularly rejoiced to see that the above-mentioned Captain, Gliickkan, and a Chief, called Genalkund, who retired with them from Gofchgoschuenen, were the most humble and contrite among all the unbaptized, confessing with great openness their inful and abominable manner of living among the heathen, praying God for mercy and forgiveness as the most undeserv- ing prodigals, and earnestly requesting to be baptized. They both received this favor on the 24th of December, and re- mained living and distinguished examples of that divine truth, that no sinner is so proud and depraved, but he may be thoroughly humbled, changed, and converted to God by that power of the blood of Jesus.

CHAPTER IV.

1771. 1772.

In the spring of 1771, Wangomen came to Friedenshuetten, to deliver the above-mentioned message from the principal Chiefs of the Delaware nations to the Indian congregation, and also to invite them and the congregation in
IV. Vization held by the Brethren Gregor and Lorets.

Tchecschiqueannink to the Alleghene, that is, to the entry on the Ohio. The Chiefs declared, that they would core the believing Indians into their arms as friends, and them to chufe a tract of land, where they might live r as Christians in peace and safety; and that they ring their white teachers with them, who should be red as being of the same color with the Indians.

In particular request of the Chiefs, Brother Zeisberger letter of recommendation to the deputies, affuring the congregation, that this invitation concealed no bad but rather, that the Chiefs, being now truly deirous and their young people might hear the Gospel, on that account alone that Brethren might refuse them: our Indians however mistrusted the contents of stage, and therefore gave the following short answer in answer to the other delegates: "We rejoice, that the our other Chiefs have thought on us with so kind nce. But we are as yet too heavy to rife, and a we have lightened ourselves, we will fend word to Chiefs." Some time after Chief Netawatees in Gen. kepochuenk repeated this invitation in a prefling man nch occasioned our Indians to consider more particu bour it, especially as the Wywendats had likewise in them to move to their land on the Ohio, affuring them, they would not fell the ground under their feet, as the quoins had done.

However no resolution was taken, till the month of May, then Friedenshuetten was visited by the Brethren Christian Gregor and John Lorets, who some time ago arrived from Europe to hold a vization in all the Brethren's settlements in north America. Bishop Nathanael Seidel accompanied them from Bethlehem, a man known and highly respected by many our Indians, who expressed extraordinary joy at their visit. The joy of the two European Brethren was great indeed. hey saw here for the first time a flock of Christian Indians, and could not sufficiently praise and thank God our Savior, for the nious work begun among these nations, supported amidst.
so many and heavy trials, and miraculously preferred, although exposed to so many threatening and imminent dangers.

They devoted their whole time and labor to the service of the two congregations in Friedenshuetten and Tschecchschqueammink, converted with every individual, and delivered several powerful discourses, especially during the Whitsun holidays, the interpreters translating their words with great exactness. They baptized several Indians, visited every family, and both their conversation with individuals, their public ministry and their benevolent behavior, tended to the edification and blessing of all the inhabitants. They likewise examined into every particular relating to the inward and outward state of the mission, and in this view held several conferences with the missionaries and the Indian helpers. The above-mentioned invitation given to our people by the Delawares was also maturely considered, and the conference, with the concurrence of the Indian congregation, came to a resolution, that next autumn some families should remove from hence to Friedensstadt, that some regard might be shown to the message; but as to the emigration of the whole congregation, that should be considered and finally decided in Bethlehem. On the return of these visitors and their company to Bethlehem, the Indians took leave of them with the most cordial expressions of love and gratitude, recommending themselves to the prayers and remembrance of all the Brethren in Europe.

David Zeisberger was soon after called from Friedensstadt to Bethlehem to attend a conference, in which the whole situation of the mission among the Indians was warmly weighed and considered. The Brethren were convinced, that the Indian congregations at Friedenshuetten and Tschecchschqueammink would not be able to maintain themselves long in these places, partly because the Iroquois had fold the lands, and various troublesome demands upon them were continually renewed, partly on account of a contest between the New Englanders and the Indians of Wajomick, by which Friedens nahuetten was much disturbed by occasion of its vi-Besides this, the Sennekas by their bad behavior ur Indians much trouble, the white people being it to suspect the latter as accomplices. One of the powerful arguments in favor of their emigration was has the number of European settlers daily increased, above and below Friedenhuetten, and the rum trade led to seduce the young people. A final resolution was were taken, to advise the Indian congregation, to accept: proposal repeatedly made to them, to remove to the
and to consider it as proceeding from a gracious di-ance of the providence of God.
then Zeisberger upon his return mentioned this advice Indians at Friedenhuetten and Tfchechfoehquannink, xh congregations resolved to remove in the following , and first to go to Friedenshadt. Some families went immediately, in order to lay out plantations of Inorn, both for themselves and the congregations that follow them.
ring these transactions a very painful circumstance hapat Friedenshuetten. Two wicked men, who bore an in-de enmity to John Papunhank, a man of the most unbled character, came and pretended to have received full satisfactory information from the Chiefs at Zeninge and bank, that the said John Papunhank was a dealer in poithat he had been the occasion of the late sudden deaths veral people, and of those epidemic disorders which in the country some time ago. By this wicked lie hole settlement was alarmed, and in a great uproar for 6 week. Some looked upon him as innocent, but the number were scrupulous, and a few were so far mis-the flanderers, that they even joined them and formed y, having little lefs in view, than to take away his life. sionary, Brother Schmick, convinced of John Papun-innocence, took all possible pains to inform and pa-em, but in vain. He then assembled the whole con-tion, and John Papunhank declared publicly, "that he never
"never had any poison in his possession, nor even underfoot the art of mixing it. That as long as he did not love the Lord Jesus, his whole heart was full of wickedness, but that his soul had been washed by the blood of Christ, and his sins pardoned, when he received holy baptism; that since that time, he had belonged to the Lord with soul and body, loving him, and intending to love, serve, and cleave to him all his life." By this free and sincere declaration, the greater number were fully satisfied, but the above-mentioned party were rendered more bitter, and even attacked him in the neighborhood of the settlement, demanding that he should either deriver up his poison or lose his life. He appealed with great calmness and composure to the declaration which he had folemly and publicly given, and walked away quietly, his enemics not daring to execute their wicked design. During this very dangerous period, his heart was filled with confidence, depending upon the sure protection of God. He once said:
"If the Lord permits, that, by these base lies, I lose my life, I shall at once be delivered from all misery, and go to my Savior. I should only pity my wife and child." His wife was however much supported, and like her husband cleaved to our Savior, as the best friend in every time of need, who is also able and willing to save. In order fully to prove his innocence to such, who had been disquieted, he sent two messengers with a belt of wampum to the above-ment-tioned two Chiefs, deferring to know, whether they had ac-cuited him of such abominable practices? They were astonished at the meffage, feemingly declaring their total ignorance of this whole affair, and thus the innocence of John Papunbank was rendered as notorious as the diabolical malice of the calumniators. The latter now thought it most prudent not to be seen by the inhabitants of Friedensuettten, who most sincerely sympathized with the unmerited sufferings of their respected brother. All joined in praising the Lord for this discovery, which put a stop to a most detestable business: but the sorrow over these brethren who had been so grievously misguided by the above seducers was also general.
They indeed acknowledged their transgression, and publicly egged and received the pardon of the congregation; but it as a long time, before they could recover reft and peace of ind. They served as a remarkable example to show what hibious and aggravated crime the fin of calumny is, in eyes of a juft and righteous God.

In the year 1771 the Susquehannah overflowed its banks such a degree, that all the inhabitants of Tschoschequannink were obliged to save themselves in boats, and retire to woods, where they were detained four days. The pains of their deluged plantations coft them much able. But the inward course of the congregation was ifying, and proved often a great blessing both to the un-ized and to the numerous visitors. Nathanael addreffed an than Indian, who was much concerned about his falvaon, to the following effeél: "It is very easy to gain an happy heart, as soon as you sincerely resolve to part with all fin, and believe, what is told you of our Savior: for if you
, you shall receive. But we are naturally averse to huility and prayer, and therefore receive nothing. I was ormerly: but having frequently heard from the Breren, how happy a rambled manner is, I began to pray, nered, until our Savior granted me pardon and appiness. Now fince I am baptized, I think I become lier every day; yea I fonetimes feel as if I saw our avior before my eyes; for I perceive his presence to feibly, that my heart is ready to leap for joy." Samuel ex-elled himself to the following effeél: "I thank our Savior daily, that he has brought me to his children. I fee every day more clearly, how well disposed he was and still is toards me. Many words in the Bible, and also in the hymns, which I heard frequently, but of which I never experienced the power, are now exceeding precious to my soul, and joice that my knowledge of our Savior increases.
Wherever I am, I can feak freely to him. I delight to hold him in spirit as crucified for me, for I feel, that his his sufferings and death are capable to destroy the
"of sin within me."

Such energetic expressions, proceeding from people were lately the most devoted servants of sin, enco-those who were newly awakened, to cry for mercy.
of them confessed with great sorrow and compunction of crimes and transgressions, and the manner in which the scribed their state was truly moving. For infidel heathen Indian, after hearing a sermon, broke out in words: "Alas, what a wretch am I! I have perfec-derstood the words of the missionary, and believe all to be true; but my heart trembled and quaked for I sit in the midst of sin and darkness, and you the light." Another said: "I now for the first time derstand that pride is a wicked thing. I used to that I was not proud, but now I feel that I am: proud man, and my pride has prevented my coming sins, and believing on him with my whole heart." fame person said on another occasion: "Brother, tell you what happened to me. I hit my foot yet against a root, and fell, and feeling myself impati that account, I thought some one was reproving these words: 'Consider thy Savior, how patient There thy Creator stands, beholding the soldiers w digging the hole for his cross; he willingly permits extending his body on the cross, and to pierce his hand feet with the nails.' This was to me an astonishing and I could not sleep all night, so much was I em in contemplating his mercy and love to sinners." a who was very ill, thus addressed the missionary: "One is still wanting: I do not feel that our Savior has a me from my sins in his blood. If I should not receive favor before I die, I shall not go to him, but be et ever, and yet I wish to be saved. I therefore pray fantly to our Savior, that he would have mercy up poor child, and wash me in his precious blood; a *shall not fear death, but rejoice that I shall go and be with him for ever." He was soon after baptized, and received the divine assurance that his sins were forgiven through the merits of our Lord's atonement.

In the mean time many people followed the Brethren from Schagawetuck on the Ohio to the Beaver Creek, some of whom settled in Kaskaskia; others, who showed an earnest wish to be converted, and promised to live in conformity to the rules of the congregation, obtained leave to live at Friedensstäd.

The Brethren were at this time incessantly troubled by the snuff daring lies, propagated by the savages, who even counterfeited letters and messages from the Chiefs to them. In the beginning of the year 1771, a very peremptory message of this kind was brought to Friedensstäd, as coming from the Chief and council at Gekelemuskpeeckuenk; demanding that an Indian woman, lately converted to the truth and baptized by the Brethren, should be sent back immediately, or she should be taken away by force. This message appearing dangerous in its consequences, Brother Zeisberger himself set out on the 5th of March with three Indian Brethren for Gekelemuskpeeckuenk. On the road they experienced great hardships in wading through tracks of deep snow and much water, and did not arrive there until the 13th. They lodged in the house of the head-chief Nata-wounge, where they met with a kind reception, and had soon an opportunity of preaching Jesus and him crucified to the inhabitants, who assembled in great numbers to hear the missionary. Brother Zeisberger then requested a meeting of the council, and read to them the above-mentioned letter. It was then discovered, that neither the Chief nor the council knew any thing of it, but that one of the council fellows present had written it on his own authority, and signed it with two fictitious names. Being thus detected, he was publicly confounded; the whole council expressed great indignation at the contents of the letter, and agreed perfectly with the declaration of the missionary and the Indian Brethren, that as they could and would not detain Indian in their settlement against his will, either by pe sion or force, so no Indian ought to be compelled to them, the Indians being altogether a free people, w all things might act according to their own minds. This, Brother Zeisberger said several days in Gekelmu chuek, and found many attentive hearers, but like many avowed enemies, who, though they dared not li ly to contradict the missionary himself, raged with it derate fury against his Indian attendants and their te in One said to Isaac, "What do you come here for, sprea

PART III. G

ian
"your new doctrines among our people? I have a good to kick you all together out of doors. And even if a "Indians should embrace your doctrine, I certainly v "not." This opposition arose chiefly from the intima of the above-mentioned Indian preachers, who had so nuously recommended emetics, as a sure mode of clea from sin, that, in this town, the practice was general. misionary endeavored to convince the people, that th an emetic might benefit their stomachs, yet it could cleanse their hearts; but that the blood of Jesus Christ Son of God, applied in faith to our sinful souls, was able to cleanse and change them. Having recomme these people in fervent prayer to the mercy of God ou or, he returned with his company to Friedensstadt.
He had scarcely left Gekelmuuchueck, when nowned heathen preacher arrived and spread great os among the people by declaring, that the missionary even known to the white people as a noted foe the Indians, who, whenever he had drawn a large aside, sent them over the great ocean and told them for where they were harneefled to the plough and whippe to their work. By these lying insinuations he gained an ascendancy over the timid minds of the Indians, th soon became the leader of a large party, and the Bre were soon convinced, that to plant the Gospel in the cos to which the congregations at Friedenshuetten and Tfd chequ
Ch. IV. Account of Friedensstadt.

Schequannink were now invited, would be attended with great difficulties. Brother Zeisberger says in one of his letters: “Here God must work a miracle, for Satan has many “strong holds, which he has well fortified.”

In Kalkaskunk the enmity against the Brethren became more general, especially as the lies spread in Ge-kelemukpecuenk, soon found their way thither, and though it afterwards happened, that their author, an Indian preacher, lost his senses, and ran about the woods raving mad, yet the enmity against the Brethren and all who attended their meetings, did not subside in the least.

To this, we may add the dreadful rumours of war, heard about this time; for which several murders, committed by the white people, seemed to hold out sufficient provocation.
Many people were on these accounts led to forfave their dwellings, and to remove to Kalkaskunk and its neighborhood. Thus Friedensstadt was soon surrounded by troops of savages, from whom nothing but disturbance could be expected; which, alas, they too soon experienced. Some, who stayed only a few days at Friedensstadt, proved exceeding troublesome by their drunken and riotous behavior, and even threatened to murder all the inhabitants and destroy the settlement.

Brother Zeisberger, who by this time was well known among various Indian tribes, was a marked object of their hatred and malice, and frequently in danger of being shot.
Some malicious people came one evening very late to Fridensstadt, and would positively compel the inhabitants to go drunk. When they found all their efforts vain, they threatened to murder first the teachers and then the whole congregation, and made such an hideous roar, that the Indian Sisters fled into the woods, and the Brethren were obliged to keep a strong and strict watch around the dwelling of the missionaries.

Notwithstanding all these troubles, the work of God pre-valued and increased in Friedensstadt, and the congregation grew in grace and number. May the 27th, 1771, the found-Account of Friedensfadt.

At the site of the chapel, a foundation stone was laid on the 20th of the building was dedicated to the Lord, with thanksgiving and prayer, as a place, where the Gospel be preached to the poor. The number of converts daily increased; among these, there was one who had lost his scalp in the war, and one of the same party which defied the Brethren's house on the Mahoney in the year 1755. A man was often so moved in hearing the Gospel, that he wept floods of tears. Another visitor expressed a great desire to know, which was the true way to happiness. He said: "Quakers maintain that their doctrine is true, the Church affirms the same of theirs, and the Brethren that the word they preach, is the word of God." Indian assistants told him, if he was truly desirous of being informed, he should come to Jesus, who, though blessed forever, became a man and had been wounded for our transgressions. He would then soon learn to know and receive a certainty in his heart concerning the salvation; but that afterwards it was required, to be dient to his commandments.

After much opposition and hesitation, Chief Pakhitherto an enemy of the Gospel, resolved at last to go to Friedensfadt. He said there several days, heard the Gospel with great attention, changed his sentiments, and exhorted his children to go to the Brethren, hearken to the words, and believe on Jesus.

October 21st, Brother John Heckenwaelder, who appointed assistant missionary, and November 27th, the families expected from Friedenshuette, arrived at Friedensfadt. All rejoiced at the resolution of the congregations to follow them hither, and willingly offered their assistance in making plantations and planting for them.

As the enmity of the greater part of the inhabitants Kasatkunk and other savage neighbors rather increased, the latter encroached more and more upon the border of Friedensfadt, the believing Indians petitioned the C and Council at Kaksakunk for protection, but were told, that their request could not be granted. This was in the beginning of the year 1772. At the same time the Brethren received a kind message from the Chief and council at Gekelemukpechnuenk, inviting them and the two congregations at Friedenshuetten and Tichechichequanninck to come and settle in their country, near the river Mulkingum, upon whatever tracts of land they might chuse. Upon mature consideration, it was found most expedient, that Brother Zeilberger should first take a journey to view the country on the Mulkingum, and there fix upon a spot suitable for a settlement, that he should then consult and settle every thing relating to this affair with the Chiefs at Gekelemukpechnuenk, and soon after remove to the new place with a few families from Friedensstadt, and establish a regular mission there; but that the congregations at Friedenshuetten and Tichechichequanninck should first go and dwell in or near Friedensstadt, until it should be proper for them to move to the Mulkingum.

Brother Zeilberger set out on this expedition on the 11th of March 1772, with a few Indian Brethren, and on the 16th discovered a large tract of land situated not far from the banks of the Mulkingum, about thirty miles from Gekelemukpechnuenk, with a good spring, a small lake, good planting grounds, much game, and every other convenience for the support of an Indian colony. This place was about seventy miles from Lake Erie and seventy-five miles west of Friedensstadt. It appeared, that formerly a large fortified Indian town stood on this spot, some ramparts and the ruins of three Indian forts being still visible. After this discovery he went to Gekelemukpechnuenk, and informed the council that the converted Indians had thankfully accepted of their invitation, desiring that the tract of land, he had just now discovered, might be given to them. In answer to this request he heard with great pleasure, that this was the very spot of ground defined by the Chiefs and council for them. They also determined, in a solemn manner, that all the lands, from the entrance of the Geckelemukpekheunk Creek into the river Muskingum to Tuscarawi should belong to the converted Indians, and that no other Indians should be permitted to settle upon them: further, that all Indians dwelling on the borders of this country, should be directed, to behave peaceably towards them and their teachers, and neither disturb their worship, nor prevent people from going to them to hear the word of God.
Building of Schoenbrunn.

Zeibeger praised the Lord for his gracious help in the execution of this important commissiorn, and having again visited the above-mentioned country, took possession of it in the name of the Christian Indians, who were uncommonly rejoiced by the account of his success, given on his return from Friedenstadt.

Five families, consisting in all of twenty-eight persons, were now appointed to begin the new settlement, and were willing to undertake it. Brother Zeibeger set out with them on the 14th of April, and after a safe but tedious journey arrived May 3d at the new land on the Muskingum. The day following they marked out their plantations, enclosed field-huts, and were all diligently employed in clearing and planting.

Upon the news of the arrival of the Brethren in Geckelmukpekheunk and its neighborhood, the enemies of the Gospel were so much alarmed that many of them left the place, not being able to bear a doctrine, so directly opposite to their heathenish abominations and sinful manner of living. A neighboring chief even forsook his village, and with all his people moved into a distant country.

Brother Zeibeger began immediately to preach the Gospel in this new settlement, to which he gave the name of Schoen-brunn (the Beautiful Spring). Many attentive hearers came from Geckelemukpekheunk and its neighborhood, and some were so captivated by the word of the Gospel, that before any hovels could be built, they earnestly begged leave to stay and settle. This was granted, but their relations soon came and wanted to take them away by force. By this opportunity IV. Account of Friedenshuetten and Tschechischquannink. 75

unity however, they likewise heard the Gospel, and felt power of the word of God so forcibly, that they went y with impressions, very different to those they brought them. A visitor declared, that he had been seeking the to salvation many years, and that whenever he found Isa a who appeared to know more than himself, he gave n presents, and belts of wampom, hoping that they ld instruct him, yet hitherto he had not been able to n with certainty, how he might be saved. The af nts told him, that he now might find what he had ong been seeking in vain: nor need he bring any pre s, for they would instruct him for nothing. Another to Isaac Glikkikan, "You were a captain, before you be ved the Gospel, and you are a captain still. This you not deny, but how was it possible for you to remain a ptain, after you believed?" — "True," answered Isaac, was formerly a captain, but I was always conquered. Sin ways overcame me; and yet a brave captain ought never be overcome, but should come off victorious. Though I sequently resolved not to get drunk, I could not leave it off, it was obliged to be a slave of the devil. But now I flt now what it is to be a brave soldier, and through Christ I n always overcome: sin has lost its former power to force into its service, for now I desire no more to attend any your feasts; I have no relict for them, having found nothing far better, which I wish to see you likewise in offer of." June 27th, the Brethren in Schoenbrunn ook of the Holy Communion for the first time there, and th the site of the new settlement was chosen and marked n the mean time the congregations in Friedenshuetten Tschechischquannink prepared for their emigration. : Chiefs of the Iroquois were much displeased when they rd it, and now endeavored to make our Indians forget treachery, by giving them fair words and promises, aring in their own style, "that they would in future be ly one body and one vein with the Indians on the Sul-Account of Friedensbuettten and Tschochseguannia. P. III.

"quehannah, and remove every former grievance, in order to prevent that from taking place, of which they had heard as "little bird speak." But our Indians answered, that they came too late, informing them of their resolution to go the country on the Ohio. At this they expressed much sorrow, but assured the believing Indians that they would remain their friends. Our Indians promised the same on their part. The internal course of the congregations in both places was at that time very pleasing and edifying. The children were not only remarkably diligent in their schools, but also expressed great love to our Savior, frequently meeting of their own accord to sing his praises. Most of the believers were intent upon being so minded in all things, as Jesus Christ was when on earth, and sought to walk in his steps. A brother said one day to the missionary: "I cannot express what I feel, when I meditate upon our Savior, as a little child, or as a boy, when fitting among the doctors in the temple; as a teacher, or as laboring hard for our salvation, and dying on the cross. All is important to one, and when I consider these things, I perceive a peculiar emotion within me."

As the damage sustained by our Indians in quitting Friedensbuettten was very great, and it could be proved, that they were compelled by the sale of their land to take this step, the Brethren applied to the governor at Philadelphia for relief, which, some time after, was in part granted. Previous to this emigration, the missionary, Brother Schmick, who had spent many years in the service of the Indian congregation, with unremitting faithfulness, obtained leave to return to Bethlehem to rest some time from his labors. May 5th, he and his wife took an affectionate leave of their beloved congregation, and soon after set out for Bethlehem. The missionary John Rothe and his wife were appointed to attend the Indians on their journey, and accepted of this call with pleasure.

May 23d, Brother Ettwein arrived from Bethlehem at Friedensbuettten to accompany that congregation on their IV. Emigration from Friedenshuetten, &c.

to Friedensstadt, and brought several presents from the thren in Bethlehem to the Indians, which were useful to " ne 6th, the congregation partook of the Holy Commufor the last time in Friedenshuetten, and celebrated nent, when John Papunhank, who was first that had been baptized here, had the satisfaction to the last baptism in this place administered to his daughter, the great joy of the whole congregation. June 11th, all us ready for the journey, the congregation met for the last e at Friedenshuetten, when the missionary reminded them he great favors and blessings, received from God in this x, and then offered up praises and thanksgivings to him, h fervent supplications for his peace and protection on the nary. The company consisted of two hundred and forty-persons from Friedenshuetten and Tschechochoannink, proceeded with great cheerfulness in reliance upon the d. other Etwein conducted those who went by land, and ther Rothe those by water, who were the greater num-The tediousness of this journey was a practical sol of patience for the missionaries. The fatigue also ating the emigration of a whole congregation, with all goods and cattle, in a country like North America, hardly be conceived by any one, who has not ex-encoded it, much less can it be described in a proper man-
The land-travellers had seventy head of oxen, and a greater number of horses to care for, and sustained inlible hardships in forcing a way for themselves and their through very thick woods and swamps of great extent, directed only by a small path, and that hardly dis-ible in some places, so that it appears almost impossible conceive how one man could work his way and mark a through such close thickets and immense woods, one which he computed to be about sixty miles in length. appended, that when they were thus rather creeping than ing through the thick woods, it rained almost incessantly. In
In one part of the country they were obliged to wade thirty-six times through the windings of the river Munsey, besides suffering other hardships. However, they attended to their daily worship as regularly as circumstances would permit, and had frequently strangers among them, both Indians and white people; who were particularly attentive to the English discourses delivered by Brother Ettwein. This circumstance alone was sufficient to comfort the Brethren amid all their fatigue and trouble, as they had no greater satisfaction than, when opportunities offered, to tell their fellow-men from the experience of their own hearts, how happy that man is, who believes in Jesus, and receives power from him, to become a child of God. The party which went by water were every night obliged to seek a lodging on shore, and suffered much from the cold. Soon after their departure from Friedenshuetten the measles broke out among them, and many fell sick, especially the children. The attention due to the patients necessitated increased the fatigue of the journey. In some parts they were molested by inquisitive, and in others by drunken people. The many falls and dangerous rapids in the Susquehannack occasioned immense trouble and frequent delays. However, by the mercy of God they passed safe by Shomokin, and then, upon the west arm of the river by Long Island to Great Island, where they joined the land-travellers on the 20th of June, and now proceeded all together by land. When they arrived at the mountains they met with great difficulties in crossing them, for not having horses enough to carry all the baggage, most of them were obliged to carry some part. In one of the valleys they were suddenly caught in a most tremendous storm of thunder and lightning with violent rain. During a considerable part of the journey, the rattlesnakes kept them in constant alarm. As they lay in great numbers either near or in the road, Brother Ettwein happened to tread upon one with fifteen rattles, by which he was so frightened, that, according to his own account, he could hardly venture to step forward for many days after, and every rustling leaf made him dread the approach of a rattlesnake. These venomous creatures tures destroyed several of the horses by their bite, but oxen were faved by being driven in the rear.
the most troublesome plague both to man and beast, essily in passing through the woods, was a kind of infect, d by the Indians Ponk, or Living After, from their being nall that they are hardly visible, and their bite as painful se burning of red-hot ashes. As soon as the evening were kindled, the cattle, in order to get rid of these in-ran furiously towards the fire, crowding into the ke; by which our travellers were much disturbed both in sleep and at meals. These tormenting creatures were with in the gueatst numbers in a tract of country, which Indians call "a place avoided by all men." The following instance gave rise to this name: About thirty years ago Indian affecting the manner of an hermit, lived upon a in this neighborhood, and used to appear to travellers hunters in different garbs, frightening some, and mur-ging others. At length a valiant Indian Chief was so forse as to surprize and kill him. To this true account, ous report has added, that the Chief having burnt the it's bones to ashes, scattered them in the air throughout forest; that they then took a living form, and became
. In another part of the forest, the fires and storms had such confusion among the trees, that the wood was impenetrable. Brother Etwein was once in great er of his life by a fall from his horse. Sister Rothe her child fell several times from her horse, and once her foot dangerously entangled in the stirrup. Another she fell into a deep morass.
twelve persons departed this life during the journey, and ng them a poor cripple, about ten or eleven years old, was carried by his mother in a basket on her back. When received his end approaching, he begged most earnestly baptized. His request was granted, soon after which led a life of misery, and departed rejoicing. Our tra-rs were sometimes under the necessity of staying a day or in one place, to supply themselves with the necessaries of of life. They shot upwards of one hundred and fifty doz during the course of the journey, and found great abundance of fish in the rivers and brooks. They likewise met with a peculiar kind of turtle, about the size of a goose, with a long neck, pointed head, and eyes like a dove. It had scales on its back, and on the lower part of the belly. All the rest of its covering was soft, resembling leather of a liver color.

July 20th, they left the mountains and arrived on the banks of the Ohio, where they immediately built canoes, to feed the aged and infirm with the heavy baggage down the river.
Two days after they were met by Brother Heckenwalder and some Indian Brethren with horses from Friedensstadt, by whose assistance they arrived there on the 5th of August, and were received with every mark of affection by the whole congregation. They now joined in praising and thanking the Lord for the grace and protection, received from him during this tedious journey of eight weeks, for having supported them under the unusual fatigue and hardships attending it, for giving them health and strength to bear many grievous trials, and for preferring them from famine, which they feared most at setting out, and from innumerable dangers and unforeseen accidents, and chiefly for granting them to continue in love and peace.

The preservation of the Indian congregation by God our heavenly Father, was at this time most admirably displayed, and the missionaries acknowledged with humility and gratitude, that neither the inhabitants of Friedensstadt nor their numerous guests lacked anything, but, contrary to the apprehensions of a great many, had enough and to spare.

The travellers received likewise a present of one hundred Spanish dollars from the friends, commonly called Quakers in Philadelphia, with which they provided a supply of bread for future necessity.

Soon after their arrival in Friedensstadt, Brother Zei-berger came from Schoenbrunn, and several conferences were held concerning the mission in general. The missionaries and their Indian assistants were also employed in revising all the trav-Account of Schoenbrunn.

v.

A conference of Indian affairs was likewise appointed for each settlement. On the 19th, the Brethren Etwen, Zeitberger, and Hecks-cider went to Schoenbrunn, where they arrived on the 24th. The former, in his report, expressed great pleasure in the country so pleasing in every point of view, and so richly endowed with walnut and locust trees; but still more in being the new settlement Schoenbrunn, begun under such able and promising circumstances. Brother Zeitberger, taken ill, Brother Etwen went with the deputies, appointed by the Indian Brethren, to Geckelmenpekchuenk, to renew assurances of protection from the council. The inhabitants of this place had just received seventy gallons of rum, and were engaged in a drunken frolic, when the news of the missionary and the deputies came to the town. At once, he immediately gave orders to dismiss them, and after they gained their sobriety by a sound sleep, called a council, in the deputies mentioned the arrival of the two consuls of Friedenshuetten and Tschechschequannink in a solemn manner; informing them that they intended to build one or perhaps two settlements besides Schoenbrunn. The speaker of the assembly, John Papunhuk, took advantage of the occasion to give the council a full explanation of the sects, constitution, doctrine, and worship of the confederations of the Indians. He did this in a solemn and manly style, reviewing how he had lived formerly, and how God had shown him. The answer was kind, and a promise given that another assembly should be sent to Schoenbrunn. Schoenbrunn the Brethren Etwen and Zeitberger rejoiced at the marvellous dispensation of God over the inhabitants of the country, being the neighborhood of the Shawanos and Hurons. Etwen then returned to Bethlehem, by way of mistah, with the most pleasing prospects for futurity. Some Building of Gnadenhütten on the Muskingum. P.

Some time after a great part of the Indian congregation went from Friedensstadt to the Muskingum, and built a settlement about ten miles below Schoenbrunn, which they called Gnadenhütten.

During the building of these two places, which was conducted with great cheerfulness, Brother Zeisberger with the Indian Brethren made the first journey into the country the Shawano, who were generally considered as the most savage among the Indian nations. In the first village, they called at the house of a son of the before-mentioned Ch Paxnous. (See Part II. p. 157.) Here they were kindly received, and their host paid great attention to the Gospel, declining afterwards, that he was convinced, that the missionary doctrine was true, pointing out the right road to salvation that the Shawano had been long striving to find, the way of life, but that they must own with regret, that all their labors and researches had been in vain, that they had therefore lost all courage, not knowing what they should further do to obtain happiness. This man spoke the Delaware language fluently, and it was therefore very agreeable and useful to the Brethren, that he offered to accompany them through the different towns which they intended to visit. When they came to the chief town of the Shawano, I advised them to take up their abode with the heathen teachers as his influence among the people was very great. The man received the Brethren very civilly, and when upon his inquiry into the aim of their visit, Brother Zeisberger answered, that he brought him the words of eternal life, he replied: "This is what we want, and we will hear you with pleasure." An house was immediately fitted up, and both the missionary and his Indian companions found here a desirable opportunity to make known to a great number of attentive hearers, most of whom understood the Delaware language, that God hath no pleasure in the death of the wicked but that the wicked turn from his ways, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and live. The heathen teacher listened in silence to this precious word for some days, but at length, not abjuring his heathen beliefs, he decided not to continue the missionary work in that place.
Ch. IV. Brother Zeisberger visits the Shawanoes.

83

to contain the emotions of his heart, he made the following declaration to the missionary: "I have not been able to sleep all night, for I am continually meditating upon your words, and will now open to you my whole heart: I believe that all you preach is truth. A year ago I became convinced that we are altogether sinful creatures; and that none of our good works will save us: but we did not know what to do, to gain eternal salvation. I have therefore always comforted my people, that somebody would come and show us the true way to happiness, for we are not in the right way, and even the day before your arrival, I desired them to have but a little patience, and that a teacher would certainly come. Now you are come, and I verily believe, that God has sent you to make his word known to us."

The Brethren having thus preached Jesus Christ as the light of the world in this benighted country with great charulness, and being upon the point of taking leave, Brother Zeisberger and his company received the following message from the Chiefs and council, the Indian teacher being speaker: "Brother, we rejoice that you have been with us, and brought the word of God, which we have heard with pleasure. We tend to let you know, what we have unanimously resolved upon in council. The women indeed were not present, being now engaged in gathering in their crops, but that does not signify, for what we agree to, that we know will be also agreeable to them. We have therefore resolved, that from this time, we will receive the word of God, and live in conformity to it. This we speak not with our mouths only, but also with our hearts. We therefore desire and pray, that not only believing Indians, but also white teachers would dwell among us, that they may teach us how to be saved. We lay this request before you, and though we are a bad people, do not defile us, but grant our petition." The missionary was astonished at a message of such import, from a town of the Shawanoes, and promised with pleasure, to mention their request to his brethren at Bethlehem, be defined them maturely to consider, whether they were is earnest, in willing to live conformably to the dictates of the Gospel; adding, that if a missionary should come and reside among them, the heathen manner of living must be entirely abandoned, with all ceremonies belonging to it. They declared not only their willingness to part with all things in preference to the Gospel, but assured him, that they would build a new town, where only those should reside who had resolved to believe in God. Zeisberger then inquired of them, whether they might take such a step, without consulting the other Chiefs of the Shawanofo tribe, and their grandfather the Delaware nation? But they affirmed, that having long fought the way to eternal life, they had already separated themselves both from the above-mentioned Chiefs and from the Delawares, and were perfectly independent.

Brother Zeisberger returned with his company to Schoenbrunn, highly pleased with the success of his journey. Both here, at Gnadenhuetten, and at Friedenslaadt, the Christmas-holidays were celebrated with particular blessing, and young and old were filled with joy, in the contemplation of the meritorious incarnation of God our Savior. Among the numerous visitors was another of those savages who had murdered our Brethren and Sifters on the Mahony, November 24, 1755. He stayed a week at Schoenbrunn, heard the word of Christ our Redeemer with attention, and was told, that all who come to him by faith, will be received and not cast out. An Indian assistant closed his conversation with another键入visitor in the following manner: "Why should we not believe? for the word which is here preached, proves itself to be truth within us." Another added, "That is certainly true; for as soon as I sought the Lord with my whole heart, I found him, and what is ever I asked of him, he gave unto me; so that I increased in happiness, and my heart burns sometimes like a flame for love towards him." A visitor said: "Here we have only heard, but now I believe, that my Creator is..." ame a man and shed his blood for me. I now desire to be canned by that blood, for I cannot live without it." A d about ten years of age, having spent a whole night in a, was asked whether it was ill? It answered: "No, I ave no pain, but feel myself lost, and am like a bird without air." One of the unbaptized said: "As I stood before our Savior, crying for comfort and meditating upon the name of Jesus, it was as if in spirit I saw my Savior and me before me, with the marks of his wounds in nods, feet, and side; I then felt my heart much comforted." Michael said: "I feel that our Savior has made a abode within me. Ah, how happy am I, I can only weep or joy and devote myself anew to him." Eve declared she had never yet spent Christmas so happily, adding, have gained a better insight into that great mystery, that God was manifest in the flesh." Abraham, a venerable man, said: "My heart is full of joy. How happy are they who devote themselves wholly unto the Lord!"

CHAPTER V.

1773-1774.

Account of Schoenbrunn and Gnadenhuetten. The Believers quit Friedensfadt. External Troubles.
Brother Schmick returns to the Mission. Brother Zeisberger's second journey to the Shawanese. An Indian War occasions many Troubles to the Congregation, but does not disturb their internal peaceful Course.
The Delawares resolve by a solemn Act of Council to receive the Gospel.

The congregations at Schoenbrunn and Gnadenhuetten being surrounded by savage tribes, were obliged to with circumcision, left either their young people or Account of Schoenbrunn, &c.

86

P. III

newly baptized converts, should be seduced by the deceitful intrigues of their heathen neighbors, or the others should be drawn into the political affairs of the Chiefs.

As a strict conformity to the rules and orders already agreed upon and introduced into former settlements, was allowed to be the best preservative against the above-mentioned dangers, the inhabitants of Schoenbrunn and Gadenhuetten renewed in January 1773 their resolution to adhere to them, the missionaries having previously explained, that they should never consider these rules as a contrivance made to lord it over them, but only as wholesome advice, approved by experience to be most beneficial to the settlements; that on the other hand it was evident, that if they were not attended to, mischief would certainly follow: that the believing Indians ought on that account to be most strict in watching over their due observance than their teachers, and that all who refused to conform, and perished in their disobedience, should be removed from the settlements. This was unanimously agreed to, and faithfully observed.

The daily worship, the conferences, schools, attendance upon visitors, provision for the poor and sick, and every requisite for the prosperity of the congregation, was regulated in the same manner as formerly in other settlements.

Many journies were now made to Gekelemukpechewed, both from Gadenhuetten and Schoenbrunn, and the testimony of our Indians concerning the efficacy of the announcement made by Jesus Christ, was a lasting blessing to many of its inhabitants. Great numbers of visitors came likewise from this place, to whom the Gospel was preached by the missionaries and their Indian assistants, which proved a word of life and consolation to all those, who received it in faith. A Chief, called Echpalawehund, heard it with such conviction, that he resolved to renounce heathenism and to live with the Brethren. But being a man much honored and followed by a large party, his sudden resolution occasioned Debates at Gekelemuskoechouen.

ioned great confusion in the town. Some adversaries declared their enmity without any reserve, and insinuated, that the missionaries should be banished the Indian country. The disturbers of the peace, adding, that formerly they had in peace and quietness according to the good old Indian customs, and that even their sacrifices were not acceptable to God. The other party held a council three days together, and resolved at last, that they would all change the manner of living, prohibited drunkennes and other vices, not suffer any white traders to enter the town, as they introduced many new sins among them; the casks of the rum traders, appoint six men to preside in good order, and, without the aid of missionaries, exactly after the way of the believing Indians, and neither Chief Echpalawehund nor any other persons required them need leave the town to live with the Brethren. Echpalawehund, who by this time was acquainted with the source of all evil, endeavored to explain to them, that they wished to be delivered from its power, they must to Jesus Christ, and that otherwisetheir resolutions, although good in themselves, would be all in vain, as they had no strength to put them into execution. However, that they were in good earnest, they began by seizing ten casks of rum belonging to a travelling trader, who they drove in the open street. But alas, before a time had elapsed, these good resolutions proved abortive, they were as drunken as ever.

the mean time the situation of the congregation at Enseltad become more alarming than ever. The oaths and ceremonials of the savages occasioned daily more perturbation and trouble, and the pernicious consequences of the trade became at length insupportable. Sometimes the governors would bring a great quantity of rum close to Friedenshout, and there drink and rave like madmen. In this state of intoxication they frequently entered the settlement, and inhabitants were obliged to fasten their shutters and burn candles.
candles by day, as the drunken savages broke all windows that were left open. It was certainly owing to the gracious providence of God alone, that the settlement suffered so little and was not burnt down; for it happened several times, that when they were fully determined to do mischief, they quarreled among themselves, so that instead of injuring the believing Indians and their teachers, they fell upon each other with their knives, and many an one came off with a mangled face. Yet some forced open several doors in the place, by throwing large stones at them; then entering the houses, they brandished their arms, threatening to murder every foul living; and our Indians were at last obliged, against their inclination, to seize upon several of these rioters and keep them bound, till they got sober, left they should proceed to greater acts of violence. One day a savage came running like a madman into the settlement, exclaiming that he would kill the white man. He proceeded full speed to Brother Roe’s house, burst open the door, and entered the room like an enraged wild beast. The missionary’s wife was excessively terrified, snatched up her child and fled, but the missionary, who was then confined to his bed by illness, sat up in the bed and in silence looked with great undauntedness at the savage, which so much discomfited him, that he stopped short, and the Indian Brethren, hastening to their teacher’s relief, seized and bound him with ease.

The whole congregation bemoaned the fate of a young unbaptized man, the son of one of our Indian Brethren, who suffered himself to be seduced to accompany some savages to Kaskaskauk, where he got drunk, and in endeavoring in company with another, to cross the Beaver Creek, fell in, the ice breaking under him. He thrice attempted to save himself, but in vain; at last pronouncing these words, “It seems I must die, and I will die,” was forced by the current under the ice and drowned.

These circumstances, which admitted of no alleviation, prevailed at length upon the congregation, in the spring of 1773, to quit so disagreeable a neighborhood. April 11th there V. The Christian Indians quit Friedensstadt.

A solemn baptismal transaction, which closed the public worship of the congregation at Friedensstadt, and the thanksgiving that was offered up unto the Lord for all mercies, favors and preservation experienced in this place. The day after, the church was levelled with the ground, the then having intimated their intention to convert it into an fe for dancing and sacrifice. On the 13th our Indians took two large canoes, down Beaver Creek to the Ohio, proceeding to the mouth of Muekingum, and up that river to Gnadenhuetten and Schenbrunn. Brother John Heckenwaelder accompanied them who went by water. But many went strait across the stream with Brother John Rothe.

This journey lasted three weeks, and not a day passed, but they found cause to thank the Lord for his gracious help and preservation, especially in passing the numerous falls in the river, over which they were obliged to drag the canoes, in forming which some Brethren were in great danger of their life.

When at length the different parts of the Indian congregation met again together, there was universal joy and thanksgiving. Schenbrunn was inhabited chiefly by Delawares; Gnadenhuetten by Malikans; the believers from several nations being dispersed among them in both places. The dwellings, fields and gardens were portioned out among the families according to their several necessities. Those who had lived here for some time, showed all possible kindness to the new-comers, and thus the latter were in a short time conveniently and comfortably situated and provided with every thing needful.

External troubles however were not wanting. Intelligence was received, that the Iroquois had fold a large tract of land below the Canawhaw to the English, to which several nations claimed a right of possession, and that many white people had already settled upon it. The secret views of the Iroquois in this business could not remain unobserved, as they wished to draw the other Indian tribes into a war with the
the English, and while both parties were weakening themselves by slaughter, to gain advantages for themselves. The petty wars of the Indian tribes continued, and our Indians being considered as belonging to the Delaware nation, which was appointed peace-maker, they were incessantly called upon to interfere. Thus they were informed, that the Cherokees had declared war against the Wawiachtanes, destroyed a whole town, making no prisoners, but killing all they met, children not excepted. The head-chief of the Delawares in Gekelemukpechuenk was therefore obliged to fend an embassy of twelve men to the Cherokees, with proposals of peace, which were accepted. Our Indians willingly contributed twelve fathoms of wampom, towards the expenses of this embassy, to the great satisfaction of the chiefs. But they did not show the same disposition, when called upon to take share in a proposal made by the Delwarens to fend an embassy over the great ocean to the king of England, to desire that he would make peace between the implacable Iroquois and the Shawanoef; and at the same time to beg his majesty to inform them, which of all the Christian persuasions under his government was the best, that they might finally arrive at some certainty concerning that point.
It was evident, that such an undertaking could not be carried into execution, and indeed, after many solemn and serious consultations, the whole affair was suspended, and those who had contributed towards the expenses of the proposed embassy, were not a little disappointed to find, that the Delaware chiefs would not return their contributions.

July 4th, 1773, the missionaries in Schoenbrunn had the joy to baptize the firstlings of the Cherokee nation, a man and his wife.

Both here and in Gnadenhuetten the labor of the missionaries encreased so much, that they were obliged to beg for assistants, and to their great satisfaction, the missionary John Jacob Schmick, who had lived in Bethlehem ever since the relinquishing of Friedenshuettten, resolved to enter again into the service of his beloved Indian congregation. But before set out, it was found expedient to send a formal embassy, the name of the believing Indians, to the Chiefs and uncil in Gekelemukpeecheenk, partly to give notice of the ival of the missionary Schmick, and partly to repeat the laration given by the Indian congregation concerning their sta, divine worship, and manner of living; and to request the or of a renewed confirmation of the promises given by that uncil, viz. That the believing Indians should be protected nft all encroachments and attacks of the savages. Six tries were therefore chosen, and Isaac Gliekkian was inted speaker. He delivered with great freedom several ches before the council and a great number of hearers, ch made a deep impression on their minds, and prefented necessary belts and fribes of wampom by way of confirma-

In one of these speeches he said: "We have already en you a full explanation of our doctrine and manner of wing, and declared, that we have renounced all heathenm, and the sinful practices common among the Indians, ith which we have nothing more to do, but with to lead life well-pleasing to God. But you have not yet given us answer, though it is now above a year since, this was done. ou have rather troubled us with your own foolish things, hich we have entirely put away from us. We therefore care once more, that we have received the sweet and eious doctrine of the Gospel, not only with our ears, it with our hearts. We have brought the word which od sent unto us, and watch over it as over a great and valuable treasure; being resolved to preserve it, even the end of our lives. If any Indian therefore wifes hear and believe the Gospel, let him come to us; we all think it a pleasure to instruct him. Therefore fend is belt to your nephews the Shawanoof, and to your uncle t Delamatenoos, &c." The council was in the begin-not much pleased with the information of the appointt of another missionary, and the old Chief, Netawatwees, of opinion, that they had teachers enough, for the new would teach nothing but the same doctrine. He was, however, however, soon convinced, and agreed to his coming; as a consequence of which some Indian Brethren went to Bethlehem and conducted Brother Schmick and his wife back to Grudenhutten on the 18th of August. In September, David Zeisberger and the two assistants, Isaac Glikkian and William, made another journey to the Shawanofo. They met the head-chief in one of their towns upon a journey. He immediately gave them his hand, and addressing them in an excited tone of voice, said: "This day God hath so ordered, that we should see and speak with each other face to face." He then entered into a long detail of the practices of the white people, describing their manner of deceiving the Indians, which he illustrated by various instances, and affirmed that they were all alike, sweet in the mouths, but full of bitterness in their hearts, ever intent upon mischief. As he always pointed to the missionary whenever he mentioned the white people, Brother Zeisberger supposed that he intended to deter him from coming any more to the Shawanofo. He therefore took this opportunity to give the Chief an idea of the views of the Brethren in teaching the Indians, nor did he omit to preach the Gospel to him, closing with these words: "Though you should not believe my words now, yet a time will come, when all of us must appear before the judgment-seat of God; then every thing will be made manifest, and you will be obliged to confess, that I now have spoken the truth." But the Chief was so exceedingly exasperated against the white people, to whom he ascribed all the misery of the Indians, that Brother Zeisberger's words seemed at first to have little weight with him. However, having at length more pacified, he permitted him to continue as usual in the Shawanofo towns, but added, that he must expect some day or other to have his brains beat out. The missionary was not to be intimidated by these threats, but went to various places, preached the Gospel of Jesus Christ with great boldness and energy; and, as he expressed himself, sowed the word in hope, though he perceived that for the present sent no regular mission could be established among these ple.
soon after his return, the newly-erected chapels in Guashuerten and Schoenbrunn were consecrated with great and solemnity.
Among those who departed to eternal rest in the year 1773, thony, who has been frequently mentioned in this History, serves particular notice. His loss was greatly lamented by : missionaries. Ever since the year 1750 he had been a faithful member of the congregation, cleaving to the Lord th his whole heart, and poising extraordinary gifts for interpreting the discourses of the missionaries. He had a war insight into the truths of the Gospel, and a fervent zeal preach the word of reconciliation to his countrymen, for rich God had given him mouth and wisdom. He was des instrumental in the conversion of many, and rejoiced saley at their progress in grace. Diftres, danger, and perversion, which he had abundantly experienced, especially Goschgochuenek, never diverted him from looking up in th to Jesus, but rather tended to establish him in the love of knowledge of the friend and preferer of his soul, for soe service he was willing to endure contempt and revilings, d even death itself. Some days before his decease, he said a company of visitors: "Brethren, I am now going to our Savior, and beg you never to deny your faith. Do not pull down, what the Lord himself hath built among you, but seek to preserve it. Obey your teachers, and follow them in all things. Do not grieve them by disobedience, and suffer no one to seduce you. Think not when I am gone, that our Savior's cause will suffer. He will accomplis the work he has begun, and prepare for himself Brethren qualified for the labor." He fell asleep with the oft cheerful countenance, aged 77, and his memory is ecious to all who knew him.
The year 1774 proved a time of great trial to the Indian congregations. A war which broke out early in spring between the Virginians and Cherokees, Shawanoë, and Sen- nekas, nekas, occasioned such trouble and confusion throughout the whole country, that the two settlements, Gnadenhuetten and Schoenbrunn, had hardly a single day of rest to the end of November. This war was first occasioned by some Cherokees, who having visited Schoenbrunn murdered two white traders on their return. Another European traveller was murdered with a tomahawk by the Sennekas. This made the white people in Virginia fly to arms, and it was soon reported, that they had killed nine Sennekas, and wounded two, without having permission from government to commence hostilities.

The alarm soon became general, and a great part of the Shawanoche engaged in the war, going out in small parties to murder the white people. The Sennekas and Virginians did the same; and many white people, lately settled on the Ohio, took flight. Those Sennekas who had escaped from the Virginians, came now to Gekelumukpechuawk, and threatened to kill every white man they should meet with. All white traders, therefore, were immediately concealed, and well guarded by the Delawares. As soon as this news reached Schoenbrunn and Gnadenhuetten, the Indians, fearing an attack upon the missionaries, kept strict watch.

The protection granted to the white people greatly enraged the Sennekas and Shawanoche against the Delawares, and consequent against our Indians. On the other hand, the Delaware nation, as the preserver of peace, was much solicited, both by the English government and the peaceable Indian tribes, to exercise their authority, in endeavoring to re-establish peace and pacify the contending parties. The Delaware Chiefs were sincerely disposed to exert themselves in suppressing the war, and set several treaties on foot, to which our Indians also sent some deputies. But they either proved altogether inefficient, or only productive of a partial peace; or if a general peace was agreed upon, it was immediately broken. For all these well-meant endeavors, the Delawares were still more hated by those Indian tribes, who were fond of war, and at length called by way of distinction.
Shawnees, or white people. This exasperated the young men among the Delawares. They could not sit down patiently, and bear this contempt, but repeatedly solicited their Chiefs and captains to join the Shawanoës, and go to war with the white people. But as these stood firm, the young warriors ascribed their refusal to the powerful influence of our Indians, in the council, who, as they supposed, were guided and instructed by the missionaries. Thus the settlements were in the greatest danger from this quarter, for the rage of the young savages was such, that they could hardly be kept back from venting their fury upon them. Some even of the principal and oldest Chiefs of the Delawares were so weak, that they sent a solemn embassage to the Shawanoës, positively declaring, that they would not be called Shawnees, and that if they were thus shamefully reviled, on account of the white teachers who lived in Schoenbrunn and Gnadenhuetten, they took this opportunity of informing them, that they had no hand in it, and never intended to believe in the word of God, much less to live conformably to it; that they had never called the believing Indians into their country, but only connived at its being done by some old fools among them. Though this latter affront was a palpable falsehood, and it was evident that the Chiefs sent this message merely out of fear, yet the young warriors were so much emboldened by it, that they came in great troops to Gnadenhuetten and Schoenbrunn, and committed outrages, the consequences of which would have been fatal, had not God in mercy protected both settlements by his almighty hand.

As the missionaries were hourly in danger of their lives, it was thought proper to send Brother Rothe and his wife with their two infants to Bethlehem, and the Lord conducted them safe through many dangers. For the greater security of the other missionaries, the Indians sent an embassage to the council of the Delawares at Geckelumpecheunjek, declaring that they would publicly acknowledge their having called the believing Indians and their teachers into the country. They also requested, that the missionaries might be considered as belonging... belonging to the Delaware nation, and members of the same body. The council pretended to receive this embly with great pleasure, but as the answer was, as usual, pol-pioned to some future opportunity, it was of no service to the believing Indians.

The rumours of war and peace varied daily for many months together, keeping our people in distref still Numerous troops of warriors marched through Schoenbrunn and Gnadenhuetten, some upon murdering parties, others returning with scalps and prisoners, uttering frequent threats, that both places should soon be surprized and laid waste.

Several messenges were sent by the Shawanofo to our Indians, cautioning them to fly from their settlements and to seek refuge in the towns of the Shawanofo, by which two families were so far intimidated, that they left the cegreg-tion, to their great detriment. Another message arrived with the news, that 1000 Shawanofo were on their march to chal-lege the Indians in Gekelemukpechuenk, Gnadenhuverters and Schoenbrunn, to enter the hists with them against the Virginians, and in case of refuse, to murder every one of them, and destroy their towns. Another report mentioned that the Virginians were on the march, and many people fled from Gekelemukpechuenk and other places, advising our Indians to do the same. But the latter resoloved rather to wait, expeching help from the Lord alone. It was after-wards proved, that most of these terrifying reports were nothing but malicious lies, by which some wicked people in Gekelemukpechuenk endeavored to spread terror and confusion among our Indians. Canoes however were alway kept in readiness for any sudden emergency, as they were frequently in the night so much terrifed by frightful accounts, that all were on the point of taking flight. The Sisters were several times driven from their plantations at noon-day; and all the inhabitants were confined for days and weeks to their dwellings, as several parties of strollers appeared in the neighborhood with a view to seize stragglers. The powers of darkness were indeed severely during this dreadful period, and the missionaries and congregations could do nothing but cry day and night God for protection and help in the time of need.

The length the English Government was obliged to proceed with the utmost severity, and to march troops into the field. These strict laws were not made to molest the Christian Indians, nor was the Schoenbrunn and Gnadenhuetten. They led a large party of Shawanoke, whom they defeated and destroyed, and destroyed four or five of the towns. But as they still refused to make peace, Lord o more, Governor of Virginia, marching with a sufficient force, compelled them to submit and to raise up all the white prisoners, who were still alive. He carried off their chief captains and several other Shawanoke and Seneca Indians as hostages, and thus established peace throughout the country, to which the Shawanoke the readily agreed, as all their endeavors to draw the great cily of the Iroquois in Onondago, and other Indian nations, into their schemes, had been frustrated.

From this brief account of the war, we may easily see that the Indian congregations found great cause for praise and thank God for its happy conclusion. They this not only in private, but appointed the 6th of December as a day of public thanksgiving, which they celebrated with great solemnity, calling to mind the gracious salvation of that Lord, who had not suffered them to be treated above what they were able to bear, but supported them graciously. For these his mercies they rendered unto songs of praise and gratitude.

The missionaries had again great reason to rejoice, that all these troubles, the internal establishment of the relations in the grace of God had rather gained than ground. The public preaching of the Gospel had never been omitted, and to most of their hearers, among whom many warriors, the Gospel was not preached in vain, the had attended the meetings with much emotion of heart, returned indeed to their respective homes, but after a few a few days came again, to assure the Brethren, that they had meditated by day and night upon what they had heard, and could have no peace, until they resolved to return and hear more concerning so gracious a God and Savior. A celebrated Indian preacher, hearing the Gospel for the first time in Schoenbrunn, was so struck with conviction, that he could not rest, till he had obtained leave to dwell there. Many sick Indians, women in labor, and travellers who were taken ill in the neighborhood, begged to be carried to Schoenbrunn or Gnadenhuetten, because, as they said, if they should happen to die, they might hope to hear words of their Savior before they departed this life, and be led to turn to him in their distresses. Though the missionaries did not expect to see much abiding fruit on these occasions, because a man, in distresses, is apt to make good resolutions, but generally forgets them soon after; yet they had the pleasure to see that some of these poor people turned with their whole hearts to the Lord, and joined his people.

There was another striking contrast between the conduct of our Indians and the savages. The former, though frequently interrupted, continued in their usual habits of industry, planting their fields and gardens, boiling sugar, &c., while the latter neglected every thing on account of the war. God blessed the labor of their hands, so much that they had not only sufficient to affix the needy, but even generally provided many warriors, marching through their settlements, with food and other necessaries, to their great surprise. A captain said on this occasion: "I have found your people very different from what I heard them to be, in our towns. There it is said, that when a strange Indian arrives he is sent to make his fire in the wood, and can get nothing to eat; I now hear the contrary from all that have come to us from you; for they have all been lodged and fed. In Gekelemukpechenuk they made why face at us, but here all the men, women, and even children, have bid us welcome."

Among
Account of Gnadenhuette and Schoenbrunn.

ng those, who in 1774 obtained leave to dwell at brunn, was a family from Onondago, who had been y acquainted with Brother David Zeisberger. They in baptized by a Roman priest, and were therefore emingly received into the congregation of the Brethren. in declared, that he had spent several years in great of mind, laboring to procure rest unto his soul, but never find any, until he came hither and heard the of the incarnation, sufferings and death of God our

“And now,” added he, I believe that Jesus shed his blood also for me a poor sinner. I will fore be wholly his property. Not a hair of me shall that does not belong unto him.” Chief Newallike, name was mentioned in the history of Friedenshuette, long hesitated whether he should devote himself to rd, could no longer withstand his convictions, but with his and another family from the Susquehannah embrunn. About this time a remarkable emotion was ed among the unbaptized; some, who had appeared rm, were moved to a sense of their backwardness.
them said, “Here am I, a poor sinner, who have so long among God’s people, and yet have no life in heart. Ah, I am ashamed, when I consider, with patience our Savior has borne with me hitherto. But I cannot remain dead any longer; I desire to receive al life from him, but I know that I must first be ed from my sins in his precious blood.” A whole having lived for a considerable time at Schoenbrunn, ved no signs of true conversion, were therefore in-
, that if they knew no reason for their living there, ould do better to remove to some other place. This them seriously to reflect. Both husband and wife, there had been at variance, now agreed to turn to rd, begged leave to stay, and the man added that he even consider it as a favor if they were only permitted without, on the threshold, to hear the Gospel. Their was granted, and the Brethren had no reason to re-pea;
pent: they turned indeed with their whole hearts unto the Lord, were baptized, and remained ever after faithful members of the congregation. An Indian woman, who had been long without spiritual life, came, and declared with many tears, that our Savior had manifested himself to her heart; that she now could believe, that he had received wounds in his hands, feet, and side, for her sins. That having represented to her mind how he stood with the thorny crown, torn and wounded, this had melted her whole heart: "Now," added she, "I defire nothing so much as to be cleansed from my sins in his precious blood." An unbaptized man, who moved from Gekelemukpecheuenk to Schoenbrunn, being severely reproved for it by an heathen, answered: "All the Indians know how wickedly I have lived. I had not my fellow in Gekelemukpecheuenk, so that my grandfather, Netawatwees, and all my friends, told me on account of my abominable life, often bidding me to be gone, and never to see their face again. But now that my friends and the other Indians feel that I am here and believe the Gospel, they hate me much more than before, when I lived in sin." Chief Echpalawehund came one day to Brother Schmick, and said: "Yesternight our Savior revealed himself to me, and I felt great pain, when I considered how many years I have grieved him with my sins. I prayed to him; 'Have mercy upon me! Thou seest and knowest my wretchedness. Grant me thy mercy, and the remission of my sins. Cleanse my heart; I will devote it unto thee alone!' I then thought, I will cast myself at the feet of 'Jesus, and never desist until he grants my petition.' He soon received the joyful assurance of the forgiveness of his sins, was baptized and called Peter, and not long after became a zealous witness of the truth among the very people, whose Chief he had been. The grace of God and the labor of his Spirit were evident, not only in the hearts of the unbaptized and catechumens in general, but more especially among the young people. Even children were awakened, and the missionaries remarked with great pleasure and gratitude.
that these little ones both in public and private, wept through the blood of Jesus, devoting themselves with and body to him, who gave himself a sacrifice for us.
opened about this time that a poor girl of ten years old, engaged in planting Indian corn, was suddenly crushed up by the fall of a large tree. This circumstance afforded an opportunity to remind the children, that they to be always ready to depart to the Lord with joy, not ing how soon they may be called hence.
with which the Indian afflithe word of reconciliation to their country-was remarkably great at this period. They did this publicly in the great council at Gekelemukpechuenk, chiefs having desired that some of the eldest and most bed among the believing Indians would always attend, hey seldom omitted an opportunity of declaring the as it is in Christ Jesus. One of them spoke in the il concerning the missionaries: “Our teachers,” said not desire your land, nor any external advantage, her white people do, but their whole aim is, to preach is, and to instruct us daily, how to attain to a better ledge of God our Creator, by whom we receive peace joy in our hearts and the hopes of everlasting life:
love the Indians, and therefore live among us, and must not look upon our teachers as upon other white ple, but class them among our nearest friends and ations.” Notwithstanding these declarations the mission-were however a stone of offence to many of the Chiefs a great part of the council at Gekelemukpechuenk, was several times proposed to expel them by force, ord brought their counsel to nought, and appointed for urpose, the first captain among the Delawares, called Eye. This man kept the Chiefs and council in awe, could not suffer them to injure the missionaries, being own heart convinced of the truths of the Gospel.
was evident in all his speeches, held before the Chiefs Council in behalf of the Indian congregation and their at III. I teachers, teachers, during which he was frequently so much more, that his tears prevented his words. He likewise declared, with confidence, that no prosperity would attend the Indian affairs, unless they received and believed the saving Gospel, sent by God to them, by means of the Brethren. He was therefore unwearied in his endeavors to persuade them to believe, as the above-mentioned declaration of some Chiefs in Gekelemukpechuenk, that they would never hear and believe the word of God, extremely distress'd him. This exposed him to much reproach and sufferings, and he had no greater enemy than the above-mentioned old Chief Netawatwees, who was the principal author of that declaration. White Eye however remained firm, and demanded that the Christian Indians should enjoy perfect liberty of conscience, and their teachers' safety and protection, adding, that it was but right that the believers should live separate from the rest, and be protected by the Chiefs and council against every intruder. But finding that his remonstrances would not avail, he separated himself entirely from the Chiefs and council. This occasioned great and general surprise, and his preference being considered both by the Chiefs and the people as indispensible necessary, a negociation commenced, and some Indian Brethren were appointed arbitrators. The event was beyond expectation successful, for Chief Netawatwees not only acknowledged the injustice done to Captain White Eye, but changed his mind with respect to the believing Indians and their teachers, and remained their constant friend to his death. He likewise published this change of sentiment to the whole council, in presence of the deputies from Gnadenhuetten and Schoenbrunn. Captain White Eye then repeated the proposal which they had formerly rejected; and the council agreeing to it, an agreement was made in the name of the whole Delaware nation to the following effect:

"From this time forward we solemnly declare, that we will receive the word of God, and that the believing Indians and their teachers shall enjoy perfect liberty throughout".
in country, with the same rights and privileges by other Indians. The country shall be free to the believers shall have their right and share in it, the unbelievers. Whoever wishes to go to the i and to receive the Gospel, shall be at liberty to join nd none shall hinder him. But no heathen In- tell settle in the neighborhood of the believers.” r wees expressed great joy at this act and declaration, ded his speech with these words: “I am an old d know not how long I may live in this world. I rejoice, that I have been able to make this act, our children and grandchildren will reap the bene- now I am ready to go out of the world, when- pleases.” He sent moreover the following memo- rief Pakane in Kaalkunk: “You and I are both know not how long we shall live. Therefore let good work, before we depart, and leave a testi- our children and posterity, that we have received l of God. Let this be our last will and testament.” accepted the proposal, and he and other Chiefs own by solemn embalm in all places where it ary. For a still greater security, a treaty was fet th the Delawatenequo, who had given this part of ry to the Delawares about thirty years ago, by grant was procured, insuring to the believing In- qual right with the other Delawares to possess land id that this transference might be duly ratified in the nner and the act remain unrepealed, our Indians fen. mbafto the Chiefs and council of the Delaware return their humble thanks for it. The deputies the whole declaration of the council concerning ing Indians and their teachers, and Netawatnees it to be their own act and deed, in presence of pple; adding, that they had called the Indian con- and their missionaries into this country, and that rds now repeated by the deputies, had been ipoken d by this council. Then the deputies proceeded to return thanks in the name of both congregations, delivering several belts of wampum, which were forwarded to the neighboring nations. They were made without ornaments, and immediately known by their plainness to be the belts of the Christian Indians. Thus this important business was concluded and confirmed in due form.

Meanwhile Gekelemukpecuemk was forsaken by its inhabitants, and a new town built on the east side of the Mukingum, opposite to the influx of the Walhaling. This town was called Gofchachguenk, and Chief Netawatwees chose it for his future residence.

CHAPTER VI.

1775. 1776.

The reef enjoyed by the Indian congregation in the year 1775 was peculiarly pleasing, and much favored the visits of strangers, who came in such numbers, that the chapel at Schoenbrunn, which might contain about five hundred hearers, was too small.

Among these was a white man from Maryland, Mr. Richard Connor and his wife, who had lived many years among the Shawanores, but afterwards settled in Pittsburg. The Gospel, which they heard in Schoenbrunn, was so precious to them, that they resolved to leave Pittsburg and live with our Indians. The missionaires being very scrupulous of admitting white people as inhabitants, on account of the above-mentioned suspicions of the Indian nations, repre-
h. VI. Prosperous State of the Mission.

...mented their scruples, adding, that they would find it inconvenient, to submit to those rules and practices agreed upon an essentially necessary for the welfare of the settlement. But Mr. and Mrs. Connor declared their willingness to comply with every thing, and that they did not desire to claim the right prerogative before the believing Indians, their only view being the salvation of their own souls. They were so urgent in repeating their request, that after mature consideration the conference of the Indian assistants, their petition was taft granted. They then left Pittsburgh, and moved to St. Louis, where they began an Indian housekeeping, and were publicly received as members of the church of the brethren. They had soon after the satisfaction, after much rouble, to ransom their son of four years old, for forty Spanish dollars, from the Shawanoee, who had forcibly deceived him.

It was a great pleasure to the brethren to see the change brought in the mind of Captain Pipe's wife. She formerly declared that what the brethren preached, was not true; that the knew better, having been in the mansions of the spirits, where the strawberies and bilberries were as large as apples, and in great plenty. Thither she intended to return, but that she would never go to the brethren's heaven.
On this account she would not come to any meeting for a long time. At length venturing to attend the baptism of a child, the Holy Ghost labored so powerfully on her heart, that the melted into tears, and afterwards declared, that she would no more say, that the brethren's doctrine was false, being now convinced of its truth and delirious to be faved by a.

In this year, Wangomen, the well-known heathen preacher at Gofchgochuenk, visited Schoenbrunn, endeavoring to propagate his foolish doctrines, in order to perplex the minds of the people. But the Indian brethren opposed him so successfully, that he was utterly confounded. They closed their rebuke with these words: "Go to our children, *they can teach you the way to salvation, of which you are ignorant."

I 3 After
After a sermon which treated of the great love of God to man, revealed in the incarnation and death of our Lord Jesus Christ, a strange Mahikan asked an Indian Sitter, whether all the people at church had a feeling of this great love of God. She answered: "I cannot tell you whether all feel it, but those who believe and love our Savior feel it certainly. I will introduce a simile. Suppose there was a very delicious meal prepared in this room, and many people attending; those only who eat, can say, that the victuals taste well, the others cannot say so. Thus it is with our Savior. Only those who have tasted of his love can speak of it, and they never forget it." The Mahikan replied: "Your simile is just. Now I will likewise tell you something: When my wife was going to lie in with her first-born, I was impatient to see the child. When I saw it, I thought: This child God has made; and I loved it so much, that I could not forbear looking at it continually. Soon after the child died, and I mourned to that degree that nothing would comfort me. I had no rest, day nor night, and my child was always in my thoughts; for my heart cleaved to it. At last I could bear the house no longer, but ran into the woods, and almost lost my senses. The Indians then advised me to take an emetic to get rid of my sorrow. I complied, but the love for my child, and my sorrow for its loss, were not removed, and I returned to the woods. There I beheld the trees and the birds, and considered, that the fame God created them who made my child. I then said: 'Thou, O God! who mad'st all things, I know not where thou art, but I have heard that thou dwellest in heaven. Thou hast taken my child, take my sorrow and grief likewise from me!' This was done, and I then could forget my child. From this I conclude, that those who love God are dispersed as I was towards the child I so dearly loved; they can never forget him, nor find rest and pleasure in any thing else.'

Another visitor was surprised that he had nothing to say for the missionaries' sermons. He said, "I have been here thrice..."
VI. Prosperous State of the Mission.

ee days, and have heard many excellent words, without ing any wampum. This is not so among the Indians, for en you want to gain any useful knowledge from the old wife men, you must first give them firings and belts of pom, otherwise they will not instruct you."

May 1775 the Chief of a large Shawanofe town spent ays agreeably at Gnadenhuetten, accompanied by his a captain, several counsellors, in all above thirty per-

They attended divine worship regularly, and received of friendship with Brother Schmick.

th these settlements were much troubled by such Indians, during the former wars, had neglected their plantations, were thus reduced to famine. Our Indians fed these people as long as they had any thing themselves, but soon distrested for provisions, were obliged to seek food families, by hunting at a great distance from home.

of those expeditions, a brother having lost his party, d into an immense wilderness, where he roved about for le week before he found his way home. On his arrival, hole congregation took share in the inexpressible joy of ife and children, who had given him over for lost. He most starved, looked like a corpse; and it was with что he was so far restored as to be able to take food.

could not find words to express his thanks to God our r, on whom he placed his sole confidence in this dread-or of trial. "Praised be the Lord," said he to Brother ick, "who preferred me so long in the woods. Often I cry unto him in my distress: Thou knowest why out to hunt, I fought to provide the necessary food myself and my family. Afflict me to find my way to my children, and to my brethren. Be present with strengthen me, for I am very faint! This prayer Savior heard, and brought me back, for which I can-thank him sufficiently."

song those who were baptized in the year 1775, was a f the well-known Chief Pakanke, in Kaskaaskunk, who, being taken ill in the woods, begged to be carried to Gnadenhuette, where he heard the Gospel, so well adapted to the comfort of all the poor and needy, with eager attention, and begged with tears for baptism. "I only desire," said he, "to be saved, and that our Savior may cleanse my heart in his precious blood, forgive me all my sins, and grant me eternial life." He then asked Brother Schmick, when Christmas-day would be, and the day being mentioned to him, he wept and said: "Ah, that the Lord would then have mercy upon me, and grant me spiritual life in holy baptism, for on that day I was born into this world." His request was granted, and he was baptized on Christmas-day.
About this time an unbaptized man, who was sent away from Gnadenhuette on account of his bad behavior, was desperated to such a degree, that having painted himself all over black, he entered the house of the missionary Schmick, armed with a large knife, bent upon revenge. But finding only his wife at home, he returned, and soon recollecting himself, went and confessed his sins and unhappy condition, begging earnestly to be re-admitted; and not long after Brother Schmick had the pleasure to baptize him into the death of Jesus. Another, who had been appointed facetious to Chief Netawatwees, declined the offer, and would rather believe and be baptized, than promoted to that honor.
Among those called by the Lord into eternal rest was John Tappenhank, a man much respected, who cleaved steadfastly unto the Lord, and in every trial gave evident proofs, that he was established in the true faith. The external affair of the settlement at Schoenbrunn were committed to his inspection, as warden of the congregation. In this office he showed the greatest faithfulness and activity. During the latter period of his life he was remarkably cheerful, and in his last illness never wihed to recover, but longed to depart and see Jesus, his Lord and God, face to face. In this besieed hope he fell happily asleep, and his end was edifying to all present. The decease of Joshua was a painful stroke to the missionaries; he was one of the first baptized in the year 1742. As an assistant he shewed great zeal and fidelity, preached the Gospel with simplicity and power to his countrymen, and having great gifts and capacity, was very useful and unwearied in translating. He was universally beloved, and being appointed warden of the congregation at Gnadenhuetten, he watched heedfully over the due observance of the regulations and statutes, himself giving a good example unto others. Shortly before his departure he said to Brother Schmick: "I go to our Savior as a poor sinner, for I am the "poorest and worst of all, and have nothing to plead but the "blood of Christ. His righteousness is my wedding dress." And clothed with this, he fell happily asleep, and entered into eternal rest.
Ch. VI. Troubles occasioned by the American War.

In the year 1775 the disputes between Great Britain and her North American colonies had risen so high, that the disturbances occasioned by them reached the countries situated along the Monongahela and Ohio. I shall mention those troubles only in as far as they had an influence upon our Indian congregations, and may tend to throw light upon their history. The troops and allies of Great Britain I have called the English, and the troops and allies of the present United States, the Americans.

The Indian mission was brought into an extraordinary dilemma by this war, and it is incredible with what circumspection the missionaries were obliged to act, not to offend either the English or Americans, or the various Indian nations inclining to one or the other party.

In October and November 1775 a treaty of peace was set on foot at Pittsburg, with the deputies of the Six Nations. To this Brother Zeitberger, as missionary, and some Indian Brethren, as deputies, were invited by the commissionrs appointed by the American congress. Brother Zeitberger declined attending, but our Indian deputies went to Pittsburg, where the aim to establish peace was only in part obtained. The deputies of the Wyondat or Huron Indians showed much dissatisfaction at parting, being inclined to take the part of the English.

Captain White Eye took this opportunity to declare both to the commissioners of Congreß, and to the Indian deputies, that the Delawares had formally resolved to receive the Gospel. This indeed seemed to be the sincere intention of the people of Goshachquenk, and must be ascribed to the frequent admonitions given them to this purpose by their old Chief Netawatvwees. Towards the end of the year a small embassy came from Goshachquenk to Schoenbrunn, to declare that a third settlement might be established. Their address was to the following effect: "Brothers and friends! you told us immediately upon your arrival, that you intended to build two or three towns for the believing Indians. Two are erected, and we perceive that they are well filled with inhabitants. We therefore, having long ago resolved to believe in the Gospel, have thought, upon mature consideration, that it is now time to build the third town, that those of our people, who believe, may have a place of refuge. We therefore desire you to begin as soon as possible. You are to lay the foundation, to plant the word of God, and to make the proper regulations, as you know best. These must not be made only to suit the aged and grown people, but chiefly for our young people and children; for it is our intention, that this establishment shall last as long as Indians exist. We wish particularly, to see our children instructed in reading the holy Scriptures, that they may never forget them. Our eyes look towards you, for we are not able to accomplish it ourselves." The message was duly received, and the deputies having proposed two places for a third settlement, the missionary David Zeitberger went in the spring of 1776 with some Indian Brethren to view them, when, after due deliberation, a spot was chosen with the approbation of the Chiefs and the great council of the Delawares, about three miles below Goshachquenk, on the east side of the Mulkingum, and the settlement was called Lichtenau.

Chief Netawatvwees and most of his people expressed great joy on this occasion; but those who did not wish to be different.
Building of Lichtenau.

In the service of sin by the preaching of the Gospel,

April 10th, 1776, the Brethren Zeiheberger and Heckenwael-with eight Indian families, in all thirty-five persons, from Schoenbrunn to the spot proposed for the build-g of Lichtenau, and on the evening of their arrival met the open air to praise the name of that Lord, whom intended to worship and serve in this place. They first in huts, as usual on such emergencies, marked out the ations and gardens, for the settlement on the banks ngum, and built one street north and south, chapel in the center. They were assisted in this work by many Brethren from Gnadenheetten and Chief Netawivees, who frely came with a large party of his people to help them:

ome strangers, among whom were four Cherokee; willingly to work. Thus in a short time, all our Indians; moved hither with their teachers, left the huts and osition of their houses. By the preaching of the here many Indians in Gofchachquenk and other became concerned for their salvation; and as all those,

appeared in earnest, were permitted to settle at Lichthis place soon encreased, and the missionaries had the otion to find, that a better situation could not have been en for the preaching of the Gospel. The savages came er from the most distant parts, and heard it with abiding

Among these strangers one devotes particularly to sider, who came from the river Illinois, at the distance of one thousand miles, and appeared very thoughtful. At thus addressed Brother Zeibheberger: "Do you think at what you preach is true, and good for us?" The military swered, "I preach the word of God, which is will remain so to all eternity." He replied, cannot believe it." His honest declaration pleased the ary, and he explained to him, that as soon as he should hear hear the Gospel and perceive its power, he would, without much hesitation, acknowledge it to be truth.

July 28th, 1776, the first baptism was administered at Lichtenau to a nephew of Chief Netawatwees, who was named John. He soon became an active and zealous witness among his countrymen, fearless of the persecution of those, who were avowed enemies of the Gospel. Being advised by an heathen not to speak of what he experienced, because it might eventually cost him his life, he replied, "I will therefore speak the more courageously. Do you imagine, that we fear the sorcery of the Indians, and that account that our mouths and conceal what God has done? Savior has done and suffered for us and all the Indians when he shed his precious blood for the remission of sins. God forbid: We will tell all men how they may come Jesus Christ and be saved by him, nor will we hold peace as long as we live; for this is the commandment: God unto us." Netawatwees, who greatly rejoiced at the change wrought in his nephew, permitted his son to move with his whole family to Lichtenau, and was very thoughtful about his own salvation. He related, that he had made thirteen notches in a piece of wood, by way of memorandum that he had been thirteen Sundays in Lichtenau to hear the word of God; and when he considered how often he had heard of his Redeemer, and looked at the notches in the wood, he could not help weeping, although he endeavored to conceal his tears.

Among those who moved to Lichtenau in 1776, was Chief from Affining, who had married a white woman, who, as a child, was taken prisoner by the savages about nineteen years ago in Virginia. Being present at a morning meeting for the first time, she burst into tears, saying, "O how do "rejoice, that after the space of nineteen years, I at last "the Gospel again. I have often desired to live with you "and now God has granted my petition; I never felt happier "than when I awoke this morning."
VI. Visit from a Chief of the Shawanoes.

A Gnadenhuetten arrived about this time a Chief of the Shawanoes, commonly called Cornflock, with a retinue of up to an hundred persons, men, women, and children. His visor was courteous, and he showed a particular friendship to the missionary Jacob Schmick, to whom he addressed the owing speech through his interpreter, an old mulatto, who had lived twenty years among the Shawanoes: “I greatly rejoice to see you and your wife. I shall never forget the kindness you have shown me during my last visit. There is no one like you and your wife as my parents, and dear and own you anew as such.” Brother Schmick said: “This is doing us too much honor. We shall be satisfied if you will consider me as your brother, and my wife as your sister.” He seemed pleased, and taking the missionary and his wife by the hand, thanked them, and: “I will acquaint all my friends that we have established a bond of friendship.”

In the year 1776, the Delaware Reading and Spelling Book, compiled by Brother Zeisberger, was introduced into schools at Schoenbrunn and Gnadenhuetten, and gave pleasure to the scholars. The believing Indians, confessing at the close of 1775 of 414 tons, lived now in three settlements, not far afield, and instructing intercoure subsisted between them. Internally the congregations prospered greatly. The Gospel showed living power in the hearts both of strangers and inhabitants. Of the former many were added to the church of 1 by holy baptism, and the growth of the latter in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ was so continuous, that the missionaries could not but acknowledge a mission to have been at that time in the most flourishing state. But their external situation was truly embarrassing. My first received a message in the name of his Britannic Majesty, deferring that our Indians, as well as the others, should strictly adhere to the articles of peace, and remain during the troubles subsisting between the colonies the mother-country. Our Indians were more especially willing...
Embarrassing Situation of the Missionaries.

willing to act conformably to the contents of this message, they loved peace and wished to remain unmolested. So after another message was received from the Congress at Philadelphia, giving notice in the kindest terms, that they had appointed an agent of Indian affairs, and that our Indians should correspond with him in all public concerns. Not after a report prevailed, that the Shawanees had joined the English against the Americans, and were gone out to murmur the latter. At last intelligence was brought that the English, and that Delamattenoos and other Indian nations would follow the example: but that the Delaware nation, which was appointed to keep the general peace, should not be informed of the proceedings, till it was too late to prevent the war. The and other rumors perplexed our Indians not a little. But resolved at all events not to meddle with the war, they plainly, that they should stand, as it were, between three and the English, the Americans, and those Indian nations, who were displeased with their neutrality; all these being suspicious of their conduct. But the greatest concern they had on account of their teachers, who, in case of an Indian war, must either fly and leave their congregations, or every day be in danger of losing their lives.

The Delaware Chief Netawatwees did every thing in his power to preserve peace among the Indian nations, by sending embassies, and exhorting them not to go to war. He known received a message from the Hurons, “that the Delawares should keep their throes in readiness, to join the war.” This message he would not accept, but sent several belts to the Hurons, admonishing them to sit still and to remember the misery they had brought upon themselves, taking share in the late war between the English and French. These belts were carried to the Chiefs of the Hurons in Detroit; but as it was necessary to deliver them to the Chief in the presence of the English Governor, the latter, to fulfill his duty, cut them in pieces, cast them at the deputies feet and commanded them to depart within half an hour.
even accused Captain White Eye of taking part with the Americans, advising him to depart instantly as he valued his head. After this, Congress offered to protect the Indians, who were peaceably disposed, and to place them out of the reach of danger. No Chief would venture to make known this message to his people, the general disposition of all the Indians, the Delawares not excepted, being for war; and the mere mention of this proposal would have occasioned them to go to war immediately, and thus have made bad worse.

The Americans then advised the missionaries to save themselves, and take refuge in Pittsburgh. But well knowing that their congregations would fall into the most deplorable circumstances without their teachers, they declined every offer of that kind, and rather resolved to suffer with the people committed to their care, though threatened by the most imminent danger. Brother William Edward arrived in autumn from Bethlehem to assist the mission.

About this time the Hurons and Mingues came into the vicinity of our settlements, and murdered eleven white people upon a plantation not far from Lichtenau. Some of them were even found skulking about at Goschauchgenek in search of white people. At length six of them came early in the morning of the 12th of November to Lichtenau, and Brother Heckenwaelder was not a little alarmed, when upon opening his houset-door he discovered these savages standing before it. Some Indian Brethren however hastened to his assistance, to whom the savages owned, that they came in search of white people, intending to kill them, but assured them, that they did not mean to hurt the white traders, but only the white traders.

The Americans now began to march with the Indian warriors in their interest, against the English, and desired a passage through the Delaware country, promising that if they remained quiet, they should suffer no injury. The Delawares however were not a little alarmed, fearing that if the Americans were defeated, the conquerors would plunder and destroy all the Delaware towns, and our settlements would have undoubt-undoubtedly shared the same fate. But as their requell could not be refused, silence gave consent.

It now became evident, why, by the providence of God, Lichtenau had been placed so near to Goschachgusen; for the believing Indians could neither have defended themselves nor their teachers against the infults of the warriors, had they not had constant support from the Chiefs and council of that plate. They cautiously avoided interfering with the messages of the Delawares, sent either to the English, the Americans, or the neighboring Indian nations, or with any thing relating to political affairs. One circumstance was very perplexing. The Delaware Chiefs now and then received letters from Pittsburg and other places. As they could not read, they generally applied to the missionaries to know the contents. Sometimes they desired them to answer these letters in the name of the Chiefs. It would have been not only unkind, but even dangerous, to refuse their requell, as the Chiefs would have had occasion to doubt their friendship. Innocent as their compliance was, the missionaries wished much to have been spared, fearing lest people, who knew not the connection of this business, might begin to suspect that they were themselves carrying on a correspondence with the Americans to the prejudice of the English, and the event proved their fear to be just. The more the missionaries stood in need of a sensible and respected Chief in this embarrassing situation, the more they had reason to lament the death of Chief Netawawere, which happened in Pittsburg, towards the close of 1756. Ever since his sentiments had changed in favor of the Gospel, he was a faithful friend of the Brethren, and being one of the most experienced Chiefs in his time, his counsel proved often very serviceable to the mission. The wish he uttered as his last will and testament, that the Delaware nation might hear and believe the word of God, preached by the Brethren, was frequently repeated in the council by his successor, and then they renewed their covenant to use their utmost exertions to fulfill this last with of their old worthy and honored Chief. Upon such an occasion, Captain White Eye, holding the title...
Ch. VI. Transactions between the Hurons, &c. and English. 117 and some spelling-books in his hands, addressed the council with great emotion and even with tears: "My friends," said he, "you now have heard the last will and testament of our departed Chief. I will therefore gather together my young men and their children, and kneeling down before that God, who created them, will pray unto him, that he may have mercy upon us and reveal his will unto us. And as we cannot declare it to thosè, who are yet unborn, we will pray unto the Lord our God, to make it known to our children, and children's children."

In the mean time the Hurons continued to commit ravages and murders in all places, attached to the American cause. The Chiefs of the Delawarens were more than ever concerned for the safety of the missionaires in Gnadenhubten and Schoenbrunn, and therefore invited these congregations to come to the chief, that they might protect the white Brethren in their own town: but the missionaires did not then apprehend this step to be necessary, placing their own confidence in the Lord, who had preserved them in so many dangers, under the shadow of his wings.

A message arrived soon after from the Hurons, signifying that they were unwilling to go to war, but found themselves driven to it; adding, that the Iroquois and all the western nations had united to fight against the Americans, and that the Delawareans should now finally declare what party they intended to join. They answered, that they should join neither, but keep the peace, by which they hoped to be most benefited. That even the Americans had advised them to do, not desiring any assistance from the Indians. This answer, sent by a formal embassy to the Hurons, was well received, contrary to all expectation. It even made such an impression upon them, that they declared to the governor of Fort Detroit, that as he was always urging them to go to war with the Americans, but himself sat down quietly, plainly showing, that he merely fought the destruction of the Indians, they would only have patience till to-morrow, that is, till next spring. If they then should still find, that he did nothing, they would cast all his belts at his feet, and go to Gofchacquemek to renew their friendship with the Delawares, and to Pittsburg, to make a covenant with the American colonies. They then returned home, and desisted from further hostilities for the present.

The governor of Fort Detroit and the Huron Chief could not comprehend why the Delaware nation was so firm in maintaining peace. At last it was ascribed to the missionaries and their influence upon the deliberations of the council, and it appeared some time after, that, already at that time, a proposal was made to seize the missionaries and carry them to Fort Detroit.

CHAPTER VII.

1777.

Lamentable Divisions in Schoenbrunn. The faithful Part of the Congregation forsake the Settlement and emigrate to Gnadenbuetten and Lichtenau. The Indian War becomes more general. Some Missionaries return to Bethlehem. A Troop of Huron Warriors bring Gnadenbuetten and Lichtenau into great Danger.
Further Mischief is prevented. A false Alarm occasions the Flight of the Indian Congregation. Their internal Course remains edifying.

In the year 1777 the troubles continued. The accounts of the advantage gained by the Americans over the English troops, increased the confusion. The Shaw-nes resolved again to go to war, and turned a deaf ear to their Chiefs, who advised peace. Accounts were received from all quarters that the savages intended to massacre all
the
VII. Apoßty of Chief Newallike and others at Schoenbrunn. 1759

To white people and then all those Indians, who had not joined them in war. The missionaries were always more articularly threatened with death and even the time mentioned when they should be murdered.

During all these commotions, the Chiefs of the Delawares remained firmly resolved, not to interfere in the war between England and her colonies. But the Monifs, one of the Delaware tribes, were secretly contriving to separate themselves from the body of the nation, and to join the Minuks, a set of idle thieves and murderers. However before they publicly avowed their sentiments, they endeavored to gain a party among the enemies of the mission, of whom here were a large number in those parts. At last they even entured to come into our settlements and fought to decoy one to join them.

Newallike, a Chief mentioned in the foregoing history of Friedensuettten on the Susquehannah, was the first in Schoenbrunn who was seduced to turn back into heathenism, pretending, that he had in vain endeavored to believe, but not finding it possible, was now convinced that the Christian doctrine was altogether a fable. Captain White Eye, who himself did not belong to the believers, hearing this, answered: "You went to the Brethren, because you could not find nothing in the world to set your heart at ease, and firmly believed, that you had found with them all you desired. These are the very words I heard you speak, and now, having hardly begun, you give up already, and turn to your former life. This is not acting the part of a man!" The bad example of Newallike was followed by many, and before the missionaries were aware, they found in the midst of Schoenbrunn a party of apostates, who seemed resolved to replace heathenism upon the throne. So severe a stroke those servants of God had not yet felt, and it proved an affliction, infinitely greater than all their former sufferings. They spared no pains, using every possible effort which love could dictate to recover these poor backsliders, so gain their confidence, and lead them to reflect upon.
upon the error of their ways, but all in vain. They therefore resolved, rather than enter into a dispute with so dangerous an enemy, to go out of their way. Added to this, intelligence was received from various places, that the savages, in league with the apostates, were on their way to attack Schoenbrunn. Towards the end of March Brother Zeisberger proposed to the faithful part of the congregation, that they should forfake a place where the Spirit of God had no longer the sway, and move to Lichtenau. The congregation wept aloud on hearing this proposal, but unanimously agreed to it, as the most expedient in the present case, and prepared for their removal. In the mean time the Monsys and the apostate party had nothing left in view, that either to convey the missionaries to Fort Detroit or to murder them. But their attempts proving vain, they spread false, though very probable reports, that the missionaries and the believing Indians were daily in danger of being surprised and murdered by the Huron warriors.

Terrified by succeeding reports, Brother Jungman and his wife, and brother Heckenwaelder, left Schoenbrunn precipitately in the night of April 3d with the first party of the Christian Indians. By the way, several of the latter resolved to settle at Gnadenhuetten for the present, the inhabitants of which were not inclined to fly until they were in greater danger; with the rest the missionaries arrived at Lichtenau on the 4th. But Brother Heckenwaelder returned soon to Schoenbrunn, where he comforted the remaining believers, held meetings in the regular course, and kept as good order as possible; several idle people having already attempted to take possession of the empty houses. April 19th Brother Zeisberger delivered his last discourse in Schoenbrunn. The congregation was much moved, and joined in fervent prayer for the unhappy apostates. Afterwards the chapel was pulled down, as usual in such cases, and all the believers left Schoenbrunn the same day.

It may easily be conceived that the emigration from Schoenbrunn, and the reception of so many perasons in Gnadenhuetten nuetten and Lichtenau was attended with great difficulty and inconvenience. The occasion of it was however by far the safest trouble, and an affliction which the missionaries could soon forget.

In this month the Chiefs of the Delawares again sent duities to the Hurons, among whom were two Brothers from Lichtenau, to assure them that they intended to preserve their neutrality, and at the same time to inform them, that the Delaware nation had received the word of God, and thus publicly taken the white teachers at Lichtenau and Gnadenhuettten under their protection. This was agreeable to the advice of Colonel Morgan in Pittsburg, agent for Government, whom the Indian nations highly respected. They had secretly written to inform him of their intention, to remove the missionaries from the settlements, asking his opinion concerning it. The Colonel replied: "I can say nothing to this. The missionaries themselves must know best, what steps to take, for God has sent them hither. My opinion is, that it would be wrong to compel them to go away, for I cannot but consider such a step as the work of the devil, who seeks to hinder and destroy the good work begun among the Indians. Therefore I advise and desire that you endeavor to keep and protect them among you." As soon as these deputies arrived with the Hurons, it was notified about, that two believing Indians were among them, and that even one of them, Isaac Glikikian, as speaker of the embassy, they immediately said: "Now we shall hear the truth, for the believing Indians tell no lies." The message was well received both by them and the English Government in Detroit, and in June a very satisfactory answer followed, in which the following was said concerning the missionaries: "That the Delawares should consider them as an invaluable treasure, on account of the good they did among the Indians, being the promoters of both their temporal and spiritual welfare. They therefore should deem themselves fortunate in protecting the missionaries, and by no means part with them."

K 3
In 1777 the Americans likewise entered into several treaties with the Indians for peace. As they did not answer the aim intended, a congress of all the Indian nations was appointed to meet at Gofchachguenk in June. The Hurons, who were not inclined for peace, found means to prevent it, and in that same month a large party of them went out to murder and plunder the Americans. They even came into the neighborhood of Gnadenhuetten, and some Indian Sifters who were on a journey to Lichtenau had nearly fallen into their hands, but hearing their death-song at a distance, escaped by flight.

Towards the end of July another treaty of peace was held at Pittsburg. It had hardly begun, when all hopes of peace vanished at once, a party of Americans having fired upon a body of Senneca Indians, who came to attend the treaty. By this step the savages were again enraged at the white people, considered them altogether as traitors, and vowed revenge.

Soon after this, an embassy of twenty deputies from the Hurons arrived in Gofchachguenk. They offered the Delawares the large war-belt three times successively, demanding their assistance to make war against the colonies, and declaring that all the nations on this and the other side of Lake Erie were united as one man, to fight against the colonies. But the Delaware Chiefs remained firmly resolved to preserve peace, returned the war-belt, and sent word to the Huron Chiefs, that they could not comply with their demand, having promised at the treaty of peace, made after the late war, that as long as the sun should shine, and the rivers should flow, they would not fight against the white people; that therefore they had no hand left, to take up the war-belt. The Huron Chiefs returned home, much displeased with this answer, and nothing appeared more probable, than that the Delawares, and of course our sentiments would soon be attacked by the surrounding savages. The missionaries were now continually in danger of their lives. Indeed the believing Indians guarded them by day and night.
night with great faithfulness: but as the danger increased, it was resolved to send some of them home. In May, Brother Heckenwaelder, and in August, Brother Jungman and his wife returned to Bethlehem. The latter having served the Indian congregation for seven years, felt great pain at parting with their beloved flock. God preferred them in many dangers and brought them safe to Bethlehem.

On the very day after their setting out, intelligence was received at Lichtenau that two hundred Huron warriors, headed by their so-called Half-king, were on their march to that place. This caused a general alarm. After mature consideration the Brethren resolved to shew no signs of fear, but to gain these favours by giving them a kind reception. Oxen and pigs were killed and other food provided, and the liberality of the Indian Brethren and Sifters in contributing to these preparations was truly remarkable, for they considered it as the only means of saving the lives of their beloved teachers. August the 8th, the warriors arrived in Gofchachguenk, and upon their meeting a number of our Indians from Lichtenau, carrying provisions for them, their surprise and pleasure were equally great. The good humor which this occasioned was improved by the affiants, who soon after sent a solemn embassy to the Half-king and other Chiefs of the Hurons, Isaac Glikkiken being speaker.

To give my readers an idea how the Christian Indians addressed warriors on such occasions, I will inflict his speech as delivered on the spot:

"Uncle! we, your cousins, the congregation of believing Indians at Lichtenau and Gnadenhuetten, rejoice at this opportunity to see and speak with you. We cleanse your eyes from all the dust and whatever the wind may have carried into them, that you may see your cousin with clear eyes and a serene countenance. We cleanse your ears and hearts from all evil reports which an evil wind may have conveyed into your ears and even into your hearts on the journey, that our words may find entrance into your ears and a place in your hearts." Here he delivered a string of of wampom and proceeded: "Uncle! hear the words of "the believing Indians, your cousins, at Lichtenau and "Gnadenhuetten. We would have you know, that we "have received and believed in the word of God for thirty "years and upwards, and meet daily to hear it, morning "and evening. You must also know, that we have our "teachers dwelling amongst us, who instruct us and our "children. By this word of God, preached to us by our "teachers, we are taught to keep peace with all men, and "to consider them as friends; for thus God has commanded "us, and therefore we are lovers of peace. These our "teachers are not only our friends, but we consider and "love them as our own flesh and blood. Now as we are "your cousin, we most earnestly beg of you, Uncle! "that you also would consider them as your own body, "and as your cousin. We and they make but one body, "and therefore cannot be separated, and whatever you do "unto them, you do unto us, whether it be good or evil." Hereupon another firing of wampom, several fathoms in length, was delivered. The Half-King replied, that these words had penetrated his heart, and that he would immediately consult with his warriors about them. This being done, he returned the following answer to the deputies: "Cousins! I am very glad and feel great satisfaction that "you have cleansed my eyes, ears, and heart from all evil, "conveyed into me by the wind on this journey. I am upon "an expedition of an unusual kind: for I am a warrior and "am going to war, and therefore many evil things, and evil "thoughts enter into my head, and even into my heart. "But thanks to my cousin, my eyes are now clear, so that "I can behold my cousin with a serene countenance. I "rejoice, that I can hear my cousins with open ears and "take their words to heart." He then delivered a firing of wampom, and repeating all the words of the deputies relating to the missionaries, he expressed his approbation of them, and added, "Go on as hitherto, and suffer no one "to molest you. Obey your teachers, who speak nothing "but but good unto you and instruct you in the ways of God, and be not afraid that any harm shall be done unto them.
No creature shall hurt them. Attend to your worship and ever mind other affairs. Indeed you see us going to war; but you may remain easy and quiet, and need not think much about it, &c."

During these transactions the Brethren at Lichtenau were under great apprehensions, fearing the event. The deputies had therefore agreed, that as soon as they should perceive, that the Half-kings spoke in an angry tone, they would send messeengers full speed to Lichtenau, before he concluded his speech, that the whole congregation might take flight.
So much the greater was the joy of all, when the affair took so favorable a turn, and every one felt himself excited to thank and praise the Almighty Savior of his people, for having heard the numberless sights and prayers offered up to him at this critical juncture. The word of Scripture for the day was: "Sing aloud unto God our strength: make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob." Ps. lxxi. 1. This was done with one accord and with a full heart.

The same day the Half-king, the chief captain and eighty-two warriors came to Lichtenau. They were first shown into the school-house, where the missionaries Zeisberger and William Edwards received them. They shook hands with all they met, and the Half-king spoke as follows: "We rejoice to see our father, and to take him by the hand;
from this time forth we will consider you as our father, and you shall own and consider us as your children, nor shall any thing ever disturb your minds in this respect, but our covenant shall remain firm for ever. We will also acquaint the other nations with the proceedings of this day, and they will doubtless rejoice." Brother Zeisberger answered this friendly compliment in a proper maner, after which the missionaries and some Indian Brethren dined with the Half-king and his officers under a hut made of green boughs: the other warriors feasted themselves in the shade in front of the place, and were so richly provided with
with food, that after having made a hearty meal, each could carry a large portion with him to Gofchaehgunek, to which place they all returned in the evening. The Half-King then sent messengers to the English governor in Detroit, and to the Chiefs in the Huron country to give them an account of the covenant made with the believing Indians, adding, that he and his warriors had acknowledged the white Brethren to be their father, and would ever own them as such.

The news of the favorable turn of this dangerous affair not having reached Gnadenhuetten in time, the missionary Brother Schmick and his wife were persuaded, upon the representation of the Indian affitants, who were much alarmed, to fly to Pittsburg, from whence they proceeded to Bethlichem.

Thus the two missionaries, Zeilberger and William Edwards, were left alone, to serve two congregations, twenty miles aunder, with no other prospect, but that of successive troubles. The pain they felt under these circumstances may be more easily conceived than described. But God comforted them and strengthened their faith, so powerfully, that they renewed their covenant, to remain firm in the service of the Indian congregations, and even to suffer death itself. Brother Zeilberger said in Lichtenau and Brother Edwards went to Gnadenhuetten. Yet they paid mutual visits, participating in each other's weal and woe, edifying and encouraging each other. They now plainly perceived, how great a favor the Lord had conferred upon them, by permitting the covenant between the Indian congregation and the Huron warriors to take place at this time. Without this they could not have continued to exercise any ministerial functions, or must have done it in secret. But now they could go safely about in the country, and even to the wildest savages, who treated them with respect and kindness. Many of the latter attended the public worship at Lichtenau, nor did their behavior ever cause the least disturbance. Brother Zeilberger received every day visits from people who came to salute him as their father, and some who were ill, Ch. VII. Account of Gnadenhuetten and Lichtenau. 127

ll, were much pleas’d by his willingness and dexterity in granting them relief.

A great number of other warriors, Hurons, Iroquois, Ottawas, Chippeways, Shawanoes, Wampanos, Petrovontakas, and some French, joined the Half-king. He kept good order, and would not suffer any extravagance. Sometimes above 100 warriors lay all night close to Lichtenau, but behaved so quietly, that they were hardly perceived. Which, among so wild and fierce a people, was a matter of astonishment. The Half-king was particularly attentive to prevent all drunkenness, knowing that bloodshed and murder would immediately follow. He even sent to the Brethren to know, whether his people behaved well, and was glad to hear a good account of them.

The maintenance of so many warriors, and the great numbers who came by hundreds dancing before every house, to beg bread and tobacco, became at last very troublesome to the inhabitants of Lichtenau. They were therefore glad to see them march off on the 22d and 23d of August, especially as so much rum had been lately imported from Pittsburg into these parts, that the whole country around became at last one scene of drunkenness and riot, and the noise and uproar insupportable. But it was now to be feared that the friendly behavior of the Hurons, who were of the English party, might give umbrage to the white people living on the Ohio, and the Delaware Chiefs were hardly able to keep their young warriors quiet, as they were under continual apprehensions of being attacked by the Americans. After some time intelligence was received, that several plans had been formed to surprize and destroy Lichtenau, Gnadenhuetten, and other Delaware towns. But God in mercy defeated them all.

Towards autumn the situation of affairs appeared still more precarious. A dreadful account was received, that an American general had arrived in Pittsburg, who denied quarter to any Indian, whether friend or foe, being resolved to destroy them all. This made the Delawares at length take up arms, alleging, that they must die, whether they fought or not.

Report
Report added, that the Americans would soon march into Gofchachgunck, and one account after the other proclaimed their approach. The Delaware warriors therefore joined the Hurons, who were still in the neighborhood. But the Indian congregation firmly resolved not to take the least step in the war, and to exclude from their fellowship all who did. They could at present take no other determination, than to be ready for flight. A spot of ground on the Walhalding was fixed upon, as a place of rendezvous for the congregations of Lichtenau and Gnadenhuettten, and each family packed up their goods. September 17th, at night, an express arrived at Lichtenau and Gnadenhuettten, with an account of the approach of the enemy. Both congregations immediately fled with their teachers in canoes, and indeed with such precipitation, that they left the greater part of their goods behind. They met, as agreed, at the abovementioned place on the Walhalding, where they encamped, hourly expecting to hear of a bloody engagement in the neighborhood of Lichtenau. Happily before day-break a message arrived, that what had been taken for the American army was nothing but a great number of horses in the woods. However both congregations remained together on the 18th, to see and converse with each other, and their mutual brotherly love and cordiality was truly edifying. On the following day they all returned to their respective homes.

September 23rd, late at night, another message arrived from an American General, and the abovementioned Colonel Morgan in Pittsburg, assuring the Delawares that they had nothing to fear from the Americans. But before the truth was known, a report was spread at Lichtenau that the Americans were in the neighborhood, and every one was again preparing to escape. Brother Zeisberger therefore assembled the congregation after midnight, and acquainted them with the true contents of the message from Pittsburg, upon which all went cheerfully to rest. The Delaware Chiefs returned now to their former stytle of peace.
In the beginning of October, an engagement took place between a party of Hurons and a troop of American free-booters, who went contrary to the express order of the Governor of Pittsburg, to destroy the Delaware towns, and consequently our settlements among the rest. They were entirely defeated by the Half-king, who killed the greatest part of them.

Soon after accounts were received at Lichtenau, that the Delawares on the Cayahoga and Wakalding prepared to go to war. As these proceedings threatened danger both to men and the congregations of believing Indians, Brother Eibberger sent a serious remonstrance to the council of the Delawares in Gofchaguenk, positively declaring that the believing Indians would forfake the country, as soon as the Delawares went to war.

On this account, the Chiefs in all places were assembled to a general council, in which a resolution was taken Oct. 31st, to prefer peace and neutrality without exception.

During this period of confusion and calamity, when the spirit of murder and the power of darkness greatly prevailed, the work of God proceeded unmolested amongst our Indians. The missionaries reported that a revival of grace, and such harmony and brotherly affection appeared among the baptized as is generally observed in their first love. Amidst all disturbances occasioned by the daily marches of warriors through the settlements, they not only did not lose their courage, but were led by various trials to cleave the more closely to the Lord, and to seek help from him. The grace of God is sensibly felt in all the meetings, and the public preaching of the Gospel at Lichtenau, was to numerously attended by Indian Indians, that there was want of room. Many were baptized, and some who had been baptized in other communities, were received as members of the Brethren's congregation. The Indian attendants were peculiarly successful in bearing their testimony of the truth. Several went to Goftchaguenk, to declare the Gospel to the sick, who could not come to Lichtenau, and their visits were richly blessed. Some heathen heathen teachers indeed attempted to oppose them, but not being able to withstand the power of God, they were confounded. There was also so great an awakening among the unbaptized children both at Lichtenau and Gnadenhuette, that the parents knew not how to comfort their children, who wept, begging most fervently to be baptized. Among these were the children of an unbaptized Chief from Affinghi, called Welapachtischiechen, living at Lichtenau. The father came one day to the missionary, saying, that he could not bear to see his children lying on their faces, weeping day and night, knowing that he could not help, but only weep with them, and that at last he considered himself the cause of their affliction. He therefore would recommend them to the missionary, befeecching him not to delay their baptism on his account, adding that he should greatly rejoice, if they were preferred and received holy baptism before him. The same Chief addressed the whole council in Gosehachguten in the following words: “Brethren and friends! We bear alarming accounts from all places, let us therefore pray to God our Savior with so much the greater fervor, that he would help us through these times of danger, for we now stand most in need of his help. I dare not as yet consider myself as belonging to the believers, but yet, I assure you, that I will live and die with these people. Whether the Brethren live, there will I live also. Whither they go, I will follow them. I shall count it a great favor, to die amongst them, and if even I should not experience the grace to be baptized, yet it shall be once said of me, ‘Here lies Welapachtischiechen, who, though he could not be baptized, yet remained a follower of the Christian congregation to his death.’ After this declaration his relations threatened to kill him, unless he left the Brethren. But he was as little influenced by their present threats as by their former flattery, and was soon after baptized. Another awakened Indian, who had obtained leave to live with the Brethren, informed the council of his intentions, declaring that he should not only leave off drunkenness, but renounce the
h. VII. Account of Gnadenhütten and Lichtenau. 138

as heathen manner of living, and remove to Gnadenhütten. he council praised his resolution, and answered: "You have chosen the best and the safest way; for if you move to Gnadenhütten, we can believe that you will cease to be a drunkard, for we know that the believing Indians are sober people." The Lord granted the missionaries that consolation also, to see many of those who were unfaithful at spring, return as repenting prodigals, begging for pardon and readmission. One of these, who lay ill of a painful disorder, was visited by the missionary, to whom he confessed that he himself was the only cause of all his misery, but added, that his heart was dead and had no confidence in our Savior, ec=cuse whenever he thought of returning unto him, he was immediately checked by the greatness of his sins against God and his people, having not only forsaken them, but even pread many evil reports among the savages. He was assured, that he might still obtain mercy and forgiveness through Jesus Christ, who had received gifts for the rebellious also, and at his crucifixion prayed even for his murderers. This proved a word of consolation to his distressed heart.

CHAPTER VIII.

1778. 1779. 1780. 1781.

THe war between England and the United States of America, occasioned a continuation of hostilities among the Indian nations. From 1778 to the middle of 1781 1781 nothing very decisive was done, and the war confined chiefly in small excursions, which though troublesome in a high degree, were yet not productive of much interruption to the Indian congregation. I shall therefore be more brief in my description of this period. It proved a peculiar satisfaction to the missionaries that amidst all difficulties, their correspondence with the Brethren in Pennsylvania was uninterrupted, and as the congregations there were likewise great sufferers by the war, they sympathized with and encouraged each other to endure in patience and faith, hoping confidently for the help of the Lord.

The Hurons continued to commit hostilities against the United States, and the most dreadful accounts were received from time to time of the murders and ravages committed by them and other Indians in the plantations of the white people; and also of the same cruelties exercised against the Indians by the latter. The missionaries and their people were likewise much affected, when on the return of the savage warriors from their murderous expedition, they saw them lead prisoners of both sexes some of whom were wounded and some small children, or carrying dead bodies and scalps through the settlement. Our Indians showed great compassion to the prisoners, gave them food, and would never suffer them to be scourged or otherwise abused in the settlement, as the Indian custom is, whenever they pass through any town with prisoners. Sometimes the brutal savages were greatly enraged at this compassionate prohibition, but they were obliged to obey.

Among these prisoners was an old man, of venerable appearance, and two youths. Our Indians greatly commiserated the former and offered a large sum to the warriors for his release, but in vain. When they arrived at their dwelling-place, the two young men were tortured and burnt alive, in the cruel manner described in the first part of this history. The old man was condemned to suffer the same treatment, but being informed of it by a child, he contrived his escape, was fortunate enough to seize an horse and fled into the woods. The savages pursued him, but he arrived safe at a place in the neighborhood of Lichtenau, and not being able to proceed through hunger, having eaten nothing but grass for ten days, an Indian Brother found him lying in the wood, more like a corpse than a living creature, so that he had much trouble to bring him to Lichtenau, where he was well nursed. He exclaimed: "Merciful God, be praised, that thou hast brought me, wretched creature, to a Christian people! If it be thy will, that I die in this place, I am happy and contented." But he recovered and was afterwards brought to Pittsburg. During this period many troops of warriors were so far prevailed upon by the friendly and reasonable persuasions of our Indian Brethren, that they gave up their murderous intentions and returned home, by which much bloodshed was prevented. Sometimes however the believing Indians had no other way of defending themselves against the robberies and outrages of the warriors, passing either through or near the settlement, than by sending deputies to represent the injustice of their proceedings and delivering firings of wampum.

These troubles were chiefly felt at Gnadenhuetten. Freebooters belonging to the white people infested every quarter, and endangered the lives of our Indians. They were therefore invited to come and settle at Lichtenau for the present, and removed thither in April 1778. Thus three Indian congregations lived on one spot; the chapel at Lichtenau was enlarged and new houses were built.

In the mean time the Delaware Chiefs were repeatedly called upon by the governor of Fort Detroit and the Indian nations in his interest to go to war, threats being often added to intrates. But they remained firm and were supported in their amicable resolutions by the good influence of the missionaires and their Indian affilantes, who thought it a duty owing both to the Indian congregations and to the country at large to abate in preserving the peace, as by the neutrality of the Delawares, many other Indian nations were kept quiet, not being willing to offend the Delaware nation. nation, whom they called their grandfather. The government at Pittsburg owned the department of the Indian congregation to be a benefit conferred upon the whole country, and Colonel Morgan observed with gratitude, that the fury of the Indian warriors was upon the whole greatly mitigated by the behavior of their Christian countrymen.

Thus the mission enjoyed rest and peace for a considerable time, which was the more agreeable, as the troubles had been of long continuance. But the evil-minded Monifs per-sifted unweariedly in their endeavors to set the other Indians against the Delawares, and especially against the believing Indians and their teachers. Added to this, the United States began now to call upon the Delawares to make war against the Indians in the English interest. This caused the chiefs to waver in their resolutions, and at length they resolved to join the English. They not only lost their friendship for the missionaries and the Christian Indians, who persevered in their amicable disposition, but by degrees became their enemies. They now considered all peaceful people as a check upon their wild behavior, and humanly speaking, the Christian Indians had now nothing but ruin before them, the English Indians having unanimously resolved in a council held at Detroit, that the hatchet should fall upon the head of every one, who should refuse to accept it. These in league with the United States being of the same mind, the believers were now between two enemies. The first step taken against them was a serious and repeated charge sent by the Delaware Chiefs to the young men to take up arms. This they firmly refused to do, though their situation was rendered very critical, through a malicious report raised by the Delawares, that the Christian Indians intended to take part with the Americans. The missionaries were in the greatest danger, for to their authority and influence alone, their refusal was arihbed.
The savages therefore frequently repeated their threats, that the missionaries should be either killed, or carried away pilsoners, as they flattered themselves that if these were removed,
the Indian congregation would soon be forced to comply.

About
Ch. VIII. Attempts to carry off the Missionaries.

About this time there appeared numerous instances of the preservation of God. In summer 1778 the missionaries received certain information, that the governor of Detroit intended to send a party of English and Indians to carry them off. Some time after they heard that his design was frustrated by the sudden death of the captain appointed to command this expedition, whose station could not be immediately supplied. Another officer charged the Indians to bring the missionaries dead or alive. They indeed promised, but afterwards neglected to fulfil their word. During the summer of 1779 they were in the most imminent danger, and knew no way to escape. An army consisting of English and Indians, marching from Fort Detroit to Fort Lawrence arrived in Tuskarawii on this side of the Huron towns, and the commanding officer intended to come into the neighborhood of our settlements and to take the missionaries prisoners. But suddenly the news of an attack of the Americans upon the Indian country cauized all the Indians in his army to forsake him, upon which he was obliged to return to Detroit. Brother Schenck on a journey to Pittsburg, got between two parties, one pursuing the other, and did not hear of his danger till after his escape. Several messengers sent out by the Brethren upon necessary business to various places were in danger of being murdered by people, lying purposely in ambush, but God preserved their lives.

That word of scripture was also frequently fulfilled, "The Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought: he maketh the devices of the people of none effect." The Half-kings of the Hurons cautioned the missionaries to be upon their guard, having received authentic information, that a plot was laid against their lives, but particularly against Brother Zeisberger. Some malicious people took great pains to publish a false report, that this missionary was going over to the Americans with all the baptized Indians. The great danger he was in being mentioned to him by letter, his answer was: "If I am in danger, I cannot prevent it, but I commit my work, my fate and my future course to my gracious Lord and Master,"
"Master, whom I serve. I remain cheerful and confident, "though I shall use all caution, not to expose myself without "necessity." Once he had a very narrow escape. A white man from Sandusky, meeting with another who headed a troop of robbers and murderers of the Mingues nation, heard him say, that he hoped to be fortunate enough to carry either all or at least one of the white Brethren to Detroit. This was related to Brother Zeibeger, but being accustom to such threats, he disregarded them and went about as usual. Being upon a journey with two Indian Brethren, this white man met him with eight Mingues and a prisoner. As soon as he saw the missionary, he called to the party: "See "here is the man whom we have long wished to see and to "secure; do now as you think proper!" The captain of the Mingues said nothing in reply, but thook his head. After a few questions they walked off. An officer marching from Detroit to Fort Lawrence in 1779 told a white man, that one of his principal views in this expedition was to carry off the missionaries, especially Zeibeger. Upon his representing to him, that the missionaries had done no harm to the English, but were of great benefit in civilizing the Indians, the officer replied, that this was well known, but that if they were removed, then not only the Delawares but many other tribes would join their army.

All the accounts received about this time agreed, that the destruction of the Indian congregations was resolved upon. This proved a great temptation to such as were not well established in the faith, and their fears prevailed upon them to leave the Brethren for a time. But in this circumstance, the mercy of the Lord was peculiarly evident. He had patience with their weaknss, and preferred them from the snares of sin, so that they did not suffer damage in their souls. They soon returned, and were ashamed of their want of faith.

The political divisions among the Delawares increased daily. Several took flight, but knew not for what reason. Yet they left their homes, their plantations and crops. Our Indians remained quiet, depending upon God, and many of them and, even in this evil day, an opportunity to bear to the truth. An American General had once conversation with the Indian Brother John Mar- ring various questions to him concerning his faith and ings, which he answered to the General's satisfaction nishment. John Martin then added: "Indeed I t read in the Bible, but I know what is written in it, y been instructed by my teachers. Now the General read the Bible himself, and soon know, whether what of God, be true."—"Very true," replied the General, u have said is true, and I am glad to see an Indian ou. I am now convinced that you are no more hea-but Christian Indians, and I will assist and serve you, ch as lies in my power."
Gnadenhutten and Schoenbrunn rebuilt.

The Indian congregations were continually troubled by rms, Colonel Gibson gave the missionaries an invitation- retire with their people to Fort Lawrence or at least in the neighborhood of this fort. This was the more to the governor of Pittsburg, as the troops of the States were obliged to spare the enemy on account of ements, but if they were removed, he knew they save none but enemies to deal with. This kind offer however not be accepted with propriety, as the war ays most violent near the forts. Fort Lawrence was ce besieged by the Indians and at length forsaken by ericans. The Shawanoe gave likewise a friendly in-to all the believing Mahikans or Momy Indians in gregation, to move into their country, bring their them and keep to their modes of worship. But gregation would not be divided, and remained quiet. on appeared that Lichtena was too much crowded habitants. A resolution was therefore taken in 1779 rt of the congregation should return to Gnaden-, and that Schoenbrunn should be rebuilt, though not the same spot. but on the opposite bank of the Musk- Gnadenhutten was soon restored to its former nd Brother Edwards appointed minister. The building of Schoenbrunn was attended with greater difficulties than usual. That part of the congregation, which had gone thither with Brother Zeitberger, dwelt for the greater part of the year in huts, and met to worship in the open air, till at length they could move into the new town in December 1779, and consecrate the church.

Lichtenau had been served by Brother John Heckenwelder, who returned to the mission with Brother Schebofch, and ever since 1778, and hitherto been always the fittest and safest place of residence for the Christian Indians, but now the people of Gotchachguenk, having changed their minds with respect to them, endeavored to molest them in various ways. The robberies, drunkenness, and consequent outrages, incessantly committed by the savages, became an insupportable burden to the congregation. Added to this, the waris made it now a constant practice to pass through Lichtenau. It was therefore thought most prudent to quit this place, and build a new settlement. A spot about five miles below Gnadenhuetten was fixed upon, and the settlement called Salem. March 30th, 1780, the last meeting was held at Lichtenau, and the congregation united to praise God for all the blessings received from him in this place. The chapel was then pulled down and the congregation set out; but though Salem was only twenty miles from Lichtenau, a week was spent in performing the journey, as they were obliged to row against the stream. The building of this new settlement, was by the assent of the Brethren from Schoenbrunn and Gnadenhuetten and the diligence of its inhabitants carried on with such expedition, that already on the 22d of May the new church could be consecrated. The day after they partook of the holy communion, and on the 28th, baptism was administered for the first time at Salem. In December 1780 the buildings were completed and many strange Indians visited this settlement.

But even here the evil-minded Delaware Chiefs fought to molest our Indians. They agreed that all the inhabitants of Gotchachguenk, who would not go to war, should settle in the vicinity of Salem. All remonstrances made by our Indians, were in vain. Their evil intentions were however frustrated.
Ch. VIII. Internal State of the Mission.

139

As to the internal state of the congregation, this period was distinguished by particular grace. The missionaries lived in harmony, serving the Lord with gladness. Among the Indian Brethren and Sisters brotherly love bore the way, and it was a pleasure to observe the willingness with which they avoided every thing that might tend to disturb it. The labor of the Holy Ghost in their hearts was so evident, that the missionaries forgot all their sufferings for joy. A sermon preached upon our Savior's parable of the sower, gave occasion to many to examine their hearts. One said that he had found himself described in it, for with him the seed had fallen by the way-side and was trodden down and eaten up by the birds. Another was afraid that the word had fallen among thorns, because he found his good resolutions striving against those that were bad, and that he could not devote himself wholly unto the Lord. A third complained that his heart was yet flaky, in which the word could not take root. But the moth, not being able to deny that in them the gracious word of the Gospel had fallen upon good ground, thanked our Savior in fullness for such undeserved mercy. A missionary speaking with an Indian Brother previous to the Lord's supper, addressed him thus: "Tell me, how is your heart disposed at present?" He replied: "You could not have asked me a more agreeable question: I am ready to answer it every day, and if you were even to wake me at night, I should want no time to consider, for my Savior has given me such an heart, that I am as willing to lay my wants and deficiencies open before my brethren, as to describe the happiness I enjoy." One of the baptized complained to his teachers, "that he had lost our Savior." He was asked, what he meant by this expression, and replied: "I thought I would lead a life altogether void of offence, and used to judge others who have been longer in the congregation than myself, whenever I thought them guilty of any thing which..."
"which appeared to me not quite conformable to the conduct of a child of God. I was resolved to be better in them, and to keep all the promises I had made to our Savior.
"At length I was satisfied with myself, forgot Him, and am "now an orphan without him." Another of the newly bat-tized said to his mother and friends in Gofchachquenek:
"You are perhaps of opinion, that there is nothing real in "the great Gospel of Christ and his atonement, and that we "only talk of it. I also thought so formerly, and made it a "laughing-stock. But now I can inform you by experience "that it is great and marvellous, and that the power of God
"seizes and melts my heart, when I hear what our Savior has done and suffered for us, and how much it cost him to de"liver us lost and undone human creatures from the power "of Satan." Two old men began to question a baptized youth concerning his faith, and one of them challenged him to spend the night with him in dispute, saying, that he wished to see whether a mere boy would be able to give proper answers to the questions and arguments of an hoary head.
But before their conversation had lasted long, the old man declared himself satisfied, and admonished the youth to remain among the believers as long as he lived, adding, "I am "too old and callous, to think of believing." Another bat-tized Indian declared to a visitor: "I now do not believe "our white teachers in things relating to my salvation, be"cause they say so; but before I was baptized I was convinc'd of my forlorn estate and then learnt to believe, that "Jesus Christ is my Savior and Redeemer. After my baptism, I experienced a total change within me. My heart "was filled with the love of God and I was inexpressibly "happy. I still feel the same, because our Savior has forgiven me my sins and washed me in his precious blood."

During the public sermon, there was frequently such a general emotion and weeping, that the missionary was obliged to stop. Many visitors were overpowered by the grace of God, and as many as became obedient to the Gospel, were baptized. Among the latter were two white persons, John Leach
th and his wife. He had lived many years among the Ians, and his wife was taken by the savages as a child of a year old. Some strange Indians, hearing that miracles were wrought at Lichtenau, came to see and hear of them.
Indian Brethren asserted, that undoubtedly miracles were done even now, of which they had perhaps never heard in their lives, and then related, that God the Creator of all was manifest in the flesh to save sinners, and that he carefully saved them, even here in Lichtenau. That this his to us was above all comprehension, and that we should in eternity never cease to marvel at the wonders of grace. The heathen heard this testimony with great astonishment, and as Isaac Gliickkan, one of their witnesses of the kingdom, retired to rest, it being midnight, one of the heathen, his former companion, stopped him, saying: "We came formerly to spend many a night in fasting and drinking, and never felt disposed to sleep; let us once pass right in considering this great subject, and speak ably about it." Isaac gladly consented and thus they sat the night in asking and answering questions concerning what the Lord Jesus had done and suffered for us. A native Indian, from the banks of the Mississippi, came to his house, and having given the missionary a circumstantial account of his travels, of the face of the country on the issippi and of its inhabitants, added: "Thus have I seen about, till I am grown old and grey. I have taken great pains to find something profitable for myself and my children, but have not found any thing good. With you find at once all I wanted; and the cause of my staying so long is, that I may hear as much as possible, and have nothing to relate to my countrymen, on my return." A woman said to one of the baptized Indians after a son: "I could very well live among you, and believe in God, for I am not as bad and wicked as many others, but have always avoided every sinful practice." The Indian ther replied: "I once thought the fame of myself, and seemed myself more righteous than other Indians. But "during
"during a discourse I was convinced, that I was the worst of all, I even thought that our Savior had suffered more on my account. Upon this I cast myself at his feet with all my sins, and he forgave me. Now I know of no other good in me, but that I am a ransomed sinner, and shall live eternally with my Redeemer. This is enough for me." Abraham an afflictant, closed a discourse to the visitors with the following words: "Now we have told you, how you may be saved. If you believe, you will experience that our words are truth. But if you do not, we have however done what we ought to do, and you will never be able to say, that you went to the believing Indians, but they would not tell you how to be saved." An Indian from the river Wabash inquired very minutely of the Indian Brethren at Lichtenau, what their faith was, and what could possibly cement them so together, adding, that he believed it to be some mysterious charm. In answer to this, his own brother, who was baptized, took occasion to declare unto him the love and mercy of Jesus Christ with great energy. But before he had proceeded far, he was stopped by the heathen, who exclaimed: "I have enough; cease, I beseech you, for your words pierce me to the soul. I cannot express what I feel; but this I perceive, that I give way to it, I should be unfit for my office, as messenger to the Indian nations." Another heathen Indian came weeping to the missionary and said: "During the sermon to-day something extraordinary has entered into my heart, which makes me uneasy. I am convinced that I am a miserable and depraved creature, and that the evil spirit rules over me, and my soul must be lost to all eternity, unless a change takes place." A murderer, being present at a baptism, and getting upon a form, to have a full view of the ceremony, was so moved, that he crept under the seats. He entered afterwards into conversation with Isaac Gilkissan and among other things asked him, whether he knew where the devil lived. "That I do," replied Isaac, "he lives in your heart." An heathen Shawano said upon another occasion:
Ch. VIII. Internal State of the Mission. 143

occasion: "When I first came hither, and heard you speak "so much of the wretchedness and depravity of the human "heart, I thought, 'Well said, God grant the believing In- "dians may begin to mend their lives, for they seem to be "very bad people. I am not so wicked, and commit no sins, "but please my God. I have also always endeavored to serve "him and sacrificed enough. But lately I was convinced "at your chapel, that I am a very sinful man, and that it "is exactly in my heart as in that old basket;" pointing to "an old basket full of rubbish, which happened to stand in "the room. "The more I formerly felt my pride and self- "complacency, the more I am now humbled, so that I can "hardly venture to look at a believer, and I desire most fer- "vently, that our merciful Savior would have pity on me "and forgive my sins." He then began to weep aloud. Some time after, this penitent was baptized into the death of Jesus, being the first of the Shawanoe in this country, who was added to the Christian church. He was so over- come with gratitude, that long after he said to Brother Heckenwaelder: "My eyes are all day filled with tears "of joy, and whenever I awake at night, my first thought "is, that our Savior was tormented and slain for my sins. "Therefore he shall possess my whole heart, yea and even "the smallest bone in my body." Ever since his baptism, the death and sufferings of Jesus were so precious to him, that he spoke of them to all who visited him, telling them, that he was no more afraid of death, being assured that his soul was redeemed and saved by the death of his Savior.

The labor of the Holy Ghost was more particularly per- ceptible in the sick and dying: a sick girl six years old, said with tears: "I now desire nothing more in this world, but "to be baptized, and cleansed by the blood of Jesus to whom "I wish to depart." Her request was granted to her great joy. An Indian woman, to whom holy baptism was ad- ministered on her death-bed, could not sleep the following night for joy, and said: "I now with the sooner the better..."
“to depart to Christ, and do not desire to recover.” The day before he died, she asked: “What can make our Saviour delay, that he does not take me unto himself?” She was assured that he would soon grant her request. The day following she exclaimed: “Now he appears,” and soon after expired. A boy of eight years old, lately baptized, met shortly before his departure for Brother Zeitberger and said: “Now I shall depart, but what do I do?” Brother Zeitberger answered: “You have put on the right dress in holy baptism, when you were clothed with the blood and righteousness of Christ Jesus your Saviour: you want nothing else.” The boy replied: “True, O how do I rejoice!” and during Brother Zeitberger’s prayer he departed gently and happily. A sick Indian woman, got her friends to carry her to Lichtenau, and begged Brother Zeitberger to pay her a visit. When he came, she said: “Ah, how glad am I that I am here! I am a miserable creature: I have done nothing all my life, but committed one sin after the other. Indeed I knew not what I did, and was concerned about it, but now that I am taken ill, I tremble for fear. All my sins appear before me, and I am afraid to die.” Brother Zeitberger described that Savior to her, who had destroyed him that had the power of death, that is the devil. She received and believed the Gospel, turned with her whole heart to Jesus Christ, and was soon after baptized. All present rejoiced over this poor sinner, and the serenity visible in her countenance after her baptism astonished every one, but particularly the strangers. She afterwards repeated several times the following ejaculation: “Merciful Savior, take me now home unto thyself.” And soon after added: “It will soon happen, very soon. Our Savior is standing ready. O Jesus take me home.” At last she exclaimed, “Now, now I am going!” and fell asleep. Besides these few mentioned here, many more of our Indians departed unto the Lord. Among these was an old man, who must have been considerably above an hundred ed years old, for he remembered the time, when in 1683 the first house was built in Philadelphia, in which he had been as a boy.

A Swiss, called Lange, who had set up a blacksmith's shop in Gofchachguenk, was at his particular request in his illness, conveyed in a sleigh to Lichtenau and complained Brother Heckenwaelder of the wretched state of his soul.
Among other expressions he said: "Ah what a sinner am I, it is impossible, that a greater should exist any where."
Other Heckenwaelder then preached the Gospel unto him, praying him that Jesus Christ had died his precious blood for the poor sinners, and would receive even the worthy in mercy, if he only sought pardon with a sincere heart. This drew him such an effect upon the patient, that he received mercy and departed with joy unto the Lord.

Captain White Eye, who had so often advised other In-ans, with great earnestness, to believe in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, but had always postponed joining the beers himself, on account of his being yet entangled in political concerns, was unexpectedly called into eternity, and died of the small-pox at Pittsburg. The Indian congregation to whom he had rendered very essential services as much affected at the news of his death, and could not but hope, that God our Savior had received his soul mercy.

That the Christian Indians could fervently pray, not only for their friends, but also for their enemies and sincerely for them well, was very striking and incomprehensible to the heathen. The apostolic part of the congregation, who at Schoenbrunn in 1777, were more especially an object of their prayers; for notwithstanding their malicious behavior, they never would consider them as enemies, but rather as true friends. They had also the joy to find that their "counsellors were graciously heard by the Lord; for most of these unfortunate people, especially the deluded young people, returned as repenting prodigals and begged earnestly for pardon and readmission. This was granted in presence of the whole
whole congregation, whose tears of compassion and joy on such occasions testified of that brotherly love, which distinguiished true disciples of Jesus. Most of them were also received as inhabitants of the new settlements and some, died comforted and rejoicing in the Lord their Redeemer. As to the external maintenance of the believing Indians in these heavy times, we cannot sufficiently extol the bounty of our gracious heavenly Father. Besides their own, they had to supply the wants of great numbers of their hungry and suffering countrymen. But all things were added unto them. They had success in hunting, and plentiful crops, so that not one lacked any thing.

In May 1780 Brother Grube, then minister of Lititz in Pennsylvania, went to hold a visitation in the Indian congregations. Brother Sendemaen and his wife, who were appointed to the service of the mission, went in his company, as likewise the single Sister Sarah Ohneberg who afterwards married John Heckenwaelder. They paffed over high hills, in the Seidling, Alleghene and Laurel, which was particularly troublesome to Brother Grube, who had been hurt by the kick of an horse. At Pittsburg he preached the Gospel to a congregation of Germans, and baptized several children, no ordained clergyman being then resident in the country. From this place the Indian Brethren brought him and his company safe to the settlements. The Governor of Pittsburg, Colonel Broadhead, and Colonel Gibson, treated these travellers with great kindness. The latter gave them a travelling tent, and assisted them in every thing requisite for their safe conveyance, as the roads to our settlements were at that time infested with hostile Indians. Indeed the Brethren soon experienced a proof of this. Three white people, who were seeking to get Indian scalps, a large premium being then given for them, lay in ambush near the road, and shot at an Indian, who was but a little way before Brother Grube and his company. But providentially the ball passed only through his shirt sleeve, and the other Indians taking the alarm, the men who lay in wait jumped up and ran off. June 30th, the whole company arrived safe in Schoen-brunn, VIII. Inspection held by Brother Grube of Litiz.

runn, and their arrival gave inexpressible joy to the missionries and their congregations.

Brother Grube paid visits to all the settlements, staying some time in each, conversing with every individual, even with all the children, and rejoiced greatly at the open and unrefined behavior of both old and young. Besides this, he held many conferences, both with the missionaries, to whom his visit proved a great encouragement, and with the Indian assistants. The discourses he delivered to the congregation and its divisions were likewise attended with dis-inguished blessing.

August the 15th this venerable man set out on his return, accompanied by Brother Schebosch. At taking leave all the people were in tears. Though he was taken very ill on the journey, he proceeded, and arrived September the 2d, at Litiz, thanking God for his deliverance from so many danger.

In November 1780, Brother Schebosch returned and brought Brother Michael Jung from Bethlehem to serve the mission. In spring 1781 the missionary David Zeisberger travelled to Bethlehem, and notwithstanding the danger of the roads, was providentially brought safe to the end of his journey.
CHAPTER IX.

1781.

The Missionaries Zeisberger and Jungman return to the Settlements. A short Time of Rest. Unexpected Arrival of a Troop of Warriors. The Missionaries are taken Prisoners: released and carried with the whole Indian Congregation to Sandusky Creek. Their Distresses in that Place. Most of the Missionaries are brought to Fort Detroit: examined and honorably acquitted. They return to their Congregations.

In the year 1779 Bishop John Frederic Reichel arrived from Europe to hold a visitation in all the Brethren's settlements and congregations in North America, having a particular charge to endeavor to procure some real and substantial relief for the afflicted Indian congregations. But the disturbances then prevailing, and his other avocations prevented him from travelling into the Indian country. He was therefore glad to be circumstantially informed of everything relating to that mission, first by the report made by Brother Grube after his visitation and afterwards by Brother Zeisberger himself during his abode in Bethlehem in the summer of 1781. He conferred about the future management of the concerns of the Indian mission both with the latter and with Brother Jungman and his wife, who were again willing to devote themselves to its service. He also wrote a letter of encouragement to each missionary and assistant in that important work, with whom he could not personally converse, exhorting them to persevere in faith in their difficult but blessed labor. He likewise sent a letter to the whole Indian congregation, full of comfort and wholesome advice, admonishing and beseeching them to continue...

scenes of distress, hitherto unexperienced and unprecedented.

The most authentic evidence has proved, that the prime cause of all their trouble was a suspicion entertained by the English governor at Fort Detroit, that our Indians were partizans in the American cause, and that the missionaries were set as spies, to carry on a correspondence prejudicial to the English interest. This suspicion was originally owing to the slumeries of the enemies to the mission, and was by them so successfully kept up and aggravated, that the governor of Fort Detroit resolved at last, to rid himself at once of neighbors so troublesome and dangerous. In this view the English agent of Indian affairs went to Niagara, to attend the great council of the Iroquois, of whom he requested that they would take up the Indian congregation and their teachers and carry them away. This the Iroquois agreed to do, but not being willing themselves to lay hands upon them, they sent a message to the Chippewas and Ottawas, intimating that they herewith made them a present of the Indian congregation to make foul of, which in the war-language of the Indians signifies "We deliver them over to you, to murder them." The Chippewas and Ottawas refused, declaring that they had no reason to do so. Upon this the same message was sent to the above-mentioned Halfking of the Hurons. This man, who formerly treated both the believing Indians and the missionaries with great kindness, accepted of it, but declared, that he only did it to save the believing Indians from total destruction. However even the Halfking would certainly never have agreed to commit this act of injustice, had not the Delaware Captain Pipe, a noted enemy of the Gofpel and of the believing Indians, and the most active enumerator of the Brethren at Detroit, instigated him to do it.

Pipe and his party of Delawares having joined the Halfking and his warriors with some few Shawanoes, they all assembled to a war-feast, for which they roasted a whole ox. Here they conferred more particularly about the best mode of proceeding, proceeding, but cautiously, so that only the captains knew the true design of the expedition. Their order was, to bring the millionnaires, dead or alive, and the whole busines was conducted with such secrecy that our Indians did not hear the least of it till the beginning of August, when news arrived that a party of savage warriors were on their march.
Ch. IX. Transactions at Gnadenhuetten.

At first, hopes were conceived that this rumor was fabulous. But on the 10th of August the savages made their appearance first in a troop of an hundred and forty, their number gradually increasing to three hundred and upwards. They were commanded by the Half-king of the Hurons, an English captain, and the Delaware Captain Pipe, bearing English colours, which were planted in their camp. When they approached to Salem, the Half-king sent a message to our Indians, desiring them to fear nothing, adding, that he came himself to see that no injury should be done to them; but having good words to speak, he wished to know which of their settlements would be most convenient for a meeting.

Now as Gnadenhuetten was in every respect the most proper place, it was accordingly fixed upon. The warriors therefore pitched their camp on the 11th of August on the west side of Gnadenhuetten, and were treated in the most liberal manner by our Indians.

In the beginning the behavior both of the English officer and the savages was friendly. But on the 20th of August the Half-king appointed a meeting of the believing Indians and their teachers, and delivered the following speech:

"Cousins! ye believing Indians in Gnadenhuetten, Schoen-brunn, and Salem! I am much concerned on your account, perceiving that you live in a very dangerous spot. Two powerful, angry, and mercifless Gods stand ready, opening their jaws wide against each other: you are sitting down between both, and thus in danger of being devoured and ground to powder by the teeth of either one or the other, or of both. It is therefore not advisable for you to stay here any longer. Consider your young people, your wives and M 2 and your children, and preserve their lives, for here they must all perish. I therefore take you by the hand, lift you up, and place you in or near my dwelling, where you will be safe and dwell in peace. Do not stand looking at your plantations and houses, but arise and follow me!
Take also your teachers with you, and worship God in the place to which I shall lead you, as you have been accustomed to do. You shall likewise find provisions, and our father beyond the lake (meaning the governor of Fort Detroit) will care for you. This is my message, and I am come hither purposely to deliver it." He then delivered a string of wampum, and the millionaries and Indian assistants of the three settlements met in conference, to consider the unexpected address, and on the 21st the latter delivered the following answer to the Half-king: "Uncle! and ye captains of the Delawares and Mohawks, our friends and countrymen! Ye Shawanofo, our nephews, and all ye other people here assembled! We have heard your words; but have not yet seen the danger so great, that we might not stay here. We keep peace with all men, and have nothing to do with the war, nor do we wish or desire any thing, but to be permitted to enjoy rest and peace. You see yourselves, that we cannot rise immediately and go with you, for we are heavy, and time is required to prepare for it.
But we will keep and consider your words, and let you, uncle! know our answer next winter, after the harvest;
upon this you may rely."

The Half-king would undoubtedly have been satisfied with this answer, had not the English officer and Captain Pipe urged him to proceed. The consequence was, that the Half-king, in a rough speech held on the 25th, expressed great displeasure at the answer of the believing Indians. This was answered by a repeated remonstrance, that his commands were too severe, and that he should only permit the inhabitants of the three settlements to make good their harvest, as they would otherwise be reduced to famine and extreme...
Ch. IX.  Transactions at Gnadenhütten.  153 extreme distress, in attempting to travel to so distant and unknown a country with empty hands. To these remonstrances the Half-king listened with silence. In the mean time the common warriors endeavored to describe the country intended for our people, as a paradise, and by these lies made an impression upon the minds of some, unacquainted with their cunning, who were not unwilling to follow the Half-king. Thus a division arose among our Indians. Some advised, to rise and go with the Half-king, without considering the consequences. Others, and by far the greater number, opposed this measure, declaring that they would rather die on the spot.

This caused great perplexity in the minds of the missionaries. They were now obliged to decide, and plainly saw that they would offend either one or the other party. The more they fought to extricate themselves from this dilemma, the more they discovered themselves befog on all sides. However the meetings continued in their regular course, and the missionaries persevered in exhorting, encouraging, comforting and directing the congregation to put their trust in the Lord, to whom they themselves prayed day and night for deliverance. But at this time his ways seemed truly unsearchable, and they knew not what to ask or pray for. They had nothing left, but to be resigned to His wife leading, and to expect the event in quietness and silence, so that their prayers were all centered in that one petition, "Thy will be done," yet they believed it to be most prudent, to wait the issue, and not to follow the savages, but by compulsion, that if the congregation was brought to distress and misery, they might not be liable to blame and reproach on that account.

It once seemed as if the Half-king would entirely forswear his intentions of using violent measures, but the English officer urged him and his captains to take the missionaries prisoners, alleging, that if he returned to Fort Detroit without them, the governor would be very much dissatisfied. To add to this calamity, some of our people proved unfaithful, and even innuendoed to the savages, that if they only feigned upon the missionaires and carried them off, the rest of the congregation would soon follow. Others were so weak, that upon being asked, whether they would follow the Hal-king, they replied: "We look to our teachers; what they do, we will do likewise." Thus the whole blame fell upon the missionaires, and they became the main object of the resentment of the savages. Besides this an unfortunate circumstance rendered their situation still more precarious. They had dispatched two Indian Brethren to Pittsburg to give notice of the danger they were in, but without giving them any letters. These messengers were intercepted by the savages, brought back and strictly examined. They told the truth, and nothing prejudicial to the Half-king appeared in it. But the savages would not give up their suspicions, that the missionaires had sent to call the Americans to their asser-ance. The heads of the party had several consultations in which, as some of them related afterwards, they resolved to kill all the white Brethren and Sisters. However they wished first to know the opinion of a common warrior, who was highly esteemed among them as a forcerer. His answer was, that he could not understand, what end it would answer to kill the white Brethren: that this would only increase the evil, for the chief people among the believing Indians would still exist, if even their teachers were slain. The captain therefore held another council in which they resolved, to kill not only the missionaires and their wives but also all the Indian assistants. This resolution was likewise communi-cated to the forcerer. He then said: "Thus you have re-solved to kill my dearest friends, for most of their chief people are my friends, but this I tell you, that if you hurt any one of them, I know what I will do." They were terrified at his threats and gave up their design.

The savages now became more bold, dancing and making merry in the settlement. Though nothing was denied them, but they were supplied with as much meat as they wanted, yet they shot at the horned cattle and pigs in the road, not did they suffer the carcasses to be taken away, so that the place was soon filled with insupportable stench. Small es of them made inroads into the neighboring country, ging prisoners to Gnadenhuette, which was thus ren- d a theatre of war and pillage.
IX. The Missionaries made Prisoners.

t length the Half-king called the white Brethren from enbrun and Salem with all the Indian affiants to denhuetten. Some of them however could not forsake places, wishing to keep order and to protect the filters children from the insults of the savages. But the mission- Zeitberger, Senfeman and Heckenwelder, with some he affiants, arrived there on the 2d of September, soon perceived that they should not be well treated. Ac- ting to their own expression it appeared as though the le atmosphere was inflected with evil spirits.

they were soon summoned before a council of war, and 1alf-king insisted upon their giving an immediate answ, ther they would go with him or not, without retiring to ult upon it? But as the missionaries appealed to the answ already, declaring, that they intended to abide by it, the shly broke up without further debate. A Delaware tin then called upon Brother Zeitberger and told him in t, that being adopted as one of the Delaware nation and quently one flesh and bone with them, the Delawares were willing to protect him. But as this protection neant to extend only to him and not to his fellow-laborers, shyly refused the captain's offer; upon which both he and wo other missionaries were immediately seized by a party uron warriors and declared prisoners of war. As they dragged off into the camp a Huron Indian aimed a push rther Senfeman's head with a weapon resembling a s, but missed his aim. Upon this a Monfy approached missionaires, and seizing them by the hair, shook them, g out in a tone of derision: "Welcome among us, my ends!"

hey were then led into the camp of the Delawares, where leath-fong was sung over them. During these transac- the Hurons, fearing the resentment of our Indians, Cruel Treatment of the Missionaries. P. III.

loaded their guns with great haste, and appeared in such a panic, that they hardly knew what they did. They then fired the missionaries to their shirts and took away their clothes. Meanwhile the whole troop of common warriors ran into the missionaries' house, which they plundered and damaged in a dreadful manner. Indeed some of our young Indians had placed themselves before the house door, armed with hatchets to keep the savages in awe, but they were soon obliged to yield to numbers. However they suffered Brother Edwards to go out unhurt. Not chusing to share a better fate than his Brethren, he went to them into the camp and was made prisoner.

They were now all led into the tent of the English officer, who seeing the pitiable condition they were in, expressed some compassion, and declared that this treatment was utterly against his intention, though indeed the governor at Detroit had given orders to take them away by force, if they refused to go willingly. Having received here some rags to cover themselves, they were now led to the camp of the Hurons, and secured in two huts, the Brethren Zeilberger and Heckenwaelder in one and Edwards and Senfeman in the other. The savages were going to confine the latter in the rocks, but upon his representing to them that that caution was quite needless, they desisted. Nor were the Brethren bound like other prisoners, but only carefully watched. Here they sat upon the bare ground, having nothing to screen them from the cold at night.

Soon after they had been thus secured, they saw a number of armed warriors marching off for Salem and Schoenbrunn, and the consideration of what their families would suffer, was a greater torment to their afflicted minds, than any insult offered to their own persons. About thirty savages arrived in Salem in the dusk of the evening and broke open the mission-house. Here they took Brother Michael Jung, Sister Heckenwaelder and her child prisoners, the former having narrowly escaped being killed by a tomahawk, aimed at his head. Having led them into the street, and plundered the house houfe of every thing they could take with them, they destroyed what was left, and brought Brother Michael Jung about midnight to Gnadenhuetten, finging the death-fong. He was confined in the fame hut with the Brethren Zeilberger and Heckenwaelder. As to Sister Heckenwaelder, the favages were prevailed upon by the interceffion of the Indian Sisters to leave her at Salem till the next morning, when she and her child were safely conducted by our Indians to Gna-denhuetten.

During the fame night fome Hurons came to Schoenbrunn, and suddenly broke into the missionaries' houfe, where they feized the milifonary Jungman and his wife, and the Sifter Zeilberger and Senfeman who were already in bed. Without even giving them time to drefs, they femed in haffe and out of breath to tell them, that between thirty and forty warriors were on the road to murder them, that they therefore should immediately deliver themselves up to them as prisoners of war, and thus fave their lives under their protecition; that they would pack up their things and bring them all safe to Gnadenhuetten, where they should be returned to them.
The poor frighted women believed their words, and Sifter Zeilberger even helped the robbers to pack up, till the faw that the beds were cut to pieces and the feathers shook out into the street, in the fame manner as was done at Gnadenhuetten and Salem. Having also plundered the church of every thing, the favages fet off with their booty and prisoners, and proceeded by water to Gnadenhuetten. No one was more to be pitted, than Sifter Senfeman, who had been brought to bed but three days before, and now with her infant was hurrried away by these merciless barbarians, in a dark and rainy night. But God who does all things well, did not fuffer either her or the child to receive the leaft injury, by imparting to her an uncommon degree of strength and fortitude.
Had he been too weak to follow the favages, the and her infant would have been infantly murdered, according to their usual pradice in similar cafes. September 4th early, they led this company into Gnadenhuetten, finging the deathfong.
fong. When the Brethren Zeilberger and Senfeman for their wives led captive in procession, I must leave my reader to guess what their feelings must have been, not knowing how this affair would end.

The day following the prisoners obtained permission to see and speak with each other. This produced a scene so moving and interesting, that even the savages seemed struck with astonishment and remorse. The Sifters, who behaved with great composure and resignation, bearing every insult with exemplary patience, were soon set at liberty, as was also Brother Jungmann; but as the missionaries' house was almost deserted, they went to lodge in the house of Brother Sheboch, who had not been taken prisoner, being considered as a native Indian, having altogether adopted the Indian manner of living and married an Indian woman. Here the prisoners were allowed to visit them now and then, and they had the same leave to return their visits. The savages were meanwhile fretting about in the clothes taken from the missionaries, and even compelled their wives to make shirts for them of the linen they had robbed them of.

The night following some malicious people spread a report, that the wives of the missionaries had effected their escape and were gone to Pittsburgh. All was uproar and confusion. Brother Heckenwaelder was waked and examined about it, and though he assured the warriors, that the Sifters were nowhere but in their own lodgings in bed, they would not believe it, till they had searched their sleeping place and there found his assertion to be true.

In the beginning of these proceedings the behavior of the believing Indians much resembled the conduct of the disciples of our blessed Savior. They forsook their teachers and fled. When they arrived together in the woods, they lit up their voices and went so loud, that the air resounded with their lamentations. But soon recollecting themselves, they returned, and having recovered many things belonging to the missionaries, even out of the hands of the robbers, or paid for them, returned them to the owners. They likewise brought blankets to the prisoners, to cover themselves in the cold nights, but secretly and late in the evening, they keep back early in the morning, left the savages to steal them in the day time. Some had even courage to enter the camp in the day time, and to seize what was made by the savages, and carry it off by main now another very dangerous circumstance occurred. A g Indian woman, who came with the savages and was to their brutal behavior, undeniably said to an Sifter, that she should never forget the unjust treatmence of the white Brethren received, nor could she sleep all night, nor disfret. Soon after, without further explanation, she means to get Captain Pipe's belt horse, and rode speed to Pittsburg, where she gave an account of the one of the missionaries and their congregations. As her departure was known, she was instantly pursued. She could not be taken, the savages were enraged to the highest degree; they first charged the missionaries with sent this woman with letters to Pittsburg, to call the ans to their deliverance. But as it appeared more c, that Isaac Glikikan, to whom the woman was re-sent her, a party of warriors immediately set off m and brought him bound to Gnadenhuettten, finging th-fong. While the savages were binding him, per-that they seemed much terrified, he encouraged them, "Formerly, when I was ignorant of God, I should ave suffered any one of you to touch me. But now, g been converted unto him, through mercy, I am will-suffer all things for his sake." He no sooner arrived camp but a general uproar ensued, the savages des-g that poor Isaac should be cut in pieces. The Dela-who hated him more particularly for his conversion, for his blood, but the Half-king interfering, would fer him to be killed. However they examined him merely, and though his innocence was clearly proved, y attacked him with the most opprobrious language, and
Ifaac Glikikan taken captive and examined. 159.

and after some hours confinement, set him at liberty. An account was afterwards received, that upon the report made by the abovementioned woman, the Governor of Pittsburg intended to send a proper force to release the missionaries and their congregations, but was afterwards led to forfear this resolution, which may be considered as a gracious providence of God: for the Indian congregation would then indeed have been between two fires, and the first step taken by the savages would have been to murder all the white Brethren and Sisters.

The five imprisoned Brethren having for four days and nights together experienced in the most cruel manner, what it is to be at the mercy of a gang of robbers and murderers, the Indian affillitants went to the Half-king and the rest of the captains, and entreated them most earnestly, to set their teachers at liberty. The savages indeed were convinced that the believing Indians would never be persuaded to leave the settlements, unless they were led by the missionaries. On the 6th of September therefore they called them before the council, declared them free, and advised them to encourage the Indians to prepare for their emigration.

Filled with thanks and praises to God they now returned to their beloved people, and went to Salem, where they had appointed the congregations of Salem and Gnadenhuetten to meet them. Here they administered the sacrament, during which a most extraordinary sensation of the presence of the Lord comforted their hearts. They also preached the Gospel with boldness, baptized a catechumen and exhorted all the believing Indians to stand firm and to shew that faithfulness which they in a more particular manner owed to the Lord and his cause in these hours of trial and temptation. The daily words of scripture during this afflicting period, were so applicable to their circumstances, that they could not have been better chosen, if the event had been foreseen.

Having thus refreshed themselves for some days in peace and rest at Salem, about 100 savages, who had continually watched their motions and surrounded them at some distance, entered
IX. The Christian Indians forced to quit their Settlements. 164

...red the place on the 10th of September and behaved like...m and committing the most daring outrages. The millions now perceived, that there was no other resource for themselves and their congregation, but to emigrate, as the ges seemed resolved to follow them every where. Hav-therefore determined to prop it to the congregations, finding them of the same mind, they quitted Salem on 11th of September.

...but they never forsook any country with more regret.
y were now obliged to for sake three beautiful settlemts, Gnadenhuetten, Salem and Schoenbrunn, and the steft part of their possessions in them. They had already above 200 head of horned cattle and 400 hogs. Besides they left a great quantity of Indian corn in flore, abov 5 acres of corn land, where the harvest was just ripening, des potatoes, cabbage, and other roots and garden fruits the ground. According to a moderate calculation their was computed at 12,000 dollars, about 2000l. But what en them most pain, was the total lots of all books and tings, compiled with great trouble, for the instructio youth. Thse were all burnt by the savages. Added via they had nothing before them, but distress, misery and ger. However they could do nothing, but poffess their in patience, and go forward, even whether they would

But God was with them, and the powerful fenation experience they had of his presence supported their cou-A troop of savages commanded by English officers sted them, enclosing them at the distance of some miles ides. They went by land through Gofschaguenk to Waltholding; and then partly by water and partly along anks of that river to Sandusky Creek. Some of the is funk, and those who were in them lost all their pros and every thing they had faved. Those who went ...drove the cattle, a pretty large herd having been ht together from Salem and Schoenbrunn. Sept. 19th
...a king overtook them with his troops. He had lain
...ever since the emigration of our people, his troops had had plundered all the three settlements, and even dug up much as they could find of what the Indians had buried the woods.

One may easily conceive, that this journey was very troublous and troublesome. However the people went on with great patience. Not one left the congregation under the circumstances: no one laid the blame of these troubles to others: no dissatisfaction or disharmony to place, but they cleaved together as one man in the spirit of true brotherly love, rejoiced in God their Savior, and in their daily meetings on the road. At Gockhofink, or the habitation of owls, so called from the quantity of these birds resorting thither, they forsook the river and proceeded together by land. The fowls now drove them forward like a herd of cattle. The white Brethren and Sifters were usually in the midst surrounded by the believing Indians. One morning, when the latter could not set out as expeditiously as the fowls thought proper, they attacked the white Brethren, and forced them to set out alone, whipping the horses forward till they grew wild, and not even allowing the mothers time to suckle their children. Then the road, exceeding bad, leading through a continuation of swamps, Sitter Zeyberger fell twice from her horse, and once having in the stirrup was dragged for some time. But affection was soon at hand and the Lord preserved her from harm. Some of the believing Indians followed them as fast as possible, but with all their exertions did not overtake them that night. Thus they were not delivered out of the hands of the fowls till the next morning.

October 11th, they at length arrived at Sandusky Creek from which the whole country receives its name, being divided into Upper and Lower Sandusky, about 125 miles distant from the settlements on the Muskingum. Here the Half-kings with his Huron warriors left them, with leaving any orders for their future observance, and marched into his own country. Thus they were left in a wilderness where there was neither game nor any other provisions; but.
Ch. IX. Temporary Settlement in Upper Sandusky.

those, who had suffered themselves to be deceived by the treacherous representations made by the savages of this paradise, were ashamed of their credulity. After roving to and fro for some time, they resolved to spend the winter in Upper Sandusky, where they pitched upon the best spot they could find in this dreary waste, and built small huts of logs and bark to screen themselves from the cold, having neither beds nor blankets, and being reduced to the greatest poverty and want; for the savages had by degrees stolen every thing both from the missionaries and the Indians on the journey, only leaving them the needful utensils for making maple sugar.

During the building of these huts, the evening meetings were held in the open air, and two large fires kindled to serve for warmth and light. They so much disliked their situation here, that they gave their town no name, and I must therefore call it Sandusky, from the country and river near to which it lay.

Not having brought them into greaterstraits, than the want of provisions, and they frequently thought of the children of Israel in the wilderness, and of that bread, with which they were fed by God from heaven. Some had long ago spent all their own provisions, and depended upon the charity of their neighbors, for a few morsels. Even the missionaries, who had hitherto always lived upon their own produce, were now obliged to receive alms, they and their families being supported by a contribution gathered in the congregation. On this account Brother Shebboit and several Indian Brethren returned as soon as possible to the forsworn settlements on the Maekingum, to fetch the Indian corn, which, as mentioned above, had been left in great quantities in the fields.

Many savages came at that time to Sandusky, not to hear the Gospel, but rather to scoff and laugh at it. The Delaware Captain Pipe boasted publicly, that he had taken the believing Indians, and their teachers prisoners, and considered them now as his slaves. The Half-kings came to inform them, that they were now under his dominion, and were bound to do whatever he commanded them, even to go to war in his fervice. This vain boasting being answered with silence, the savages grew more impudent, and even seemed to have left all regard for the missionaries. The less prospect there appeared under these circumstances, of gaining the hearts of the heathen by the preaching of the Gospel, the more joy the missionaries felt at seeing several who last year, in times of trial, had forsaken the congregation and wandered about striving sheep, return unto the Shepherd and Bishop of their souls, and unto his persecuted flock.

But scarce had the missionaries and their people had a moment's breathing-time in this place, when two Delaware captains arrived with the following message from the English governor at Fort Detroit to the Delawares and Hurons: "Children! your father beyond Lake Erie is glad to hear that you have brought the believing Indians and their teachers to Sandusky, for now all nations may be united and all hindrances removed, and the little birds in the wood cannot sing so many lies in your ears. Now the Virginians will sit in the dark and hear nothing more about us, from which we expect to reap great advantages. I leave it to your discretion, to find a dwelling for the believing Indians, wherever you please. In a few days a vessel will arrive from Detroit in the river Miami with goods, where your father will reward you well for your good services. But he requests, that Captain Pipe would conduct the teachers and some of the Chiefs of the believing Indians to him, as he wishes to see and to speak with them himself. He says: 'I know better how to speak with them than you, for I know them, and can better provide and care for them, having plenty of every thing.'"

The missionaries, who long since wished to speak with the governor himself, and to refute the many lies he had heard, by laying the truth before him, were very willing to go, and October 25th the Brethren Zeilberger, Senfman, Heckenwaelder, and Edwards, set out with four Indian attendants for Fort Detroit. But the Brethren Jøgm 1 and Michael Jung stayed with the congregation at Sainty. The pain they felt at taking leave of each other, was very great, partly as no one could tell what would be event of their journey, and partly as they were obliged save their families in want of all the necessaries of life. They travelled chiefly by land along the banks of the lake, ing over many swamps, large inundated plains, and high thick forests, suffering great hardships by the way.

the most painful circumstance attending this journey, was, that they received an account, that some of their ians who went, as above mentioned, to the Mutchingum etch Indian corn, had been taken and killed by the whkle, and that a large body of the latter were marching jandusky, to surpise the settlement there. Of this acnt only so much was true, that Brother Sheboch and believing Indians had been taken prisoners at Schoenn and carried to Pittsburg. The rest returned safe to duusky, loaded with about four hundred bushels of Indian n, which they had procured in the fields with great trou.

But as the travellers did not hear the truth, it may ly be conceived how great their affliction was, and with at anxiety their minds were oppressed during the journey. November the 3d they arrived at Detroit, and were immenely brought before the Governor, Arend Sculier de Peyster, was at first displeased, having expected all the missionaries with their families, whom he intended to send all toger to Philadelphia. He however assured them, that the y cause for his calling them from their settlements on the jingum, was because he had heard, that they carried a correspondence with the Americans to the prejudice the English interest, and that many complaints had arisen in the on that account. The missionaries answered, that they doubted not in the least but that many evil reports ft have reached his ears, as the treatment they had met h, had sufficiently proved that they were considered as lty persons; but that these reports were false, would fully ear, if he would only grant a strict investigation of their conducted. They added, that it would not only cause them great grief, but would also be the ruin of the mission, committed to their care, if they were separated from their congregations, which they were in conscience bound never to forswear. His Excellency then dismissed them, and kindly ordered them to be decently lodged and provided with necessaries. Many English, German and French officers visited them and expressed great compassion, upon hearing how cruelly they had been treated, the marks of which they still bore about them; their clothes were allattered and torn, and they saw Indians muttering about the streets in Detroit in the very clothes taken from them on the Muskingum.
The Missionaries tried by the Governor, P. III.

Their trial was deferred till Captain Pipe, their principal accuser, should arrive, and they felt some uneasiness in considering that the verdict seemed to depend upon the evidence given by this malicious opponent. They had no friend to interfere in their behalf. But God was their friend and stay, and they trusted in him with full confidence; nor were they put to shame.

The 9th of November was the day appointed for the trial. After some ceremonies had passed between the Governor and Captain Pipe, relating to the scalps and prisoners he had brought from the United States, Captain Pipe rose and thus addressed the Governor: "Father, you have commanded us "to bring the believing Indians and their teachers from the "Muskingum. This has been done. When we had brought "them to Sandusky, you ordered us to bring their teachers "and some of their Chiefs unto you. Here you saw them "before you, now you may speak with them yourself, as you "have desired. But I hope you will speak good words "unto them, yes I tell you, I speak good words unto them, "for they are my friends, and I should be sorry to see "them ill used." These last words he repeated two or three times. In answer to this, the Governor enumerated to the captain all the complaints he had made against the Brethren, in his own words, calling upon him now to prove, that his accusations were true and that the missionaries had corresponded with the Americans, to the prejudice of the English interest. Pipe answered, that such a thing might have happened; but that the missionaries would do it no more, for they were now at Detroit. The Governor was not satisfied with this answer, but peremptorily demanded, that Pipe should answer his first question decisively. Pipe was now greatly embarrassed, began to shift and shuffle, and bending towards his counsellors, asked them what he should say? But they all hung their heads and were silent. On a sudden recollecting himself and rising up, he addressed the Governor: "I said before, that some such thing might have happened, but now I will tell you the plain truth. The missionaries are innocent. They have done nothing of themselves, what they have done, they were compelled to do." Then, limiting upon his breast, he added, "I am to blame, and the Chiefs who were with me in Gofchaguenk; we have forced them to do it, when they refused." This alluded to the innocent correspondence carried on through the missionaries in the name of the Delaware Chiefs mentioned above (page 116). The Governor then asked Captain Pipe whether he and his party were willing to permit the missionaries to return to their congregations, or would rather, that they were sent away? But contrary to all expectation Pipe approved of their return, and it was evident, that God had changed his heart in this affair. The Governor then questioned the missionaries about their ordination and vocation to the mission, but especially about their connexion with the United States. As to the latter, they replied, that Congress indeed knew that they were employed as missionaries to the Indians, and did not disturb them in their labors, but had never, in any thing, given them directions how to proceed.

that

The Governor, having done nothing in this whole affair, but what his duty required, declared now publicly before the whole court, that the Brethren were innocent of all things laid to their charge, that he felt great satisfaction in seeing their endeavors to civilize and christianize the Indians, and would permit them to return to their congregations. All this was interpreted to Captain Pipe and his warriors. Then addressing the Indian assistants, he expressed his joy to see them, admonishing them to continue to obey their teachers and not to meddle with the war, after which he took them by the hand, and promised to supply them gratis with all they wanted, which was accordingly done. To the missionaries he offered the use of his own house, in the most friendly terms, and as they had been plundered contrary to his will and express command, he ordered, that they should be provided with clothes and every other necessary without delay. He even bought four watches, which they had been robbed of, upon their imprisonment in Gades-huctten, from a trader, to whom the Indians had sold them at Detroit, and returned them to the missionaries. Having frequently conferred with them in a kind and sympathizing manner, concerning the state of the mission, and given them a passport for their journey, to which a permission was added, that they should perform the functions of their office among the Christian Indians without molestation, he dismissed them in peace. The missionaries entreated him to find them an account of all accusations made against them in future, promising to clear up every thing to his satisfaction and according to strict truth. This he promised to do, and at parting declared as a sincere friend, how heartily sorry he was for the sufferings they had so innocently undergone. Both the missionaries and the Indian assistants returned praises to God for the favorable turn given to their affairs, in which the Governor approved himself as a servant of God. They left Detroit on the 14th of November and arrived on the 22d at Sandusky. The joy of their families and the congregation was inexpressible, as nothing appeared to them more probable, than that they would be detained prisoners at Detroit.
They were now left for some time at rest and built a chapel. But their external support was a matter of great difficulty and caused many melancholy reflections. They knew not to-day, what they should eat to-morrow. Frequentely their hunger became almost insupportable and the cry for food was general. Providentially it happened that towards the end of the year a great number of deer came into those parts. Two English traders who lived in the neighborhood, Mr. Mac-Cormick and Mr. Robins, were very kind in assisting them. They bought Indian corn for them and served them to the utmost of their power, which was gratefully acknowledged by our Indians as a proof of the gracious providence of our heavenly Father.

December 7th the Indian congregation held their first meeting in the new chapel, and offered up prayers and supplications, that the Lord would also in this place dwell and walk among them, and blest the word of his atonement with rich fruits in the hearts of all who should hear it. They celebrated the Christmas holidays with cheerfulness and blessing, and concluded this remarkable year with thanks and praise to him, who is ever the Saviour of his people. But having neither bread nor wine, they could not keep the Holy Communion.
CHAPTER X.

1782.

Great Famine in Sandusky. All the Missionaries are carried to Fort Detroit. Part of the Indian Congregation surprised on the River Muskingum by a Troop of white People, and murdered. Arrival of the Missionaries at Detroit. The Indian Congregation dispersed, by which their total Destruction is prevented.

The Indian congregation entered into the year 1781 with joy, and renewed hopes of relief, little imagining that it would be the most trying period they had ever experienced.

In the first months of this year the daily worship of the congregation was held in the usual order, and the grace of God prevailed. Some new people were baptized, and several of the baptized, who formerly went astray, obtained forgiveness and were readmitted to the fellowship of the believers.

However they were not without distress. Towards the end of January, the cold became so intense, that the nights were almost insupportable. After it abated, the water forced out of the earth in such abundance that it did much damage to the inhabitants. The cattle, of which the Indians had collected large herds, had no forage in these dreary regions; nor was any to be procured elsewhere, and thus fuch of them as were not killed for meat, perished with hunger. Famine soon spread amongst the people, and the calamity became general. Provisions were not to be had, even for money, and if any were bought in other places, an exorbitant price was demanded. Many of the poor lived merely upon wild potatoes, and at last their hunger was such, that they greedily ate the carcasses of the horses and cows which were starved to death.
Ch. X.

Visit of the Half-king of the Hurons. 171

In this wretched situation the Half-king of the Hurons with a retinue of Indians and white people paid them a visit. As our Indians were now not able to furnish a meal for their guests, one of the affluents went to the Half-king, informed him that there was no meat to be had but the flesh of dead cattle; and added: "Whenever you came to Gnaden-\^huette, we gave you not only enough to eat, but if you desired to have tea and sugar, bread, butter, milk, pork and beef, or any other article, we always gave it to you, and have never refused any thing to you and your warriors. But you told us to rise, and to go with you, and that we need not mind our plantations, for we should find enough to live upon. Now if any one catches a bird, or any another animal, his first care is to get food for it. But you have brought us hither, and never offered a grain of Indian corn to any one of us; thus you have obtained your whole aim, and may rejoice that we are here miserably perishing for want." The Half-king seemed struck with the truth of this reproof, and went away in silence. Other savages who came on a visit to Sandusky, seeing such quantities of cattle lying dead by the way side, laughed, and reviled our Indians, expressing great joy at their sufferings. "Now," said they, "you are become like us, and certainly you ought not to fare better."

The famine drove several parties from Sandusky to Schoenbrunn, Gnadenhuetten and Salem on the Muskingum, to fetch provisions, a report prevailing, that there was no danger in those parts. Indeed this was now the only resource our Indians had left, for though most of their Indian corn was still standing in the fields since last year, it was much better than what was sold by some people in Sandusky at an enormous price.

The greatest sufferings of the missionaries about this time were occasioned by the behavior of some false Brethren, who having returned to their former sinful ways, endeavored to introduce their heathenish practice into the congregation, and would not leave the settlement. They stood there in defiance... of all remonstrances, were enraged, when kindly reproved, and went about in the villages of the heathen, endeavoring to exasperate them against the missionaries.

It became now more evident than ever that the aim of the enemies of the Brethren was nothing less than forcibly and effectually to destroy the preaching of the Gospel among the Indians, and to disperse the Indian congregation. The Governor of Fort Detroit had promised the missionaries that they should not be molested in their labors, but he found it impossible to keep his word, as these people left him no peace. Soon after the return of the missionaries from Detroit last autumn, some of the head-chiefs of the Delawares expressed their astonishment to the Governor, that he had suffered the white Brethren to depart, and thus disappointed them in their hopes of getting rid of these dangerous people. The Governor had always found means to pacify them by his wife and firm behavior. But now the Half-kings of the Hurons appeared again against them. It happened that two of his foes, who went last year upon a murdering party, lost their lives during the expedition. This the father ascribed to some secret intrigues of the Brethren, nor would he be convinced of the contrary, but meditated revenge. He lived also in continual fear, lest our Indians should revenge the injuries they had suffered, upon his own people. He therefore thought of means to disperse them, and knew no method more likely to effect this, than to separate them from their teachers. Another disagreeable occurrence happened also about this time. Two Indians, members of the congregation, had a desire to visit their imprisoned relations at Pittsburg. But as it was evident, that their journey would only tend to increase the suspicions raised against the missionaries, as though they carried on a correspondence with the Americans, the danger was represented to them and they were desired to give up the design. Nevertheless they set off in secret. Now though Brother Zeilberger gave immediate information of this circumstance both to the Governor of Detroit and to the Half-king of the Hurons, yet the latter gladly trusted Ch. X. The Missionaries and Families ordered to Detroit. 173 seized this opportunity, to accuse the missionaries before the Governor of having carried on a constant correspondence with the Americans, as long as they had been in Sandusky, by letters sent every ten days to Pittsburg, endeavoring to persuade the Americans to destroy the Huron nation. In a letter, dictated by him to some white people, he mentioned to the Governor: "That he was uneasy in his mind as long as the "teachers lived in Sandusky, fearing some misfortune, and "therefore requested the Governor to carry them away as "soon as possible; but that if he refused, he himself should "know what to do."

A written order therefore arrived on the 1st of March, 1782, sent by the Governor to the Half-king of the Hurons and to an English officer in his company, to bring all the missionaries and their families to Detroit, but with a strict charge, neither to plunder nor to abuse them in the least. It may easily be conceived how this account pierced the missionaries to the very heart. According to their own declaration, they would much rather have met death itself, than be forced to forsake their congregation whom they loved by far more than their own lives, and thus to deliver their flock over to the wolves. They were flung with grief; but consultations were of no avail. For indeed nothing was now left, but to submit with due resignation, for the slightest remonstrance might have given occasion to abuse and plunder them, and could not have been of the smallest service.

When this order was communicated to the congregation, expressly assembled for the purpose, the people went to such a degree, that the missionaries were almost crushed with the weight of grief and distress. One Indian after the other came afterwards to see them, and they were entirely engaged in attending to their complaints, exhorting and comforting them. All uttered their lamentations aloud, claiming that they were forsaken and left as sheep without a shepherd. Among the rest an Indian Brother said, "I am unconcerned "as to all the loaves I have sustained, that I am become poor "and hungry and have lost all my cattle. I would gladly "suffer "suffer all this and more, but that our enemies have at length taken our teachers from us, and instead to rob us of the nourishment of our souls and the word of salvation, is too bad, and breaks my heart. But they shall never find me willing to be one with them and to enter again into their heathenish manner of living. Nor shall they ever make me subject to their power, and force me to do things, which are abominable in the eyes of God my Savior. I will rather run into the woods, fly from all human society, and spend the remainder of my life in the utmost misery." Another, who had proved unfaithful, came and confessed his guilt in public. "I have grievously sinned," said he, "for I have accused my teachers and betrayed them, as Judas betrayed our Savior, and now I shall be lost eternally, unless I obtain forgiveness." The missionaries assured him in the most affectionate terms of their forgivenes, and conforted their weeping flock by representing the unbounded faithfulness of the Lord, who crowns all things which He permits with an happy issue. But they found that it would be most prudent not to give any particular advice to the Indian allies, for the management of the affairs of the congregation during their absence, but to commend them to the guidance of the Spirit of God, having no other consolation both for themselves and their families, but that they were yet in the hands of a gracious Lord, though now led through a dark and dismal valley, who would be their leading star, protector and preserver in all circumstances.

The day before their departure, they were terrified to the utmost degree, by the arrival of a warrior from the Mus-ingum, who related that all our Indians, who were found in our deserted settlements seeking provisions, had been taken prisoners by the Americans, carried off to Pittsburgh, and some of them murdered. Thus overwhelmed with grief and terror the missionaries were obliged to take leave of their people on the 15th of March, and suffered as it were a thousand deaths. The congregation being assembled for this purpose, Brother Zeilberger as a tender father exhorted the Brothers
Ch. X.

Dreadful Report:  375

Brethren and Sisters to cleave the closer unto the Lord, as they were now to be separated from their teachers, for that He was the source of all salvation and the well spring of life. He admonished them to seek and find pastures in the meadows of his sufferings and death, by which they would be preferred from the world and all the allurements of sin. He then kneeled down with the congregation, gave thanks unto the Lord for all the spiritual blessings received at his hands, amidst earthly misery and distress, commended this Indian church of Christ, purchased unto himself by his own blood, unto his grace, to the love and preservation of God the heavenly Father, and to the fellowship and guidance of the Holy Ghost, praying fervently, that they might be preferred in faith and in the pure and saving doctrine of Jesus Christ and his atonement, till they should see each other again, either here below, or before the throne of the Lamb. The tears shed on this occasion are only known to the Lord, who feel the affliction of his children. In this state of mind, believing one part of the congregation to be imprisoned, another part murdered and the third in danger of being despised and forsaken, the missionaries entered upon their journey to Detroit, accompanied by a Frenchman, whom the English officer had appointed in his place to conduct them, and passing as in review before the Half-king and his warriors.

I will here leave the travellers, to describe the bloody catastrophe which took place on the Muskingum, the above-mentioned report being by far not equal to the extent of the horrible transaction.

The Governor of Pittsburg thought it but just, to release the believing Indians who with Brother Schebobich were taken prisoners last year by the Americans in Schoenbritann. The Indians arrived safe in Sanduky, and Brother Schebobich went to Bethlehem, to give a circumstantial account of the present situation of the Indian congregation. The humane behavior of the Governor at Pittsburg greatly incensed those people, who, according to the account given in the former Part Part of this History, represented the Indians as Cananites, who without mercy ought to be destroyed from the face of the earth, and considered America as the land of promise given to the Christians. Hearing that different companies of the believing Indians came occasionally from Sandusky to the settlements on the Muskingum to fetch provisions, a party of murderers, about one hundred and sixty in number, assembled in the country near Whiling and Buffaloe, determined first to surprize these Indians, and destroy the settlements, and then to march to Sandusky, where they might easily cut off the whole Indian congregation. As soon as Colonel Gibson, at Pittsburg, heard of this black design, he sent messengers to our Indians on the Muskingum to give them timely notice of their danger: but they came too late. They however received in all the settlements early intelligence of the approach of the murderers, time enough for them to have faved themselves by flight; for a white man, who had narrowly escaped from the hands of some savages, warned them with great earnestness to fly for their lives. These savages, having murdered and impaled a woman and a child, not far from the Ohio, arrived soon after at Gadenhuetten, where they expressed to our Indians their fears, that a party of white people, who were pursuuing them, would certainly kill every Indian they met on the road. But our Indians, who at other times behaved with great caution and timidity, if only the least appearance of danger existed, showed now no signs of fear, but went to meet real danger with incredible confidence.

This was undoubtedly owing to an idea, that they had nothing to fear from the Americans, but only from the Indian. However on the 4th of March, Samuel, an assistant, was called from Schoenbrunn to Salem, where all the assistants in those parts met, to consult whether they should fly upon the approach of the white people; but both those of Salem and Gadenhuetten were of opinion, that they should fly; Samuel advised, that every one should be left to act according to his own sentiments, and thus they parted. When Sam-muel returned to Schoenbrunn, some Brethren accompanied him part of the way, and he declared that such love and harmony prevailed among the believing Indians, as he had never seen before.

Meanwhile the murderers marched first to Gnadenhuetten where they arrived on the 6th of March. About a mile from the settlement they met young Schebofsch in the wood, fired at him and wounded him so much that he could not escape. He then, according to the account of the murderers themselves, begged for his life, representing that he was Schebofsch the son of a white Christian man. But they paid no attention to his entreaties and cut him in pieces with their hatchets. They then approached the Indians, most of whom were in their plantations, and surrounded them, almost imperceptibly, but feigning a friendly behavior, told them to go home, promising to do them no injury. They even pretended to pity them on account of the mischief done to them by the English and the savages, affording them of the protection and friendship of the Americans. The poor believing Indians, knowing nothing of the death of young Schebofsch, believed every word they said, went home with them and treated them in the most hospitable manner. They likewise spoke freely concerning their sentiments as Christian Indians, who had never taken the leaf share in the war. A small barrel of wine being found among their goods, they told their persecutors on enquiry, that it was intended for the Lord's Supper, and that they were going to carry it to Sandfuky. Upon this they were informed that they should not return thither, but go to Pittsburg, where they would be out of the way of any assault made by the English or the savages. This they heard with resignation, concluding, that God would perhaps choose this method to put an end to their present sufferings. Prepossessed with this idea, they cheerfully delivered their guns, hatchets and other weapons to the murderers, who promised to take good care of them and in Pittsburg to return every article to its rightful owner. Our Indians even showed them all those things, which they had secreted Account of the horrid Murder of secreted in the woods, assisted in packing them up, and emptied all their beehives for these pretended friends.

F. III.

In the mean time the affiant John Martin went to Salem and brought the news of the arrival of the white people, to the believing Indians, affuring them that they need not be afraid to go with them, for they were come to carry them into a place of safety, and to afford them protection and support. The Salem Indians did not hesitate to accept of this proposal, believing unanimously that God had sent the Americans, to release them from their disagreeable situation at Saturday, and imagining that when they had arrived at Pittsburg, they might soon find a safe place to build a settlement and safely procure advice and assistance from Bethlehem. Thus John Martin with two Salem Brothers returned to Gnadenhuetten, to acquaint both their Indian Brethren and the white people with their resolution. The latter expressed a desire to see Salem, and a party of them was conducted thither and received with much friendship. Here they pretended to have the same good will and affection towards the Indians, as at Gnadenhuetten, and easily persuaded them to return with them. By the way they entered into much spiritual conversation, our Indians, some of whom spoke English well, giving these people, who rejoiced great piety, proper and scriptural answers to many questions concerning religious subjects. The affiants Isaac Gilkian and Israel were no less sincere and unreserved in their answers to some political questions started by the white people, and thus the murderers obtained a full and satisfactory account of the present situation and sentiments of the Indian congregation. In the mean time the defenseless Indians at Gnadenhuetten were suddenly attacked and driven together by the white people, and without resistance seized and bound. The Salem Indians now met the same fate. Before they entered Gnadenhuetten, they were at once surprised by their conductors, robbed of their guns and even of their pocket knives, and brought back into the settlement. Soon after this, the murderers held a council, and resolved by a majority of votes, to murder them all the very next day. Thos.
Ch. X.

Part of the Indian Congregation.

Those who were of a different opinion, writing their hands, calling God to witness, that they were innocent of the blood of those harmless Christian Indians. But the majority remained unmoved, and only differed concerning the mode of execution. Some were for burning them alive, others for taking their scalps, and the latter was at last agreed upon; upon which one of the murderers was sent to the prisoners, to tell them, that as they were Christian Indians, they might prepare themselves in a Christian manner, for they must all die to-morrow.

It may be easily conceived, how great their terror was, at hearing a sentence so unexpected. However they soon recollected themselves and patiently suffered the murderers to lead them into two houses, in one of which the Brethren and in the other the Sisters and children were confined like sheep ready for slaughter. They declared to the murderers that though they could call God to witness that they were perfectly innocent, yet they were prepared and willing to suffer death. But as they had at their conversion and baptism made a solemn promise to the Lord Jesus Christ, that they would live unto him and endeavor to please him alone in this world, they knew that they had been deficient in many respects, and therefore wished to have some time granted, to pour out their hearts before him in prayer, and to crave his mercy and pardon. This request being complied with, they spent their last night here below in prayer, and in exhorting each other to remain faithful unto the end. One Brother, called Abraham, who for some time past had been in a lake-warm state of heart, seeing his end approaching, made the following public confession before his brethren: — "Dear Brethren! it seems as if we should all soon depart unto our Savior, for our sentence is fixed. You know that I have been an untoward child, and have grieved the Lord and my brethren by my disobedience, not walking as I ought to have done. But yet I will now cleave to my Savior with my last breath, and hold him fast, though I am so great a sinner. I know assuredly, that He will forgive me".
"me all my sins, and not cast me out." The Brethren assured him of their love and forgiveness, and both they and the Sisters spent the latter part of the night in singing praises to God their Savior, in the joyful hope, that they should soon be able to praise him without sin.

When the day of their execution arrived, namely the 8th of March, two houses were fixed upon, one for the Brethren and another for the Sisters and children, to which the wanton murderers gave the name of slaughter-houses. Some of them went to the Indian Brethren and showed great impatience, that the execution had not yet begun, to which the Brethren replied, that they were all ready to die, having commended their immortal souls to God, who had given them that divine assurance in their hearts, that they should come unto him, and be with him for ever.

Immediately after this declaration the carnage commenced. The poor innocent people, men, women, and children were led, bound two and two together with ropes, into the above-mentioned slaughter-houses and there scalped and murdered.

According to the testimony of the murderers themselves, they behaved with uncommon patience and went to meet death with cheerful resignation. The above-mentioned brother Abraham was the first victim. A Sister, called Christina, who had formerly lived with the Sisters in Bethlehém, and spoke English and German well, fell on her knees before the captain of the gang and begged her life, but was told, that he could not help her.

Thus ninety-six persons magnified the name of the Lord, by patiently meeting a cruel death. Sixty-two were grown persons, among whom were five of the most valuable affiants, and thirty-four children.

Only two youths, each between fifteen and sixteen years old, escaped almost miraculously from the hands of the murderers. One of them, seeing that they were in earnest, was so fortunate as to disengage himself from his bonds, then slipping unobserved from the crowd, crept through a narrow narrow window, into the cellar of that house in which the Sifters were executed. Their blood soon penetrated through the flooring, and according to his account, ran in streams into the cellar, by which it appears probable, that most, if not all of them, were not merely scalped, but killed with hatchets or swords. The lad remained concealed till night, providentially not one coming down to search the cellar, when having with much difficulty climbed up the wall to the window, he crept through and escaped into a neighboring thicket. The other youth's name was Thomas. The murderers struck him only one blow on the head, took his scalp, and left him. But after some time he recovered his senses and saw himself surrounded by bleeding corpses. Among these he observed one Brother, called Abel, moving and endeavoring to raise himself up. But he remained lying as still as though he had been dead, and this caution proved the means of his deliverance: for soon after, one of the murderers coming in, and observing Abel's motions, killed him outright with two or three blows. Thomas lay quiet till dark, though suffering the most exquisite torment. He then ventured to creep towards the door, and observing nobody in the neighborhood, got out and escaped into the wood, where he concealed himself during the night. These two youths met afterwards in the wood, and God preferred them from harm on their journey to Sandutky, though they purposely took a long circuit, and suffered great hardships and danger. But before they left the neighborhood of Gnadenhuetten they observed the murderers from behind the thicket making merry after their successful enterprise, and at last setting fire to the two slaughter-houses filled with corpses.

Providentially the believing Indians, who were at that time in Schoenbrunn, escaped. The militiamen had immediately upon receiving orders to repair to Fort Detroit, sent a messenger to the Muskingum to call our Indians home, with a view to see them once more, and to get horses from them for their journey. This messenger happened to arrive. at Schoenbrunn the day before the murderers came to Gnadenhuetten, and having delivered his missage, the Indian of Schoenbrunn sent another meffenger to Gnadenhuetten to inform their brethren there and at Salem of the missage received. But before he reached Gnadenhuetten, he found young Scheboisch lying dead and scalped by the way side, and looking forward, saw many white people in and about Gnadenhuetten. He instantly fled back with great precipitation and told the Indians in Schoenbrunn what he had seen, who all took flight and ran into the woods. They now hesitated a long while, not knowing whither to turn or how to proceed. Thus when the murderers arrived at Schoenbrunn the Indians were still near the premises, observing every thing that happened there, and might easily have been discovered. But here the murderers seemed as if they were struck with blindness. Finding nobody at home, they destroyed and set fire to the settlement, and having done the same at Gnadenhuetten and Salem, they set off with the scalps of their innocent victims, about fifty horses, a number of blankets and other things, and marched to Pittsburg, with a view to murder the few Indians lately settled on the north side of the Ohio, opposite to the Fort. Some of them fell a sacrifice to the rage of this blood-thirsty crew, and a few escaped. Among the latter was Anthony, a member of our congregation, who happened then to be at Pittsburg, and both he and the Indians of Schoenbrunn arrived after many dangers and difficulties safe at Sandusky.

The foregoing account of this dreadful event was collected, partly from what the murderers themselves related to their friends at Pittsburg, partly from the account given by the two youths, who escaped in the manner above described, and also from the report made by the Indian affiant Samuel of Schoenbrunn, and by Anthony from Pittsburg, all of whom agreed exactly as to the principal parts of their respective evidences.
Ch. X. Various Remarks. 183

It afterwards appeared from the New York papers, in which the Christian Indians are called Moravian Indians, and represented in a very unfavourable light, that the murderers had been prevented, for the present, from proceeding to Sandusky, to destroy the remnant of the congregation.

The following remark of some savages on this occasion deserves particular notice: "We intended to draw our friends, the believing Indians, back into heathenism, but God disapproved of it, and therefore took them to himself."

To describe the grief and terror of the Indian congregation, on hearing that so large a number of its members were so cruelly massacred, is impossible. Parents wept and mourned for the loss of their children, husbands for their wives, wives for their husbands, children for their parents, brothers for their sisters, and sisters for their brothers. And having now also lost their teachers, who used to sympathize with and take share in all their sorrows and to strengthen their reliance upon the faithfulness of God, their grief was almost insupportable. But they murmured not, nor did they call for vengeance upon the murderers, but rather for them; and their greatest consolation was a full assurance, that all their beloved relations were now at home, the presence of the Lord and in full possession of eternal happiness.

Brother Scheboft received at Bethlehem the news of the cruel murder of his son, with the deepest affliction. To his place the first account of the massacre was brought by some people, who had been present at an auction held at Pittsburgh of the effects taken from the believing Indians, at which also their scalps were exposed to view.

All the congregations of the United Brethren both in America and Europe took the most affecting share in this great calamity. But as God has always wise and sacred reasons for permitting so great tribulations to befall his children, the Brethren, viewing this dreadful and incomprehensible event in this light, could do nothing, but silently adore... the wisdom of the Lord, whose ways are unsearchable, but always replete with justice and truth. It appears from all circumstances attending this massacre that the murderers did not destroy the believing Indians on account of their being Christians, but merely because they were Indians, and therefore they would not even spare the infant children. I will therefore not compare them with the martyrs of the ancient church, who sometimes were sacrificed in great numbers to the rage of their persecutors on account of their faith in Christ. But thus much I can confidently assert, that these Christian Indians approved themselves to the end as steadfast confessors of the truth, and though conscious of their innocence, were yet resigned to the will of God, patiently submitting to be led as sheep to the slaughter, and having commended their souls to their Creator and Redeemer, delivered themselves without resistance to the cruel hands of their blood-thirsty murderers, and thus in death bore witness to the truth and efficacy of the Gospel of Jesus. The murderers themselves acknowledged that they were good Indians, "for," said they, "they sung and prayed to their last breath." This testimony of the truth will preach to every thinking mind, as long as the remembrance of this bloody massacre exists.

There were three circumstances which may be looked upon as gracious interpositions of God's providence. The first is, that last autumn the Indian congregations were carried away from their settlements on the Muskingum. If they had remained there, they would most probably have been totally destroyed. But now above two thirds of their number were saved. Secondly, when our Indians were obliged to go to the Muskingum for food, and the missionaries mentioned it to the Hurons, partly to prevent all suspicion and partly that some of them might go with them, the Hurons refused to go. If they had gone, they could not have defended the believing Indians, their preference would only have held out a more plausible pretense for the murderers, to treat the believing Indians and Hurons alike as hostile warriors.
Ch. X. The Missionaries leave Sandusky. 185

warriors, and thus their death would have appeared to the world in a very different light. The third remarkable circumstance was this, that the missionaries were ordered to Fort Detroit precisely at a time, when their arrangements tended to preserve those Indians, who were then at Schoenbrunn. Thus amidst all distresses, they found great cause to thank and praise the Lord. Though we may not comprehend his ways, our understanding being too weak and imperfect to discover his purposes, yet this we know, that he is just and merciful, and that all things work together for good to them that love God.

I now return to the missionaries. When they left Sandusky, they were accompanied a considerable way by a large part of their weeping congregation, and by some as far as Lower Sandusky. As they could not procure a sufficient number of horses, some were obliged to wade through water and marshy grounds, and Brother Edwards had the misfortune to get lame. They were also obliged to spend several nights in the open air, and suffered great cold, besides other hardships. But the Lord graciously supported the Sisters and children, so that they were able to bear it. Their French conducteur behaved with kindness towards them; and as they were in great want of provisions, God inclined the hearts of several persons to assist them. Some traders from Detroit, who then resided in Lower Sandusky, afforded them essential relief, the travellers being detained for a considerable time at that place. These good people took them into their houses and supplied them with food and other necessaries. March the 21st they experienced another affliction in taking a final leave of those believing Indians, who had accompanied them thus far, and were obliged to return to their families.

The missionaries now found themselves entirely separated from their beloved congregation, a circumstance which, amidst all their sufferings and trials, they had never before experienced, nor could they at this time discern the ways of the Lord in permitting this apparent evil: they all appeared dark.
dark and mysterious. Soon after this, some Indian Brethren who brought their baggage after them, informed them of every circumstance relating to the murder of the belieing Indians on the Muskiking, by which their minds, already grievously afflicted, were filled with inexpressible anguish; for they mourned like parents, who had lost their own children in the most cruel manner. They write;
"This account was heart-rending indeed, and God alone can "comfort and support us under it."

As they were obliged to wait longer in Lower Sandusky for vessels to conduct them forward than was first expected, they received several visits from the believing Indians in Upper Sandusky. But even these visits occasioned some trouble, for one day the Hurons made a dreadful outcry, giving out that the believing Indians had murdered some Huron women. However upon an immediate examination, their lies were detected, and the calumniators publicly put to shame.

April 11th the English officer who had been ordered to conduct the missionaries to Fort Detroit, but had committed this business to the above-mentioned Frenchman, arrived with a party of Indian warriors in Lower Sandusky. He behaved like a madman towards the missionaries, and with horrid oaths threatened several times to split their skulls with an hatchet. He then sat drinking all night in the house where lodged, raving much worse than any drunken savage. But the Lord protected the missionaries and their families from all harm. At length the governor at Detroit sent two vessels with a corporal and fourteen rifle-men, who brought a written order, to take the missionaries from Lower Sandusky, to treat them with all possible kindness, and in case of stormy weather, not to endanger their lives in crossing Lake Erie; adding, that whoever did them the least injury, should be called to account for it. This threat kept the above-mentioned English officer in awe, and he fled behind in Sandusky, to the great satisfaction of the traellers.

They
The Missionaries arrive at Fort Detroit.

They set out on the 14th, and crossing over a part of the arrived at Detroit by the steaights which join the Lakes and Huron. Here a large room in the barracks, just up for an officer's dwelling, was given them, by order of the governor. He soon came to see them, and assured them, that though many new accusations had been made for them, yet he considered them as perfectly innocent, had not sent for them on that account, but merely for their safety, having the most authentic intelligence, their lives were in imminent danger, as long as they resided at Sandusky. He further left it entirely to their own decision to remain at Detroit, or to go to Bethlehem, and orders that they should be supplied with every thing need of. Some weeks after, they left the barracks with his consent and moved into an house at a small distance from the town, where they enjoyed more rest and the mean time the Indian congregation was brought to the most precarious situation. After the departure of the missionaries, the Indian assistants continued to meet and remain in the usual regular manner. This news spread with pleasure from an English trader who visited Sandusky and was present at several of their meetings. He related that he heard them sing hymns and exhort the others, till they wept together like children, which greatly pleased him. But some false brethren among them took occasion to show their perfidy. They accused all the fortunes of the believing Indians to the missionaries, and asserted that they were the sole cause of the murder of countrymen, and that foreseeing this, they had gone into safety. Such foolish assertions, though reproached by the faithful part of the congregation, occasioned how much dissatisfaction and uneasiness. Besides this, the king of the Hurons was so incessantly tormented by evil conscience, that he could not rest, as long as any Indian was in his neighborhood, for their presence continually reminded him of his treacherous and cruel behavior.
The Congregation is dispersed.

The behavior towards them and their teachers. He therefore sent them a peremptory order to quit the country, and seek a dwelling in some other place. It appeared indeed, as if no place was left where these persecuted Indians might have reti for the soles of their feet. For they lived between two contending parties, one of which had plundered and led them away captive and the other had murdered a great number of them. They could expect no protection from the white people, and the heathen hunted them as outlaws from one region to the other. Yet they had one great and inextinguishable source of comfort: "The Lord our God liveth," said they, "and he will not forswear us." However the contempt they suffered and the scoffing of the heathen, appeared sometimes very grievous: "Let us see," said they, "whether that God, of whom the Christians talk so much, describing him as a great and almighty Lord, and placing all their confidence in him, will protect and deliver them, and whether he is stronger than our gods."

They resolved at length to make no resistance, but as it seemed to be the will of God to permit them to be scattered, patiently to submit. One part therefore went into the country of the Shawanoes, the rest stayed some time in the neighborhood of Pipestown, and there resolved to proceed farther to the Miami river.

This dispersion of the believing Indians put a period for some time, to the existence of the congregation. But it was not long before the gracious providence of God was discernible in this event. The same gang of murderers, who had committed the massacre on the Muskingum, did not give up their bloody design upon the remnant of the Indian congregation, though it was delayed for a season. They marched in May 1782 to Sandusky, where they found nothing but empty huts. Thus it became evident that the transportation of the missionaries to Detroit happened by the kind permission of God. For had they remained in Sandusky, the Indian congregation would not have been dispersed and consequently in all probability have been murdered.
And thus this painful event, which at first seemed to threaten destruction to the whole mission, saved the lives of our Indians in two different instances, first by the message sent to Schoenbrunn, and secondly by the dispersion of the whole flock.

Soon after the disappointment which the murderers met with at Sandusky, they were attacked by a party of English and Indian warriors, and the greater part of them were cut to pieces.

CHAPTER XI.

1782. 1783. 1784.

The above-mentioned dispersion of the Indian congregation was more particularly painful to the missionaries, as they justly feared, that the souls of the believing Indians would suffer great injury by their converse with the Heathen. They therefore, far from making use of the liberty given them by the Governor to return to Bethlehem, resolved from motives of duty and affection, to use their utmost exertions, by degrees to gather their scattered flock. In this view they took steps to build a new settlement and to invite the believing Indians to return to them. After several conferences with the Governor, who much approved of their plan, he proposed proposed a spot about thirty miles from Detroit on the river Huron, which upon examination they found very convenient for the purpose. But as it was necessary to have the consent of the Chief of the Chippeway tribe to whom that country belonged, the Governor undertook to procure it. The only objection the Chief made, was, that perhaps the Delawares would be displeased, and reproach them with having persuaded their friends to forswear them. To this the Governor replied, that as the Delawares had driven the Christian teachers away, they had likewise banished the Christian Indians, who were now seeking some friend to receive them, and that the Delawares could not interfere without showing their own shame and folly. The Chippeways then gave their consent with the usual solemnities, and the Governor generously sent a message with a string of wampum to all the dispersed Christian Indians, to give them notice of this transaction and to invite them to rejoin their teachers, promising, that they should enjoy perfect liberty of conscience and be supplied with provisions and other necessaries of life.

The consequence of this measure was, that on the 2d of July the missionaries had the inexpressible satisfaction, to bid two families of their beloved Indian flock welcome. These were soon followed by Abraham, a venerable assistant, with his and another family, who immediately erected huts near the missionaries house. Brother Richard Connor arrived likewise with his family at Detroit. One of the dispersed came with some heathen warriors to Detroit, painted like a savage. He did not expect to find the missionaries still there, but upon seeing them, said, "You see, my brethren, that I have no more the appearance of a Brother. I depairied of ever hearing the word of God again from the Brethren; I therefore thought, that I ought to live peaceably with the heathen and do as they do, lest they should persecute me. But as I perceive that the Indian congregation is gathering to-gether again, and our teachers are with them, I pray, that they Ch. XI. in collecting their Congregation.

"they would kindly receive me again." This request was granted with pleasure. The rest of the dispersed Indians rejoiced greatly at the friendly message sent them by the Governor and the missionaries, but suffered themselves to be intimidated by the lies of some malicious people, who wished to prevent them from returning to the Brethren, and resolved therefore to wait a little longer. In the mean time the missionaries began their usual daily meetings with their Indians, and met in the open air for want of a chapel. They were commonly joined by the neighbors, prisoners and other strangers, to whom it was a new and interesting sight, to see such devotion among the Indians; and the sweet singing of the Christian Indians was particularly admired. Here the missionaries had a good opportunity of bearing many a testimony of the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom they invited all the weary and heavy laden. As they were frequently desired to baptize children or to bury the dead, they improved these opportunities to preach the Gospel both in the English and German languages. Brother Zeibberger delivered also several discourses to the prisoners, many inhabitants of Detroit being present. By this time twenty-eight believing Indians had returned to the missionaries, and they therefore resolved, with the consent of the Governor, to begin the building of the new settlement on the above-mentioned spot near the river Huron, trusting in the Lord, that he would collect the remnant of the congregation in this place. The Governor liberally assisted them in various ways, furnished them with provisions, boats, planks and the necessary utensils from the royal stores, and gave them some horses and cows. His Lady presented them with a valuable assortment of seeds and roots, and both gave them the most obliging proofs of their benevolent disposition. The Brethren were more particularly thankful to the Governor, that he assisted them in renewing their correspondence with Pennsylvania and Europe, so that they could again procure money, which was remitted by way of Montreal.

July
July 20th, 1782, the Brethren Zeilerger and Jungman with their wives, and the two single Brethren Edwards and Michael Jung set out with nineteen Indian Brethren and Sitters from Fort Detroit. Many of the inhabitants had conceived so great a regard for them during their abode there, that they shed tears at seeing them depart. The Brethren Senfman and Heckenwaelder with their families remained with the rest of the believing Indians at Detroit, to attend to the concerns of the reviving mission in this place. The travellers passed over lake St. Claire into the river Huron, arrived on the 21st in the evening at the place destined for their future residence and chose on the following day a convenient spot on the south side of the river, where they marked out a settlement, calling it Gnaden-huetten, in remembrance of their settlement on the Muskingum. But for the sake of greater perspicuity, I shall call this place New-Gnadenhuetten. In the evening they assembled to thank and praise the Lord for his mercy, and to implore his assistance, grace and protection in future.

They now entered cheerfully upon the work, built huts of bark, laid out gardens and plantations, for which they found good soil, and maintained themselves by hunting and fishing. Sycamore, beech, ash, lime, oak, poplar and hickory were the most common trees. They also found here sassafras trees of a larger size than they had seen any where else. Wild hemp grew in abundance, but salt was a rare article, and could not be had even for money. They therefore acknowledged it as a blessing of God, when they discovered some salt springs which yielded a sufficient quantity. There were also fresh springs in great plenty. The climate seemed very different from that on the Muskingum. In the beginning they were so tormented by the stings of all manner of insects, particularly musquitoes, that they were obliged constantly to keep up and lie in a thick smoke. But the more they cleared the ground of the under-wood with which it was everywhere covered, the more the insects decreased.
Ch. XI. The Chippeways visit New-Gnadenhuetten.

crewed in numbers. They had no where met so few serpents.

In August they began to build, and first erected only one street of block houses. Towards the end of the month, those who had stayed in Detroit followed them to New-Gnadenhuetten, and the missionaries moved into their new house. September 21st they had a solemn celebration of the Lord's Supper, which appeared as new to the Indians, as if they now partook of it for the first time. By degrees more of the dispersed flocked together. They had been in great danger of their lives in the country of the Shawanoes, and escaped only by a precipitate flight. Whenever our Indians passed through Detroit to New-Gnadenhuetten the Governor always provided them with food, and if needful with clothing. Even the inhabitants of New-Gnadenhuetten went now and then to Detroit to fetch provisions, which the Governor kindly ordered to be given them gratis, till they could reap their own fruits. General Haldimand at Quebec greatly approved of the friendly behavior of the Governor, and it must be in general observed, that the English Government always showed extraordinary kindness and benevolence towards the mission and its servants.

In Autumn 1782 the Chippeways began to visit New-Gnadenhuetten, and behaved with friendliness and courtesy. But as to the Gospel, which the Indian allotments preached to them with great zeal, they only heard it with slent attention. The Chippeways are generally esteemed the most polite and most peaceable among the Indian tribes, but they are very indolent, plant but little, live chiefly by hunting, boil acorns as sauce to their meat, and even like the Cutmuck Tartars eat the flesh of dead horses.

November 5th, the small flock of believing Indians, collected here to the number of fifty-three persons, met to consecrate their new church unto God, and having enjoyed great blessing during the celebration of the festival of our Lord's nativity, closed this year of weeping and sorrow, with praise and and thanksgiving, humbly adoring the Lord for the wise and gracious leading of His providence.

The beginning of the year 1783 was attended with the blessings of the peace of God. The missionaries particularly felt great satisfaction in having escaped from the power of the savage Delaware Chiefs, having made a sad experience of the dreadful situation of a Christian congregation under heathen rule and government. They began again, as formerly, to preach the Gospel with boldness, and now with pleasure, that the word of the cross proved also here to be the power of God unto salvation to some of the savages, one of whom requested and obtained permission to dwell at New-Gnadenhuetten.

God also blessed our Indians in externals. The maple-sugar boiling turned out well beyond expectation. In hunting they had extraordinary success, and their trade consisted chiefly in bartering venison and skins for Indian corn and other necessaries of life. They also made canoes, baskets and other articles, for which they found good custom at Detroit.

In May 1783 the missionaries received the joyful news of the conclusion of peace between England and the United States, and in July they had the pleasure to see the Brethren Weygand and Schebofsch arrive from Bethlehem, after a journey of above seven weeks by way of Albany, Oswego, Niagara, Fort Erie and Fort Detroit. By these Brethren they received an account of the sympathizing share which the whole Unity of the Brethren both in America and Europe took in their great affliction, and derived great consolation from this proof of brotherly love. Brother Schebofsch, whose wife and family had already settled at New-Gnadenhuetten, joined with them, but Brother Weygand returned in September with Brother Michael Jung.

The greater part of the Indian congregation was yet scattered among the heathen, mostly in the country of the Twightees, about 250 miles to the south west of New-Gnadenhuetten. The missionaries omitted no opportunity of sending verbal messages to invite them to come to the new settlement, Situation of the dispersed Christian Indians.

but frequently found that the bearers perverted their means, from motives of malice and treachery. The enemies to the Gospel spared no pains, to cherish the imaginary fears of the believing Indians had of the white people and ally of the English Government, merely with a view to steady the re-union of the congregation, and, if possible, to a greater part in the clutches of the heathen. There were truly as sheep among wolves, exposed to numbers of savages even of the little had saved. New-Gnadensburg was described to them very defolate and dangerous place, where they would with certain death. Some heathen Chiefs commanded in an authoritative tone, to be resigned to their fate to resume the heathen manner of living, "for now," they, "not a single word of the Gospel shall be any heard in the Indian country." Some weak minds intimidated, others even fell into sinful practices, and the flame afterwards hindered them from returning to the regation.

counts of these painful occurrences arrived from time me at New-Gnadensburg, and as no outward meas could be contrived to help the afflicted people, the whole regation was the more earnest in offering up prayer and oration unto God, that he himself would search and seek his scattered flock. These prayers were graciously an
ed. For in the summer of 1783 three young Indians ned to go to New-Gnadensburg, that with their eyes they might discover the truth. One of them said but his two companions returned with joy, to bring good news of what they had seen and heard to the rest.
hearing this report forty-three of their companions ret ed to return to the flock. But as they were sently detained on the road to procure food by hunting they sent a messenger to inform the missionaries of their
ion. The latter applied to the Governor of Detroit, manently sent them a sufficient supply of provisions, soon after after which they arrived at New-Gnadenhuetten, where the joy of all was inexpressible.

Others followed from time to time, not would they be kept back either by cunning insinuations or force. A baptized woman was threatened by her relations, who all belonged to the family of a principal Chief, that if she returned to the believing Indians, all her fine clothes should be taken from her. But she was not to be intimidated by these threats:

"What drives me to my teachers," said she, "is the concern I feel for the welfare of my soul and eternal happiness."

"What can it avail, though I possess a house filled with fine clothes, silver and other precious things, if after all, my poor soul is lost?"

Many of these scattered sheeps however found cause to mourn, even with bitter tears, over the damage done to their souls by their late intercourse with the heathen, which now grieved them much more than all the misfortunes they had otherwise experienced. On this account some of them were very bashful, and upon their arrival at New-Gnadenhuetten durst not as much as ask leave to dwell there: but said, "Though we should not be permitted to live again amongst you, yet it will yield us some consolation, to be allowed to see your dwellings at a distance." But they were all received with open arms, and treated with brotherly love and compassion. Others said through fear among the savages, and some fell back into heathenism.

In all these events it became more evident than ever, that God had been pleased to permit the Indian congregation to be fitted as wheat, that all who were not of Israel's right kind, might fall through. The missionaires were therefore the more thankful for the evident proofs of the labor of the Holy Ghost in the hearts of those who returned to the flock, and who soon recovered a full participation of all the blessings and privileges enjoyed in the fellowship of believers. A baptized man, called Renatus, who had been enticed away from the congregation at Friedenshuetten, and prayed for many years together
Ch. XI. Disputes among the savage Tribes: together in the wilderness, returned to the congregation in this place. Being ill, he begged for mercy and pardon. Some Brethren having assembled around his bed, gave him solemn assurance of the forgiveness of the congregation; after which he said: "I am now satisfied, and rejoice, that I shall soon be with the Lord for ever. I do not desire to recover, but that my Savior would soon take me home unto himself."

By the accounts brought by several who returned to the Brethren, it appeared that the three tribes of the Delaware nation had frequent and violent disputes, concerning the deplorable fate of the Indian congregation. Those of the Wolf [see Part I.] under the command of Captain Pipe, had sworn destruction to the Brethren, and made the ruin of the Gospel the chief aim of their warlike proceedings, in which view also they instigated the Hurons to act so treacherous a part towards our Indians, and as a reward for their success, had willingly made over to them the whole booty gained on the Muskingum. Finding themselves disappointed at last, and not able, with all their lies and cunning, to hinder the scattered Indian Brethren from following their teachers, they were greatly enraged. The other two tribes, who had never confounded to their proceedings, now reproached them in the most bitter terms on account of their malice and folly. One of the Delaware Chiefs, who was advised by the rest, to prevent the believing Indians in his territory from returning to the missionaries, replied, "I shall never hinder any one of my friends from going to their teachers. Why did you expel them? I have told you beforehand, that if you drive the teachers away, the believing Indians would not stay. But yet you would do it, and now you have lost the believing Indians together with their teachers. Who murdered the believing Indians on the Muskingum? Did the white people murder them? I say, No! You have committed the horrid deed! Why could you not let them live in peace where they were? If you had let them alone, they would all have been living at this day, and we should Part III. now now see the faces of our friends: but you determined a "otherwife." In a council of war, held in the autumn of 1783, in which they consulted how they might carry on the war to the greatest advantage, the above two tribes said to the Wolf, whose Chief was Captain Pipe: "Lift up the "hatchet, and make as good use of it against your enemies, "as you have done against your friends, the believing In- "dians, who always treated you well, and did not even lift "up a knife to defend themselves, when you attacked "them."

In November the missionaries began the usual conferences with the Indian antagonists, and renewed their covenant with them, to serve the Lord with faithfulness and in brotherly love, and to treat their brethren and sisters with love and forbearance.

Several of our Indians departed this life in the year 1783, and their end was edifying. Among others an Indian sister, called Martha, fell happily asleep in Lititz, a settlement of the Brethren in Pennsylvania. She was born at Shokomeko in the year 1737, and left a written account of her life, in which she relates with great frankness, how wicked she lived as an heathen; and that on her being awakened, none of all her sins and transgressions appeared so great and dreadful, as her unbelief in Jesus Christ, her Creator and Redeemer. That he afterwards received her in mercy and granted her a seal of his pardon and redemption in holy baptism, and then led her into the enjoyment of all the blessings procured for us by his sufferings and death. She adds: "To conclude, I can say with joy and confidence, "that though I feel myself very unworthy, yet my soul is "redeemed. I depend entirely upon his mercy. I have "nothing to plead, but his merits, and the virtue of the "blood he shed, when he was wounded for my transgressions." She was one of those four Indian Sisters, who were sent in 1764 to our Indian congregation, then confined in the barracks at Philadelphia. She had learnt the mantua-making business, of which she became perfect mistress, and assisted also in the school with most exemplary faithfulness. The cruel murder committed upon so many of her beloved countrymen and relations gave her declining health a fatal blow. She fell asleep in peace, longing ardently to see her Redeemer face to face.

In the beginning of the year 1784 a most extraordinary frost set in, extending over the whole country about New-Gnadenschutten. All the rivers and lakes were frozen, and the oldest inhabitants of Detroit did not remember ever to have seen such a deep fall of snow. In some places it lay five or six feet deep. The long continuance of this severe weather was the cause of great distress. March 6th the snow was still four feet deep; about the end of the month it began to melt, but the ice on the river Huron did not break till the 4th of April, and Lake St. Claire was not free from ice in the beginning of May.

As no one expected so long and severe a winter, there was no provision made either for man or beast. The extraordinary and early night-frosts last autumn had destroyed a great part of the promising harvest of Indian corn, and thus our Indians soon began to feel want. For what was bought at Detroit was very dear, and the bakers there refused to sell bread at a Spanish dollar per pound. The deep snow prevented all hunting. Our Indians were therefore obliged to dispense to seek a livelihood wherever they could get it, and some lived upon nothing but wild herbs. At length a general famine prevailed, and the hollow eyes and emaciated countenances of the poor people were a sad token of their distress. Yet they appeared always resigned and cheerful, and God in due season relieved them. A large herd of deer strayed unexpectedly into the neighborhood of New-Gnadenschutten, of which the Indians shot above an hundred, though the cold was then so intense, that several returned with frozen feet, owing chiefly to their wearing snow shoes.

They now began again to barter venison for Indian corn at Detroit, and thus were delivered from the danger of suffering the same extremity of distress as in Sandusky. As soon as the snow melted, they went in search of wild potatoes, and came home loaded with them. When the ice was gone, they went out, and caught an extraordinary number of fish. Bilberries were their next resource, and they gathered great quantities, soon after which they reaped their crops of Indian corn, and God blessed them with a very rich harvest, so that there was not one who lacked anything.

Towards the end of May, the Governor of Detroit, now Colonel De Peyler, removed to Niagara, and both the missionaries and the believing Indians sincerely regretted the loss of this humane man, their kind friend and benefactor. He recommended them to the favor of his worthy successor, Major Ancrom, in whom they found the same benevolent disposition towards them.

The more the good fame of New-Gnadenhütten spread, the more frequent were the visits of the white people, who could not sufficiently admire the expedition with which the believing Indians had raised this pleasant settlement. They also heard here the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which doubled had a good effect on some. As it happened, that no ordained Protestant divine resided in Detroit at that time, the missionaries, at the request of the parents, baptized several children, when they visited the Fort. Some parents brought their children to New-Gnadenhütten, to be baptized there, and a trader, who had two unbaptized children, went thither with his wife and whole family, and publicly presented his children to the Lord in holy baptism. This transaction was most awful and striking to all present. But as to the ceremony of marriage, which several persons desired the missionaries to perform, they withheld on many accounts to be excused as much as possible.

The industry of the Christian Indians had now rendered New-Gnadenhütten a very pleasant and regular town. The houses were as well built, as if they intended to live and die in them. The country, formerly a dreadful wilderness, was now cultivated to that extent, that it afforded a sufficient maintenance for them. The rest they now now enjoyed was particularly sweet after such terrible scenes of trouble and distress. But towards the end of the year 1784 it appeared that they would likewise be obliged to quit this place. Some of the Chippewas had already last year expressed their dissatisfaction, that the believing Indians should form a settlement in a country, which had been their chief hunting place: but the Governor of Detroit pacified them at that time with good words. Now they renewed their complaints, pretending, that they had only allowed our Indians to live there, till peace should be established, and even threatened to murder some of them, in order to compel the rest to quit the country. After many consultations, it evidently appeared, that the complaints and vexatious demands of this nation would not cease. Added to this, the Governor of Detroit sent word to the believing Indians, that they should not continue to clear land and build, nothing being yet fixed either as to the territory or government. The missionaries therefore thought it most prudent to take steps to return with their congregation to the south side of Lake Erie, and to settle near the river Walhaling. This proposal being approved of by the congregation, the Governor of Detroit was informed of it and preparations were made to emigrate in the spring of 1785.

November 14, 1784, the first grown person was baptized in New-Gnadenhutten, which proved a great encouragement, both to the missionaries and the Indian congregation, and the year was closed with joy and praise to the Lord, who had laid a peculiar blessing upon the internal course of the congregation.
CHAPTER XII.

1785. 1786.

The pleasing and peaceful internal state of the mission made the year 1785 a period of joy and consolation. The daily worship of the congregation went on unmolested and in a regular course, the public and private discourses of the missionaries were full of comfort and instruction, by which the growth of our Indians in the knowledge of Jesus Christ, and of themselves, was greatly promoted. They could rejoice in an extraordinary manner over the young people, whose internal prosperity exceeded all their expectation.

The preaching of the Gospel was also attended with much blessing to the white visitors. One of them, a captain of a ship, declared after the sermon, that the minister had certainly meant him; for his whole discourse had been descriptive of his state of mind, and had pointed out to him the whole of his present spiritual condition.

Several companies of Chippewas who came to New-Gnadenhuetten, were not only hospitably treated by our Indians, but heard the word of God from them. On Whitsunday two grown persons were baptized, which not happening very frequently at this time, afforded peculiar pleasure to the missionaries.

During the winter the wolves became very troublesome. They traversed the country in packs, seeking food, and tore a Chippewa Indian and his wife to pieces, not far from the settlement. One of the Indian brethren was chased for hoveral miles on the ice by some of these voracious animals, but being furnished with skates, he got the start of them and escaped. The missionaries had the misfortune to lose all their horses, by their greedily eating a certain juicy plant, which proved a deadly poison.

The believing Indians had now made all the necessary preparations to leave New-Gnadenhuetten. The agent of Indian affairs at Fort Detroit had also sent messages to all the nations on the other side of Lake Erie, to acquaint them with the return of the Indian congregation and to ensure to them a kind reception. But some unexpected accounts of new troubles in those parts and a variety of contradictory reports rendered everything so uncertain, that even the Governor of Detroit and the above-mentioned agent advised them not to emigrate at present. They therefore resolved to place once more on the river Huron.

In May 1785 the missionaries Jungman and Senfeman returned with their families from New-Gnadenhuetten to Bethlehem. They took a very affecting leave of their beloved Indian Brethren, with whom they had faithfully shared the greatest anxiety, distress and affliction, and then proceeded down the river Huron into Lake St. Claire, thence to Detroit, and crossing Lake Erie to Niagara and Ofewgo, then down Ofewgo river to Lake Oneida, and thence down the Waldbach to Fort Stanwix. They then arrived by a carrying-place at the Mohawk river, and proceeding to Schenectady, went by land to Albany, then by water to New Windsor, and again by land to Bethlehem. God disposed several people kindly to assist them in this tedious and perilous peregrination, and brought them safe to their brethren. Brother Senfeman met with a particular preservation upon the water, being in a sudden squall thrown overboard by the yard. But providentially a float of timber had come alongside, and he fell upon it without receiving any hurt.

The mission was now under the care of the Brethren Zeisberger, Heckenwaelder, and Edwards. The latter went in July with three Indian Brethren to Pittsburg with a view... to gain certain information concerning the state of affairs in the Indian country, and to search out for a proper situation on the river Wahsahao to establish a new settlement. In Pittsburg he was told, that strictly speaking not an inch of land to the east of Lake Erie could be called Indian country, the United States having claimed every part of it; and though they did not intend to drive the Indians away by force, yet they would not permit them to live in the neighborhood of the white people. He also received letters from Bishop John de Watteville, who had arrived from Europe to hold a visitation in the congregations of the Brethren in North America, by which he was informed that Congress had expressly referred the district belonging to the three settlements of the Chil-tian Indians on the Mukingum to be measured out and given to them, with as much land as the surveyor general should think proper. The same intelligence he likewise received from the Philadelphia papers, and hastened home to acquaint the Indian congregation with this unexpected decision in their favor, which occasioned universal joy. An Indian is naturally very averse to dwelling in any place, where one of his relations has been killed, but the believing Indians had even parted with this kind of superstitition, and longed to be there as soon as possible.

But one circumstance after the other tended to delay their removal. The Indian nations seemed resolved to carry on the war against the United States; and even a great part of the Delawares and Shawanoé declared their intention to oppose the return of the believing Indians by force. But notwithstanding these gloomy prospects, the missionaries sent word to those of their Indians, who were still scattered abroad, that having resolved to return to the Mukingum they should be glad to meet them beyond Lake Erie at any place they might appoint.

In September 1785 above forty strange Indians, Delawares and Mahikans, came on a visit to New-Gnadenhuetten.
This was the first visit of this kind the Brethren had received on the river Huron, and it gave them great joy to perceive that in many the Gospel found entrance. One of them spoke
Ch. XII. The Heathen visit New-Gnadensbutten.

spoke afterwards with one of the affiants, and said, "That he was anxious to be faved, but not having found the way to happiness among the wild Indians, he hoped to find it among the believers. One thing only," added he, "makes me doubt and hesitate: I am a wicked sinner, and have shed much human blood in war. When I consider this, I think I hear somebody say: It is all in vain; do not think of being faved: you cannot be converted, for you have committed too many sins. But yet I wish to know, whether there be help for me, and whether there be any one among the believers, who has been as great a sinner as I am." This gave the affiant an opportunity to declare to him the great love of Jesus to the worst of sinners, assuring him that he would also pardon and forgive murderers, having done it when hanging on the cross. The fame heathen one day related to a party, who arrived too late to attend the sermon, what he had heard and retained in his memory, viz.: "That we may receive the forgivenes of sins, new life and happiness in Jesus Christ alone, who had purchased all these blessings for us by his bitter sufferings and death upon the cross; that he is the true God, and our only Savior." He added, "Much more has been told us, but thus much I have kept in my memory."

Soon after this visit, another large party of Delaware, Mahikans, and Nantickoks came to New-Gnadensbutten, and their behavior gave great satisfaction both to the missionaries and their congregation. They did not miss one opportunity to hear the Gospel, being remarkably attentive and even desiring the affiants further to explain the words of the missionaries to them, so that there was reason to hope that the seed of the word would fall upon good ground and bring forth fruit in due season.

In the beginning of the year 1796 our Indians received another message, that the Chippewa Chief, upon whose land they had settled, was determined not to suffer them to stay any longer. Besides this a band of murderers of the Chippewa tribe rendered the whole neighborhood very unsafe.
Preparations made to emigrate.

fate. The missionaries therefore resolved, notwithstanding the threats of the savages beyond Lake Erie, to accomplish their design of emigrating this spring; and even though they could not at present take possession of their settlements on the Mungkingum, to settle in the first convenient place they should find. The commanding officer at Detroit, Major Ancrom, approved of this plan, and sent a formal message to the Indian tribes, that they should not molest the believers. He also managed matters so, that they received some consideration for their houses and plantations on the river Huron, came himself to New-Gnadenuetten, and most humanely offered to grant vessels to carry the whole congregation at once to Cayahaga, and to furnish them there with provisions. They accepted of this kind offer, as proceeding from the gracious interference of the Lord in their behalf, and were thus at once delivered from an embarrassing situation.

In March, Government having ordered a survey of the land, and determined that New-Gnadenuetten should be inhabited by white people, they received many visitors from Detroit, who took a view of the place and premises. Immediately after Easter 1786 both the missionaries and Indians put themselves in readiness to depart. April 20th they met for the last time in the chapel at New-Gnadenuetten to offer up praise and prayer unto the Lord, thanking him for all the benefits and mercies received in this place, and commending themselves to his grace and protection. Then they all set out in twenty-two canoes, except the family of Richard Conner who laid behind. The white inhabitants of that country, both English and French, came from all places to take leave of our Indians, and expressed great sorrow at their departure; having always found them upright and punctual in their dealings. At Detroit they were well received by the Governor and treated with great hospitality for several days. By consent of the agent of Indian affairs, a meeting was appointed between our Indians and several Chippeway Chiefs, one of the king's interprera attending. Some deputies of the Indian congregation delivered several speeches to the Chippeway Chiefs, expressing their gratitude for their goodness in allowing them to take refuge in their country, where they had now lived four years in peace and safety, and informing them of their intention to return to their own home beyond the Lake. After this address, they presented the Chiefs with a bundle of some thousands of wampum, in token of gratitude. One of the Chiefs, rising and holding a string of wampum in his hand, said: "Grandfather! we love you, and would rather that you would stay with us, and return to the river Huron." This empty compliment was however contradicted by another Chief on the same day.

The following circumstance gave peculiar joy to the missionaries: the whole neighborhood acknowledged the believing Indians to be not only an industrious, but an benevolent people, inasmuch that the traders in Detroit never refused them credit, being sure of punctual payments. However some of them were not sufficiently cautious, especially during the famine, when they were obliged to run into debt. One trader alone had a claim of 200l. sterling upon them, so that the missionaries feared, that disagreeable consequences might ensue. But the Indian Brethren began betimes to work hard for it, and at their departure, paid all their debts to the last farthing. There was only one poor man, who, being a father of many children, could not find money to pay, and therefore came to make his distress known to the missionaries. They were immediately willing to assist him, but it happened meanwhile, that as his wife was walking in the fields with the children, one of them found a guinea. She first took it to be a piece of brass, till the missionaries informed her of its value, when the father immediately went to his creditor, paid his debt, and had a few shillings to spare.

April the 28th the travellers went on board of two trading vessels, called the Beaver and the Makina, belonging to the North-West Company. Mr. Askin, a partner and director, had had kindly offered them for the service of the Indian congregation, and given orders to the captains to treat their passengers with all possible kindness and not to run any risk, in case of danger. They had a good voyage till they arrived at a certain island, where their patience was tried for four weeks, the wind being contrary the whole time. They pitched their camp upon the island, following the vessels whenever they shifted their position to be ready to start with the first favorable breeze. As often as there appeared the least prospect of proceeding, they all went on board, but returned on shore several times through disappointment. Once they set sail in good weather, and with a brisk gale, made so swift a progress, that they soon saw the coast of Cayahaga before them, but suddenly the wind shifted and drove them to their former station on the island. Most of our Indians were so sick during this gale, that they lay on deck half dead and senseless. To prevent their rolling overboard, the captains ordered them to be fastened to the deck.

During their residence in this island they met to their daily worship in the usual regular manner, praising the Lord who had helped them thus far, and trusting that he had wise reasons for detaining them here so long. They lived by hunting and fishing, and found wild potatoes, onions, and several kinds of wholesome herbs in abundance. But after a few weeks, observing that they had cleared this island of game, they went to another, where they found a better haven and good hunting, but a remarkable number of rattlesnakes.

May 28th a vessel sent from Detroit, to inquire into the cause of their long absence and to recall the Beaver, arrived from Detroit; the Makina was then ordered to carry the congregation over to Cayahaga in two divisions. But as this would have lasted too long, and might have occasioned great inconvenience, for want of provisions, the captains agreed to a proposal made by the missionaries, to land the people in two divisions at Sandusky bay, and then to carry the baggage to Cayhaga. The wind shifting in their favor, the first division, led by Brother Zeilberger, sailed on the 39th; but being unable to reach Sandufky, they went on shore at Rocky Point about eighty miles off that bay. Here they had to ascend very high and steep rocks, and to cut a way through the thicket to their summis, but yet were glad to set their feet on land again.

They had hardly pitched their camp, before a party of Ottawas who were hunting in that neighborhood, rode towards them and expressed great astonishment to find such a large number of people encamped in this pathless desert. Our Indians treated them as hospitably as their circumstances would permit, and were in return presented by the Ottawas with some deer’s flesh, and informed of the manner in which they might best make a way through the forest through which they had to pass. The day following they all set out on foot, and every one, the missionary and his wife excepted, was loaded with a proportionable part of the provisions. Those who formed the van, had the greatest difficulties to encounter, being obliged to cut and break their way through the thicket. They soon arrived at a large brook running through a swamp, through which all the Indians, both men and women, waded, some being up to their armpits in the water. Some of the children were carried, others swam, and Brother Zeilberger and his wife were brought over upon a barrow, carried by four Indian Brethren. When they arrived at Sandufky Bay, they hired boats of the Ottawas, from whom also they received frequent visits during their stay. One evening the savages had a dance, and none of the Chiritan Indians appearing at it, as they expected, some came and endeavored to persuade the young people to join them; but meeting with a refusal, they addressed Brother Zeilberger, begging him to encourage them. He replied, that the Chiritan Indians lived no more after the manner of the heathen, having found something better. June 3d they crossed the Sandufky Bay, and the day after, the river Pettiquoting, in a vessel belonging to a French trader. During this this journey they celebrated the Whitsuntide holidays, and rejoiced to see many attentive hearers among the heathen.

June 4th the second division of the congregation led by Brother Heckenwelder, overtook them in light canoes, made hastily of bark, the floor Makina having failed with the heavy baggage strait for Cayahaga. The whole congregation now travelled together, one half on foot along the coast of the lake, and the other in canoes, keeping as close as possible to the shore. June 7th they arrived at the celebrated rocks on the south coast of Lake Erie. They ride forty or fifty feet perpendicular out of the water, and are in many places so much undermined by the waves, that they seem considerably to project over the lake. Some parts of them consist of several strata of different colours, lying in an horizontal direction and so exactly parallel, that they resemble the work of art. The foot passengers had a noble view of this magnificent work of nature, but though the prospect from the water was yet more grand, our Indians passed with trembling, thanking God that the wind proved favorable and gentle; for if the least storm arises, the force of the surf is such, that no vessel could escape so near large against the rocks. They had hardly passed the last cliffs, which are about ten miles in length, on which Colonel Broadhead suffered shipwreck in the late war and lost a great number of his men, when a strong wind arose, so that the last canoe was in danger and but narrowly escaped. Whenever the heathen pass by these rocks, they sacrifice some tobacco to the water. Here the river Cayahaga, sometimes called the Great River, empties itself into the lake. After the canoes, the floor also arrived safe, and drifted so near the shore in a calm, that the baggage could be taken out and carried to land in canoes, upon which the floor returned to Detroit.

Want of provisions made the travelling congregation soon hasten their departure from the mouth of the Cayahaga. Indeed they found a large storehouse filled with flour; but not meeting with its owner, they would not take any, though pressed. presfed by hunger, and also observing, that the neighboring Chippeways continually robbed the store in a clandestine manner. They now built canoes, some of wood and some of bark, and continued their voyage up the river, till they arrived on the 18th of June at an old town, about one hundred and forty miles distant from Pittsburg, which had been forsaken by the Ottawaws. This was the first spot they discovered, fit for a settlement; for from the mouth of the river to this place, they had met with nothing but a wild forest.

Being entire strangers to the state of the adjacent country, they resolved to spend the summer here. They first encamped on the east side of the river, upon an elevated plain, built huts, and having with much trouble cleared ground for plantations, they even ventured to sow Indian corn, though it was so late in the season. I shall call this place Pilgerrub (Pilgrims Rest).

Here they regulated their daily worship in the usual manner, re-established the statutes of the congregation, and God blessed their labors. August the 17th they partook of the Lord's Supper for the first time on this spot, which to them was the most important and blessed of all festivals.

In externals, God granted them his gracious assistance. Brother Zeitberger having given information of the arrival of the Indian congregation at the Cayahaga Creek to the Governor of Pittsburg, and Brother Schobich having been at that place to endeavor to procure provisions, Meffs. Duncan and Wilton were so kind as to provide our Indians with a sufficient supply, flattering them for a great part of the payment. Congreg likewise ordered a quantity of Indian corn and blankets to be given them. They also found means to purchase several necessary articles from traders, palling through on their way from Pittsburg to Detroit, and as they had an opportunity of going by water to Sandusky and Put-quatting, they easily procured Indian corn from these places. The two hundred dollars, which they received for their houfes and fields on the river Huron, enabled them to make their payments good. In hunting deer, bears, and moose-- Return of the Christian Indians

Though our Indians were again comfortably settled, yet their minds were still bent upon returning as soon as possible to their settlements on the river Muskingum. But they were soon cautioned, from the best authority, not to proceed on their journey, as some white traders had been plundered and murdered by the savages on the Muskingum no later than last May. They now clearly discovered, why God had graciously permitted them to be detained so long on the islands in Lake Erie. Had the voyage been expeditious, they would have arrived on the Muskingum before the murder of those white people, and of course have been again brought into the most perilous situation. Some Indian Brethren having travelled by land to the river Muskingum, with a view to await the arrival of the congregation, happened to be at Schoenbrunn at the time of the above-mentioned murder, and faved themselves by a timely flight: for as a great number of white people went out immediately in pursuit of the murderers, the Indian Brethren would doubtless have been taken for them and fallen a sacrifice to their revenge. Many other circumstances plainly proved, that no settled peace was yet established between the Indian nations, who were all waiting for a renewal of hostilities: alleging, that the war-hatchet put into their hands some time ago, had not been taken from them and buried, but only laid aside for a short time. The American militia were also still greatly enraged at the Indians, and threatened to kill all our people, if they should attempt to return to their settlements on the Muskingum. The
The Christian Indians therefore thought it most advisable, to remain at Pilgerruh, till God himself should point out the way, if it was his gracious will that they should proceed. It became also more and more evident, that, as so many nations resisted the power of Congress and resolutely opposed the measuring of their lands, the Indian congregation was in much greater safety on the Cayahaga, than on the Muskingum, the warriors taking their usual route through the latter country. Another advantage attending the settlement at Pilgerruh was this, that in case of a recommencement of the war in those parts, it was easy for them, by crossing Lake Erie, to take refuge at Detroit or Niagara. Notwithstanding all these precautions, our Indians were however determined, not to give up their right to the land granted them by Congress, and at least, if possible, to take previous possession of it.

The first Indian Brother who departed this life at Cayahaga was Thomas, who as a youth had been fosiped at Gnadenhutten. He then escaped from the general massacre, but was now drowned in the river, as he was fishing. Since he lost his scalp, he was afflicted with so violent a rheumatism in the head, that it frequently took away his senses. This was probably the occasion of his death, for he was an excellent swimmer, and his body was found in shallow water.

Pilgerruh was often visited by Chippeways, Ottawas, and Delawares, who expressed a wish to hear the Gospel, which the Brethren preached to them with much pleasure. But here they again met with a source of trouble, which they had not experienced at the river Huron. For several heathen Indians, who had relations among the believers, came and endeavored to persuade weak minds, to return to heathenism. Their seductive intimations so far gained upon a married woman, that the forsook her husband, and with her children followed her heathen friends. But the husband with some courageous Indian Brethren pursued them, and, by force brought both his wife and children back. great joy of the woman, who already most sincerely repeated of her ruth conducit.

In September 1686 the missionaires sent some messengers to the differed Christian Indians, admonishing them not to lose their courage or to think that they were now too much entangled with the heathen, and cast off by God, but to go with boldness to Jesus, our compassionate Lord and Savior, call themselves upon his mercy and return to their brethren. In consequence of this message, many returned. But one of them, who had lost all his children and almost all his relations by the massacre on the Muskingum, falling into a deep melancholy, mistrusted the missionaires and retired among the savages. Being however uneasy in his conscience, he discovered his sentiments to Samuel, one of the above-mentioned messengers: "I cannot," said he, "but entertain bad thoughts of our teachers, nor can I get rid of them; they always recur to my mind. I think it was their fault, that so many of our countrymen were murdered at Gnadenhuetten. They betrayed us, and informed the white people of our being there, by which they were enabled to surpice us with ease. Tell me now, is this the truth, or not?" Samuel answered: "Let me first ask you, whether you are quite in your right mind. Your question sounds to me, as if you were not in your senses, and if so, I would not chuse to give you any answer." The poor man assuring him, that he was perfectly sensible, Samuel afforded the innocence of the missionaires in the most positive terms. Then recollecting himself, he replied: "I have now a wicked and malicious heart, and therefore my thoughts are evil. As I look outwardly, so is my heart within:" for he was painted all over red, and dressed like a warrior. "What would it avail," added he, "if I were outwardly to appear as a believer, and yet my heart were full of evil? However I will soon come and visit you."

Samuel endeavored his wife to speak to his own brother in regard to his conversion, but received this unexpected answer: "My ancestors are all gone to the devil, and where 2 they
"they are, I will be like wife." Samuel answered: "I tremble at your words, they are harsh. But now I will tell you my mind. As long as I live, nothing shall make me for sake our Savior and his congregation, neither tribulation, nor persecution, nor fear, nor famine, nor danger of my life. All this I can despise, if I only possess Jesus, and the salvation of my soul, of which I am assured if I remain faithful to him."

In October 1786, the missionary John Heckenwaelder took an affecting leave of the Indian congregation, whom he had served for many years with great faithfulness, and returned with his family to Bethlehem, attended by the best wishes and prayers of all the people, by whom he was greatly beloved.

CHAPTER XIII.

1786. 1787.

The Indian Congregation is encouraged to return to the Muskingum, but detained by unfavorable Circumstances. They resolve to leave Pilgerrub and to settle at Pettiquoting. Building of New-Salem. Pleasing Course of the Mission. Conclusion of the History.

David Zeisberger with his wife and the single Brother Edwards were now left alone to care for the mission. They had all but lately recovered from heavy illnesses, and had to surmount many difficulties attending their hard labor. But they put their trust in God, determined to employ all the remaining powers of their souls and bodies with joy in his service.

Meanwhile the Brethren at Bethlehem received repeated assurances from Congres that their endeavors to propagate the Gospel among the Indian tribes should be supported by Government. Mr. Charles Thompson, secretary of Con-grass, was particularly well disposed towards them, and in a letter declared that he should esteem himself happy to be made instrumental in saving the precious remnant of the Indian congregation, and in promoting the general welfare of this poor people. He therefore earnestly recommended the cause of the believing Indians both to Mr. James White, agent of Indian affairs south of the Ohio, and to General Richard Butler, agent for the northern district, in which Pilgrerruh was situated. This gentleman was so kind as to affire the Brethren, that he would seize every opportunity to promote the welfare of the mission, not only on account of Mr. Thompson's recommendation, but from motives of humanity and religion. Congress had likewise lent a written order, to acquaint our Indians that it had given Government much satisfaction, to hear of their return into the territory of the United States on this side of Lake Erie; that they had leave to go back to their former settlements on the river Muskimming, where they might be assured of the friendship and protection of Government, and that immediately upon their arrival five hundred bushels of Indian corn should be given them from the public magazines on the river Ohio, with other necessaries of life.

Our Indians accepted this kind promise with great gratitude, and rejoiced in the prospect of taking possession of their own land on the Muskimming, to which they were frequently encouraged by letters from Bethlehem. In the mean time they doubted not but that they should be left undisturbed at Pilgrerruh, and there have the pleasure to see their dispersed Brethren gather unto them from the heathen. But on the 17th of October they were again disturbed. A mes-fenger arrived late in the evening from Captain Pipe with an account that the Americans had surprised the towns of the Shawanoe, killed ten men, among whom was a Chief, burnt and pillaged the houses and carried away thirty women and children prisoners: that besides this, an army had arrived, from
from Pittsburg at Tuscaraw, and therefore the inhabitants of Pilgrerruh were advised to fly immediately, lest they also should be surprized by the enemy. The latter seemed so incredible, that the missionaries endeavored to persuade the Indians to the contrary. But all their arguments were in vain. The horrid massacre on the Muskimgum in the year 1782 immediately presented itself to their imaginations, and they were so overcome with fear and dread, that in the same night all the women and children fled into the thickest part of the wood to hide themselves. On the following day, field huts were erected for them, where they might shelter themselves from the cold, and the Indian Brethren brought them provisions. Messengers were sent to Tuscaraw and on the road to Pittsburg, whose evidence tended to prove, that the fear of an American army was entirely without foundation. However in the evening of the 27th of October, a great noise and the sound of many horse-bells was distinctly heard. The missionaries supposed it to proceed from a transport of flour, which proved true; but the Indians would not even listen to their representations, but imagining that the army was now approaching to surprize and kill them, fled with precipitation into the woods, and left the missionaries quite alone in the settlement. In the following days they recovered by degrees from their fright and all returned to their dwellings.

November 10th a new and spacious chapel was consecrated, but they built only a few dwelling-houses, most of the Indians being content to spend the winter in poor huts slightly reared, for they considered themselves here as guests, and therefore gave this place only the name of a night's lodging, that is, a year's residence. Thus they suffered much from the wet and snow, which was three feet deep.

They began the year 1787 very comfortably, with the pleasing hope, that they should conclude it on the Muskimgum. Nor did they doubt of spending it in peace and tranquility. But they soon were threatened with a storm by the Indian nations.
Towards the close of the year 1786 the well-known Delaware Captain Pipe sent a belt of wampum to inform our Indians, "That as appearances among the Indian nations were very doubtful and a new war would probably break out, the believing Indians were not well situated on the Cayahaga, but as much as ever in danger of being surprised by the white people: that he therefore would place them in Pettquoting, and order that country to be cleared for them, where they might always live in peace and security. "That they should believe him to be sincere and accept of his offer." Our Indians, fearing to raise new enemies, did not return the belt, and consequently by not giving a positive refusal, silently consented. Another message of the Delawares, sent at the instigation of an unfaithful baptized man, called Luke, inviting them in provoking terms, to come to Sandusky, they answered resolutely in the negative. In the year 1787 at a great council of the Indian tribes held at Sandusky, it was resolved, that the war with the United States of America should begin again with renewed vigor, and that if the Chippewa Indians would not of their own accord give up the idea of returning to the Muskingum they should be obliged to do it by force; that the missionaries should not be taken prisoners, but killed, in order at once to put an end to the mischief. When this account came to Filgerruth, the missionaries comforted the congregation by representing to them in the most soothing terms, that though they might reasonably expect several heavy troubles, yet they might rest assured, that their firm and childlike confidence in God our Saviour would not be put to shame. This and similar exhortation, frequently given to the congregation in their daily meetings, had so salutary an effect, that the course of the congregation became peaceful and edifying. The missionaries considered the above-mentioned account as a warning, to use the utmost precaution in the future leading of their Indian congregation. In the same month the Inquisitors sent a solemn embassage to the warlike nations, and especially to the Shawanoes, advising them to keep peace.
was also reported that nine or ten tribes had, by the persuasion of the English Governor of Detroit, declared for peace, and that they would immediately proceed to punish such, as should commence hostilities. However Lieutenant-colonel Harmar sent word to the missionaries, that our Indians should not wait till their arrival on the Muskingum to receive the 500 bushels of Indian corn, 100 blankets and other necessaries, but might now fetch them from Fort Intoho. General Butler wrote also to Brother Zeitberger, that they might for the present remain at the Cayahaga, but mentioned no reason, not willing to entrust it to a letter. The savages frequently repeated their former dreadful threats, and there was no doubt, but that they waited only for a convenient opportunity to put them into execution. All these circumstances tended to distress the Indian Brethren. Their own inclination was fixed to return to the Muskingum, and this was also the wish of the Brethren at Bethlehem. The United States advised them to stay for the present at the Cayahaga, and the savages on the contrary would not suffer them to remain there, but insisted on their removal to some other country. Though they did not know how and whither the hand of the Lord would direct their course, they prepared boats and every thing else necessary for their removal, and were unanimously resigned to the will of God, to go to the first place, to which He should point out an open way. This disposition of the Indian congregation greatly comforted the missionaries; yet they were not a little embarrassed, knowing that their people looked up to them for advice, in order to come to a final determination. Acclimated to venture their lives in the service of the Lord, they were unconcerned as to their own safety, and if that alone had been the point in question, they would not have hesitated a moment to return to the Muskingum. But they durst not bring the congregation committed to their care into so dreadful and dangerous a situation. They rather thought it their duty, to sacrifice every other consideration to the welfare and safety of their flock, and therefore, after mature deliberation, resolved to propose to them, that they should give up all thoughts of returning to the Muskingum for the present, but at the same time not remain on the Cayahaga, but rather seek to find some spot between that river and Pettiquoting, where they might procure a peaceable and safe retreat. This proposal was solemnly accepted, first by the Indian affiants and then by the whole congregation. Soon after this, the following message arrived from a Delaware Chief to Brother Zeilberger: "Grandfather! having heard, "that you propose to live on the Muskingum, I would advise "you, not to go thither this spring. I cannot yet tell you "my reason: nor can I say, whether we shall have war or "peace, but so much I can say, that it is not yet time. Do "not think that I wish to oppose your preaching the word of "God to the Indians. I am glad, that you do this; but I "advise you for your good. Go not to the Muskingum.

'This message tended to confirm the people in the above-mentioned resolution, which was undoubtedly the most prudent at that time; and in the beginning of April, some Indian Brethren set out, with a view to seek a place for a new settlement, and found one much to their mind.

Meanwhile the Indian congregation of Pilgerruh celebrated Lent and Easter in a blessed manner. The public reading of the history of our Lord's passion was attended with a remarkable impression on the hearts of all present. The congregation could not sufficiently express their desire to hear more of it, and it appeared as if they now heard this great and glorious word for the first time.

April 19th, the Chiritian Indians closed their residence at Pilgerruh, by offering up solemn prayer and praise in their chapels, which they had used but a short time. They thanked the Lord for all the internal and external blessings He had conferred upon them in this place, and then set out in two parties, one by land, led by Brother David Zeilberger, and the other by water with Brother Edwards. The latter were obliged to cross over a considerable part of Lake Erie. But before they had left the Cayahaga creek, a dreadful storm arose, Ch. XIII. Short Abode in a pleasant Country.

arose, the wind blowing from the lake. The waves beat with such violence against the rocks described above, that the earth seemed to tremble with the found. The travellers thanked God that they were yet in safety in the creek, and being in want of provisions, spent the time in fishing. One night they fished with torches, and pierced above three hundred large fish of a good flavor, resembling pikes, and weighing from three to four pounds, part of which they roasted and ate, and dried the rest for provisions on the voyage. April 24th, the travellers by land, and the day following those who went by water, arrived at the place fixed upon for their future abode. It appeared like a fruitful orchard, several wild apple and plum trees growing here and there. They had never fertilized upon so good and fertile a spot of ground. The camp was formed about a league from the lake, which in these parts abounded with fish. Wild potatoes, an article of food much esteemed by the Indians, grew here plentifully. The Brethren rejoiced at the thoughts of establishing a regular settlement in so pleasant a country, especially as it was not frequented by any of those savages who had hitherto proved such troublesome neighbors.

But their joy was of short duration. April 27th a Delaware Captain arrived in the camp, and informed them that they should not remain in this place, but live with them at Sandusky, adding, that they should consider it as a matter positively determined, and not first deliberate upon it. He added, as usual, the most solemn declarations of protection and safety. The captain assured them likewise, that the place appointed for their habitation was not in the vicinity of any heathen towns, but ten miles distant from the nearest. To the missionary, David Zeisberger, he had brought the following particular message: "Hear, my friend; you are my grandfather. I am not ignorant of your having been formerly adopted by our chiefs as a member of our nation. No one shall hurt you, and you need not have any scruples about coming to live at Sandusky." He then delivered a string of wampum. Disagreeable as this message was to our Indians, Indians, and though they represented to the Captain the malice, deceit and treachery of the Delaware Chiefs which they had painfully experienced for these six or seven years past, yet after many furious confutations, they and the missionaries could not but resolve to submit to the will of the Chiefs, lest they should bring new troubles and perplexations upon the mission. Their answer was therefore in the affirmative. Brother Zeisberger answered likewise the particular message sent to him to the same effect, yet, with this express condition, that all the other white Brethren should have the same privileges granted them, and his successor in office enjoy the same rights.

Nothing appeared in this affair so dreadful to the missionaries, as the prospect of being again subject to heathen rule and government. Yet they could not deny that it was more agreeable to their peculiar calling to live in the midst of those heathen, to whom they were to preach the gospel, and therefore write, "We must be satisfied to live in the very nest of Satan, for it appears indeed, as if every savage Indian as possessed by a number of evil spirits, with whom we must be at war."

In the beginning of May, they with great joy welcomed two assistants in the work of the mission, sent by the congregation at Bethlehem, Michael Jung and John Weygang, and soon after left a country so pleasing in every respect with great regret, proceeding partly by water on Lake Erie, partly by land along its banks to Pettquotting, where they encamped about a mile from the lake. Here they found that the greatest part of the message brought by the above-mentioned captain from the Delaware Chiefs was fallacious; for the place fixed upon for their residence was not above two miles from the villages of the savages. Our Indians therefore and the missionaries resolved not to go any farther for the present, lest they should be entangled in some snare, but to settle near Pettquotting, and even to maintain their situation in opposition to the will of the Delaware Chiefs. They then sought and found an uninhabited place situated on a river called Ch. XIII. New-Salem built.

called also Huron, which empties itself into the lake at Petqquoting, whither they all went in canoes on the 11th of May, and before night a small village of bark-huts was erected. Hence they sent deputies to the Chiefs, to inform them of their resolution and their reasons for it, and obtained leave to stay at least one year in that place without molestation. They hoped also, that during that period, circumstances might alter in their favor, and that they might perhaps be permitted to continue there longer.

They therefore made plantations on the, west bank of the river, and chose the eait, which was high land, for their dwellings. This place was called New-Salem. Here they celebrated Ascension-day and Whit-festival in the usual manner, meeting in the open air, and on the sixth of June, finished and consecrated their new chapel, which was larger and better built than that at Pilgerruh. They indeed wanted more room, for a larger number of heathen Indians attended their public worship here, than at the Cayahaga, and hardly a day passed without visits from strangers. June 9th the whole Indian congregation held a love-feast, for which flour had been sent from Bethlehem. A letter to the believing Indians from Bishop Johannes von Watteville was read to them on this occasion, and heard with much emotion. He had held a visitation in all the settlements of the Brethren in North America, but to his sorrow found it impossible to go to the Indian congregation, and was then on his return to Europe;
On the same day the congregation at New-Salem partook of the Lord's Supper, rejoicing in God their Savior, whose gracious presence comforted their hearts in an inexpressible degree.

Among those savages, who in 1787 became concerned for the salvation of their souls, was a noted profligate, who in 1781 had formed a plan against the lives of the missionaries, and often lain in ambush to surprize them, but without success. He was travelling, and came without design to Pilgerruh, where he heard the gospel with great attention, and afterwards expressed his ardent desire, to be delivered from the service vice of sin; not would he leave the congregation, but giving up his intended journey, staid with the believing Indians, turned with his whole heart unto the Lord, and was baptized at New-Salem, some months after. A Huron Indian, who had been invited by his people to be their Chief, refused it, came to New-Salem, and declared that he had been these two years seeking in vain for something better than worldly honor;
"Now," said he, "I seek rest for my soul, and believe that I shall find it here. I therefore desire to live with you, that I also may enjoy the good which you possess, and of which you can bear witness." The Brethren gladly preached to him Jesus and his great love to poor sinners: but as he first wished to go to his heathen relations beyond Fort Detroit, to take leave of them, he was told, that he could not obtain leave to live at New-Salem, till after his return, as there had been many instances of perfons, who, having received permission to live with the believers, would yet visit their heathen friends and relations, against which our Lord himself cautions us (Luke, ix. 62.), and had suffered so much harm in their souls, that they never returned. Hearing this, he resolved to give up all idea of a visit, sent word to his relations that he had changed his mind, and remained faithfully attached to the congregation, with whom his heart found that rest, which he had so long fought for.

Many of the poor lost sheep were found in this period; and the above-mentioned unfaithful Luke was of their num-er. He had been the principal promoter of all the troubles occasioned to our Indians by the heathen Chiefs, and seemed resolved to force them to remove to Sandusky, where he had lived since his removal from the congregation. When his wife once came to Pulterruh on a visit, Brother Zeitberger asked her, whether she and her husband lived happily and peacefully together? "No," said she, "we accuse each other by turns:
You are the cause that we are separated from the believers."
"You see," replied the missionary, "that you are not in the right track; for otherwise you would enjoy rest and peace in your hearts." He then exhorted them, to return, while Ch. XIII.
Account of New-Salem.

It was yet time, and not to wait till all hopes of readmission were past. She expressed a great desire after it, but her husband would not consent. He even came in spring to New-Salem, and took great pains to raise apprehensions in the minds of our Indians, and make the present place of their residence suspiions. However, his insinuations were not only disregarded, but the serious exhortations of the missionary David Zeisberger, and all the Indian assistants, who took much trouble to convince him, had so good an effect, that the poor man was struck with remorse. He confessed his dreadful offences against God and his children, begged forgiveness and readmission, and obtained his request, to the great joy of the whole congregation; for all had frequently offered up prayers for the salvation of this poor man and his family, whose spottacy had contributed to bring distress upon them.

It pleased to observe the increase of the Indian assistants in grace and knowledge of the truth. One day after a sermon preached upon the words of our Savior (Matt. vii. 7.), "My house shall be called of all nations the house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves," Samuel observed, that it was useful to apply these words to our own hearts. "Our body," added he, "is a temple of God. Our Savior has washed us from sin in his own blood, and prepared our hearts for his dwelling. Now we ought not to defile the temple of God, and to suffer sin and its evil fruits, from which our Savior has delivered us, to enter in, but always to remember, that we are not our own, but the Lord's, with soul and body, and therefore to preserve ourselves undefiled."

The missionaries rejoiced likewise at the prosperity of the young people, born and educated in the congregation, many of whom excelled the aged, in proving that they lived by faith in the Son of God, and walked in conformity to the precepts of the gospel.

According to the accounts transmitted to the middle of the year 1787, the missionaries were full of courage and confidence, and and diligent in the work of God committed unto them. They praisèd the Lord for the proofs He gave them, that their labors were not in vain; for the believing Indians had a real enjoyment of the precious salvation, procured for us by our Lord Jesus Christ, which they on all occasions endeavored to make known to their neighbors. Old and young appeared cheerful and contented.

The mission had now stood forty-five years. From a register of the congregation, dated in 1772, we learn, that from the beginning of the mission to that year, 720 Indians had been added to the church of Christ by holy baptism, most of whom departed this life rejoicing in God their Savior. I would willingly add the number of those converted to the Lord since that period, but as the church-books and other writings of the missionaries were burnt, when they were taken prisoners on the Muskingum in 1781, I cannot speak with certainty. Supposing even, that from 1772 to 1787 the number of new converts was the same, yet, considering the long standing of the mission, and the great pains and sufferings of the missionaries, the flock collected was very small. The reason of this may be found partly in the peculiar character of the Indian nations, but chiefly in this, that the missionaries did not so much endeavor to gather a large number of baptized heathen, as to lead souls to Christ, who should truly believe on and live unto him. This small flock is however large enough to be a light of the Lord, shining unto many heathen nations, for the eternal salvation of their immortal souls.

I here leave the Indian congregation at New-Salem. We trust that God will assuredly lead them also in future with such grace, wisdom and faithfulness, that they will be able to confess with thanks and praise: He is wonderful in counsels and excellent in working. Isa. xxviii. 29.
APPENDIX.

In the year 1787 an event took place, which seems to promise much for the future service of the mission among the Indians.

The Brethren in North America established a society called The Society of the United Brethren for propagating the Gospel among the Heathen, in imitation of the Society for the furtherance of the Gospel established by the Brethren in England forty-six years ago. This society consists of all the elders and ministers of the congregations of the United Brethren in North America and many other members chosen at their request and with the consent of the Society. They held their first meeting on the 21st of September 1787 at Bethlehem in Pennsylvania, and February 27, 1788, this society was declared and constituted a body politic and corporate by the State of Pennsylvania. The following is an extract of the act:

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

An Act to incorporate the Society for propagating the Gospel among the Heathen, formed by Members of the Episcopal Church of the United Brethren or Unitas Fratrum.

WHEREAS it has been represented to this House by the Reverend John Ettwein, one of the Bishops of the Church called Unitas Fratrum or the United Brethren, and the Reverend John Meder, Pastor in ordinary of the said Church in the city of Philadelphia, That since the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and forty, when the said Church began to make settlements in America, the principal aim of their members, coming over from Europe, was to carry the glorious truths of the Gospel to the Indians here; that they have without intermission continued their labors among the Indians, and notwithstanding the increase of expenses and other difficulties, are resolved to pursue and support this commendable work, and for this purpose have formed a society for propagating the Gospel among the Heathen, and entered entered into certain rules of association (a copy whereof they have subjoined to their petition) and prayed to incorporate the said society:

And whereas the propagation of the Gospel among the Indians of America is of great importance to the citizens of this and other the United States, and may, by the blessing of God, be conducive to the peace and security of the inhabitants and settlers of our frontiers; and by living examples of the missionaries and the converts, the savages may be induced to turn their minds to the Christian religion, industry, and social life with the citizens of the United States:

And whereas this House is disposed to exercise the powers vested in the Legislature of the Commonwealth, for the encouragement of all pious and charitable purposes:

Be it therefore enacted, &c. &c. Here follows a circumstantial declaration, that by the laws of the State the said society is a corporation, entitled to all rights, privileges, &c. enjoyed by other bodies corporate in the State of Pennsylvania.

As the views of the society are best understood by their statutes, they are here inserted at length:

STATED RULES

Of the Society of the United Brethren, for propagating the Gospel among the Heathen.

WHEREAS we the subscribers are fully convinced of the Christian zeal and godly concern, wherewith the evangelical Church, known by the name of the _Unitas Fratrum_ or _United Brethren_, has at all times endeavored to spread the saving knowledge of Jesus Christ, and to carry the same even to the remotest heathen nations; for which purpose also in this part of the world a mission among several Indian nations was begun by said Church, and with blessing and good success continued near fifty years: And as we ourselves are members of said Church, which has the salvation of men so near at heart, we cannot but most ardently wish to further this this great work of God, the conversion of the Heathen, by all just and possible means.

Therefore we have resolved, in the name of God, to form ourselves into a Society by the name of "A Society of the "United Brethren for propagating the Gospel among the Heathen."
And do herewith unanimously agree to the following articles, as the stated rules of this Society:

ARTICLE I.

This Society being formed of members of the Brethren's Church, shall have its fixed seat at Bethlehem, in Northampton county, in the State of Pennsylvania, where the board of directors will meet and the usual general meetings shall be held.

ARTICLE II.

All bishops, presbyters, and deacons of the Brethren's Church, and others in office in the Brethren's congregations, are, by virtue of their office and character, members of this Society. Others may, upon their desire, or the recommandation of others, be also received as members, with the consent of the Society.

ARTICLE III.

Only such members of the Society who are also members of the Brethren's Church, have seat and vote in the Society, and are considered as actual members.

Besides such, the Society may receive as honorary members, persons of other churches and denominations, who are friends and well-wishers to the furtherance of the Gospel among the Heathen; who may be admitted to the general meetings of the Society, but have no vote in their deliberations.

ARTICLE IV.

As the true and only design of the Society is, to assist such misionaries and their affiants, who from time to time are sent to the Heathen by the directors of the Brethren's missions; we will not confine our assistance to mere stated charities and contributions, but it shall be a pleasure to us to further this blest work by all possible means.

PART III.
Appendix.

ARTICLE V.

We therefore hold ourselves in duty bound to support the missions of the Brethren by a free contribution, and taking an efficient part as often as it is found necessary.

ARTICLE VI.

To be constant directors of our Society, we choose, constitute, and appoint those Brethren, who are appointed to be directors of the Brethren's congregations in North America, and their successors in office, together with three other assistants, to be chosen by the Society from the number of the actual members.

ARTICLE VII.

The three assistant directors shall annually be chosen or confirmed by a majority of votes, in the appointed general meeting of the Society.

ARTICLE VIII.

In the same general meeting also the president of the Society shall annually be chosen in like manner, or confirmed by a majority of votes, so that the same be always one of the aforesaid directors.

ARTICLE IX.

The directors of the Society shall take care that a true and regular account of the situation and progress of the missions be from time to time communicated to the members of the Society. And the agents for the missions of the United Brethren are to correspond with the missionaries and their assistants, and to provide them with whatever the directors find necessary.

ARTICLE X.

One of the appointed agents is always to officiate as treasurer and book-keeper of the Society, and has every year to give a regular and true account to the Society of all receipts and disbursements.
Appendix.

ARTICLE XI.
directors shall, at least once every year, appoint a meeting of the Society: But the president, with four s, may, if the concerns of the Society require it, call ordinary meeting.

ARTICLE XII.
directors are likewise empowered, upon an emer- to borrow in the name of the Society any sum of not exceeding five hundred dollars, from one gene- alizing to another, and to expend it for the use and bene- fit of the society, whereof it to give an account to the Society in the next following general meeting.

ARTICLE XIII.
onations and bequests to the Society, and all its pof- effects, and property: whatsoever and wheresoever, all times and for ever, be and remain appropriated, made use of, and expended, to no other use but advantage and the furtherance of the purposes among them.
every member of the Society renounces herewith, all and every claim to the property of the Society, mils that in case anything of said property shall left to his hands, or put upon his name in trust, he no manner abuse such confidence, nor make for him- nis heirs any claim or pretension to property, thus in- unto him by the Society: And that he will act and do igneasely to the disposition of the Society by the direct- I will, at all times and in all cases, faithfully and ally observe their orders.

ARTICLE XIV.
as we have hereby no other view or aim but the fur- e and propagation of the knowledge of Jesus Christ the poor benighted Heathen, and esteem them a grace to that praise-worthy work by our small services, being to it by the love of Christ—all the directors, af-

R. 2

 synopsis,
Appendix.

assistants, and officers, of the Society, renounce for ever all demands and claims for salaries or rewards for their services, and promise to do all they do for the benefit of the Society, gratis.

ARTICLE XV.

The Society will be ever ready and willing to provide, in a fatherly manner, the necessaries of life for the missionaries and their assistants, as also for their widows and children. Therefore the missionaries and their assistants shall, in conformity to the rules of the Brethren, set aside all temporal views and interests, and their sole and only care and endeavour shall be, to preach the Gospel to the Heathen, to instruct them faithfully in the doctrine of Jesus and his apostles, and by their word and example to encourage them to virtue and industry.

ARTICLE XVI.

If one or more persons are proposed for new members of the Society, the directors shall first consider, whether such person or persons can be useful to the Society in the execution of their aforesaid designs: And when the proposed persons are approved by a majority of the members present, they are then admitted as members of this Society.

ARTICLE XVII.

But if negative votes are found, the directors shall inform themselves of the reason of the objections; and if they can be removed to the satisfaction of the objectors, such person or persons may be proposed again, and be received as members, if no new objection is made by the voters.

ARTICLE XVIII.

As every member is at liberty to withdraw from the Society, the Society also refers the liberty to exclude any member when it is found necessary; but this shall not be done without mature consideration of the directors, and approbation of two thirds of the general meeting, and such an excluded excluded person can in no manner be re-admitted, but by a new election.

ARTICLE XIX.

When new members are received, the rules of the Society are to be read to, and subscribed by them.

ARTICLE XX.

The Society may in future agree upon new articles and rules, if circumstances require it; so that the same be not contrary to these present articles and the well-being of the Society.

ARTICLE XXI.

These articles, hereby agreed upon and accepted, can only after most mature deliberation, be altered; and if any alteration is made, it shall be in no wise against the constitution of the Brethren's Church, and the instruction for those Brethren and Sifters who serve the Gospel among the Heathen. And that each such intended alteration may be maturely examined by the directors and every voting member, it shall be first proposed in a general meeting, and communicated to such as were absent, and in the next following general meeting it shall be considered, and brought to a determination.

Bethlehem, Sept. 21st, 1787.
INDEX.

The Roman Numerals refer to the Part, and the Figures to the Page.

A

Adoption of the Brethren into the Mohawk tribe, III. 59.

Adverse, how considered, I. 57.

Agriculture, I. 68, etc.

Aitken, colonel of Brethren three, III. 280.

Allison, S., built upon the site of Old Goshen, III. 250. The Indians fetch corn from thence, III. 2.

Ambush, barracks at, the Indian congregation remain there for a time, II. 241.

American, North, people, I. 7.

Armour, Major, his kindred to the Christian Indians, III. 206.

R. J.
INDEX.

Amor, Gottlieb, and his wife and daughter, murdered on the Mahoney, II. 166.
Anna Cortez, daughter of the Shawmows, II. 113.
Bercey, Henry, II. 125.
Bertainty, an.aliasate, accompanies Zeilberger to Gochgupchauerk, III. 20. See also there, 24. Diligent in attending victims, 45. His last scene, 47. He sets departure, 93.
Apostolic, name given by the Inuits to their nation, I. 2.
Archer woman arrives at Bentheim, II. 116.
Armante of the Indians, I. 39.
Bering, Mr. his kind care of the travelling congression, III. 207.
Adjutant appointed at Shkokemec, II. 39.\nBering severance during a time of pre-Bucotara, 70. Bickert, 72. 73. 76. 128. 132.\nExcited to new real cur Adventures on the Chukchee, III. 4.
Opposed the run-trade, 26. wurde, 45. 57. 58. Pursued at Goch-Buchana, Cteut of Mennipol-moerkab, II. 117.\nSaid by Tassigulu, II. 172. Repeats, and depicts this life by pry at Waj MK, I. 199.

BADGER, I. 85.
Baptism, II. 24, 29, of three Indians, II. 20. At Shkokemec, 70. Of freed Indians at Brit steen, during its war, 180. Of two of the English murder-Beest, I. 85.
Beest, II. 85.
Berkman, Dr. that in incendiary, examines and defends the missionaries, II. 61.
Bement, I. 85. &c.
Bellow-Island, I. 77.
Befit, on the Swatara, a colony of the Brethren, II. 180.
Belgic and Indian, II. 10. The congregation there receives the privileges before of Shkokemec, 82.\n\nPreceded a destination for them, 214. Reis in not to fly during the Indian war, 216. Receive the fugitive Indians into Swatara, 155. I am dangerous situation, 216. Considered placed in them by government, 178. The conference at Philadelphia sends to Bichleben, 184. Some inhabitants attempt to win the trust, 217. The Indian congregation пользу the work of the Brethren on its way to Mathinba-baliing, 225. A conference held there some among the Indians, III. 64. Conference held by Brother J. F. Keesal, with the missionaries at Ba-leben, 148. Sympathy of that congregation with the persecuted Indian congregation, 204. Their charitable disbursements, 212.
Bendall, Gottlieb, d. on insanity, II. 125.
Berez, a mill on it, II. 4.
Big Truck, called Plenty in baptism, II. 164.
Big-house, name given to the Indians to the white people, I. 18.
Bids, I. 89.
Bystot, D. von, a missionary, II. 75. 111.
Border-Mark, I. 95.
Borie, Will, I. 83.
INDEX:

Barker, Peter, ordained minister of the colony in Georgia, II. 6. Succeeds Sanford, ib. 109.

Barr, Samuel, missionary, II. 67.

Bassett, minister, II. 114.

Breeding of cattle, I. 74.

Bruce, Colonel, his kindness to the missionaries, III. 146.

Bruce, minister, II. 54. Appointed to care for Batoga goch, &c. 115. His death, 116.

Burnage, Abraham, succeeds Bruce at Batoga goch, &c. II. 116. His emcessary expenses, 129.

Bustetor, Gottlieb, missionary, II. 12. Goes to Stokemuskau, 19. Is perished, 53. His address to the governor of New York, 63. His last instructions in following the stray, 64. Last illness and decease, 65.

Buffalo, I. 97.

Burr-vifferent, described, I. 42.

Burt, John, an officer of the missionary brethren and sisters on the Mahoeys, II. 169.

Carr, the Indian brethren and sisters in the Fosterfield at Philadelphia, 288.

Casting-places of the Indians, I. 279.

Butler, General Richard, III. 216.

C C.

CALABASH, used by the Indian physicians, I. 117.

Cannel, Frederick, arrives in North America, II. 82. Goes to Shomokin, 106.

Cane to Ononda, 180. His much-senemented decease, 126.

Cane, I. 52. 107.

Cape, one of the Six Nations, I. 2. Visited by the missionaries, II. 216. 124.

Case to Frederick, III. 4.

Cayuga Chief, pious convert of the Iroquois, III. 5. Proposes to remove the Christian Indians to the Cayuga Lake, 6.

Cayuga, Indian, I. 131. 124.

Cayuga, Indians, I. 3.

Cayuga, mountain, I. 86.

Cayuga, river, or Great River, the Indian congregation forms a settlement from I. 218.

Chehaware Indians, I. 2. Territory, 3.

Clerk, Indians, I. 2. Territory, 3. Embarks to the Delaware, 132. Was with the Delaware, 144. King of the Iroquois so called, II. 27. Fruit fruits baptized, 90.

Chief, Indian manner of appointing them, I. 130. Ceremonies at their death, 133.

Chicsaw, Indians, I. 2. Territory, 4.

Chico, Indian, born and education, I. 81. Greatly loved by their parents, 40.

Christian, Indian children educated at Bethelham, II. 76. 85. Thirteen baptized, 114. Regulations concerning them, 113. They sing in different ins. 82, 182. Pleasing course at Nain, 164. H-py departure of some, 339. 200. Remained of the uncertainty of list, II. 102. Great awakening among them, 170.

Chequamegon Indians, I. 2. Territory, 3. Number, 129. Join the Huron mission, III. 279. Refuse to minister the Christian Indians, 130. After to receive them, 190. Visit New Canadahouen, 191. Description of them, 159.
Begin to compose, 201. Empty compliment to the Christian Indians, 207.

Christian Renato, account of, II. 117.

Chirchfriarson, I. 132.

Ciefla, an Indian, murdered at Canadahouen, III. 180.

Chinook, not much attended to by the heathen Indians, I. 54.

Chine of North America, I. 5.

Chippewa, quadruple, I. 35.

Chinowich, a bird, I. 94.

Coughs
INDEX.

Dawes, James, a Chief, is converted, III. 38.

Discover describes, l. 146.

Dissensions, their end in the peace, III. 16. Give a grant, enjoining to the Christian Innsr. their land on the Mohawk, 103.

Dover, 127, 141. By the enemies to dispossess the missionaries, III. 170. His message to the Delaware and Hurons, 174. Induces upon the preservation of 215, 225.
INDEX.

Dispute among the Indians, I. 107, 46.

Dissatisfied Christian Indians return, III. 190. Many refuse among the Twichins, 194. Desired by various lying reports from returning, 195. Acquaint Gurumis, the Indian congregations, III. 158.

Died of fevers, I. 51.

Died, I. 74.

Dreams, Indian notion of, I. 43.

Drum, Indian, defeated, I. 42. Of the men, 48. Of the women, 57.

Ducks, wild, I. 92.

Durans, Mr. allits the Christian Indians, III. 211.

Dumas, Lord, governor of Virginia, marches against the Indians, III. 97.

Dumagco Port, burnt by the French, II. 190.

Dwelling, Indian, described, I. 52.

E.

EAGLES, I. 83, 46.

Ehseh, missionary, resides at Puchachtch, II. 181.

Eichelbrenn, a Delaware Chief, bears the Gospel with conviction, III. 94.

Ehseh as a missionary, II. 115, 135. Appointed missionary at Schenbrenn, 137. Refuses to fare better than his brethren, 135. Led to Sand-douty, 181. To Detroit, 184. His second journey to Detroit, 174. Is landed by EN, I. 79.

Emblem of the Narragansets and Shawanoes to Gaadenhuetten, II. 177. Second embassy, 145. Sent by the governor of Pennsylvania to the Delaware, 179.

Of the head-Chief of the Delawares to the Creeks, III. 90. Proposed embassy to the king of England to determine which is the holy religion, if

From Goochhachgoen to Schoenbrenn, 310.

Emirates recommended by the Indian preachers for spiritual cleansing, I. 77.

III. 164.

Empires, followers of Schwenkfeld, go to North America, II. 2. Emigration at Wijemick, visited by Mack, 155. By Graue and Kuntz, 131.

Empresses of the Brethren from Georgia, II. 5. Of the Christian Indian from Sierkemelo, 83. From Puchachtch, 84. From Gaadenhuetten to Wa-jomick, 217. From Menningaamk to Gaadenhuetten, 153. From Gadenhuetten to Bethlehem, 163. From Wechusentank, 211. From Nain, 245.

From Goochhachgoen to Lawunakabanneck, II. 44. From Lawunakabanneck to Lanenouwtenneck, 56. From Friedenhauzen to 10 Schoenbrenn, 77.

From Friedenhauzen to the Mulkingum, 59. From Schoenbrenn, 120. From Lichtennau, 128. From Gadenhuetten, Salem, and Schoenbrenn, 161. From New Gadenhuetten, 206. From Pigtursth to Petquing, 232.

E prosperity, III. 221. His attention to the Christian Indians, 233.

Erie, Lake, described, I. 5. Crowned by the Christian Indians, III. 508.

Rocks on its coast, 320, 321.

Epigra. Rasch's escape among the savages, II. 12. Cammerhorst's escape from a savage, 120. Zeilber's, 4th escape from a rum-traffic, 124. Graue's ecape from the Shawanoes, 164. Escape of the Brethren at Schwenkfeld, 167.

Of some Brethren and Sinners from the murderers on the Mahoning, 168. Of the congregation at Gaadenhuetten, 167. Sprengel's escape from an en-

Of the inhabitants of Nain and Wechusentank, 210. Of the Indian congregation in the huts of Philadelphia, 274. Rothe's escape at Frieden-hauzen, III. 88. Schenk's escape at Goochhachgoen, 285. Heckenbraul's to Liehtrum, 117. Of Indian Sinners from the Hurons, 123. Of an old man to the savages, 132. Of Rothe Graue on a journey, 146. Of two youths from the murderers at Gaadenhuetten, 180. Of the Christian Indians at

INDEX.

at Schenectady, 121. Of an Indian from wolves, 207. Of Brothers Schen-man on a journey, 4. Hindu, military, goes to Frenzdonshuten, III. 28. Conducts the Indian congregation to Schoenbrunn, 77. Preaches to the white people, 4.
A总而言之 some deposits from Schenectady to Gebieteitshoven, 11.

F

ARRICU, Christian, a student, his property in the Delaware language, II. 154. He is murdered on the Mahaten, 166.

Pauw, at Sandoyski, III. 165. 170. At New Gadenswillen, relieved in a spectacular manner, 159.

Fussile, fool of, who demands the expulsion of the Indian tribes, II. 171. Re-

Froid, sacrificial, I. 40, 44. See Sacrifice.

For wode, cut by, I. 15. Sower for, III. 40.

Fuir, constantly kept up in the Indian huts, I. 55. Wood store, 18.

Fisches, I. 96, 94. See ichis.

Fishtng, all-like manner of, defeated, I. 94, III. 227.

Fond of the Indians, I. 63, 67.

For, Mr. Countiiffer, his generous behavior towards the Christian Indians, II. 320. Proceeds a guest in their favor, 320.

Frenz, I. 83.

Friedrich, charter, grant with David Zehlberger to Onondago, II. 155.

Frey, Henry, II. 147.

Frenzdonshuten, near Biederheim, built, III. 84.

Friedenshuten, on the wigwam built, III. 2. Pleasing internal state.

Great numbers of in late visit Frenzdonshuten, 41. 72. Incunabula

Te deu wicke, 59. Church ruin, 18. Debated by rum-rakers, 45. Peaceful country, 50. Visited by Ueber 40. The inhabitants receive a double blessings.

Friedensstadt, built, III. 57. Pleading case of the congregation, 6. The inhab-

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask

Friedensstadt, I. 25. In number, 69. Surrounded by troops of savages,

Go to the council, 4 and the nation more, 71. Build a chapel, 16. Ask
INDEX.

Gibbons, 29.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
Gibbons, pass., 151.
INDEX.

Grah., 1. 72. Winter graft, 75. Withered graft burnt, 55.

Greentenders arrive at Bethlehem, II. 216.

Gregor, Christian, his visit to Friedenshütten, sec. III. 69.

Gurl, a bird, 1. 92.

H.

Hafen, 1. 46.

Hagen, John, sent to Georgia, visits the Cherokee, II. 6.

Haldimand, General, approves of the protection granted to the mission, III. 195.

Harri, 1. 56.

Harrar, Lieutenant Colonel, his message to the missionaries, III. 219.

Hart, 1. 91, etc.

Here, a bird, 1. 91.

Henigstüdt, Indian, 1. 35.

Hill, 1. 14, 24.

Hill, or mill, II. 211.

Hillhouse, Lieutenant, his attention to the Christian Indians, III. 233.

Hunting, the principal employment of the Indians, I. 72. Decries, 76, etc. The Indians cannot venture to hunt, II. 157. Chief support of the travelling congregation, 233. Proves a means of subsistence, III. 17. Turns out to a disadvantage, 194.

ries and the Christian Indians to the English army, 230. Their return to Phi-Zeisberger's to Goltzguthorn, II. 20. Of the Christian Indians to Kakeback, 56. From Friedenau to Schenbrunn, 77. From the little-mans on the Mac-O-em to Senedery, 164. Far journey of the Missionaries to Fort Detroit, 165. Second journey of the Missionaries to Fort Detroit, 174. To the river Huron, 192. Of the Brethren Weygand and Scheberch, 192.
Of the Christian Indians to the Cayuga, 207. From Elijah to Oneida and Utica, 216.

Jung, Michael, missionary, III. 167. Accompanies the Indian congregation to the river Huron, 192. Goes to Bethlehem, 194. Returns to the mi-230.

Jungman, John George, missionary, resides at Pachatschag, II. 151. Goes to Friedenshof, III. 60. Obliged to leave Schenbrunn, 120. Returns to Bethlehem, after suffering with the Indian congregations on the Meahi-gum, 230.

K

KAIKAIKUNK, a town of the Delawares. The Chiefs invite the Brethren, III. 55.

Kepa, a Chief of the Delawares, account of, II. 114. Called Si.omen in baptism, 115.

Kiper, missionary, his dangerous situation at Shamokin, II. 164.

Kite, one of the wild fruits, II. 12. In baptism called Jacob, 21.

Kalin, High Sheriff, his attention to the Christian Indians, II. 225.

K.

LANCE, a Swirl, departs this life at Lichtenau, II. 145.

Lange, Indians, I. 15, &c. Several missionaries study the Meaqu, II. 105.

Lange, the Delawares, and Shawnees, 164.

Langevange. See Friedenau.

Lawrence, St. River, described, I. 7.

Lazarusorak, a town on the Ohio, Christian Indians settle there, III. 42.

Lent, a bird, II. 182.

Land Island, the Christian Indians fly to, and return, II. 218.

Leaven, given to the Delawares by themselves, I. 2.

Leavy, John Frederick, murdered on the Mahony, II. 166.

Leaven, Mr. of the Christian Indians, II. 120.

Lichtenau, on the Mac-Kimming, built at the request of the Delaware council, III. 130, 131. Internal prosperity, external troubles, 123. Providently located near Goltzguthorn, 216. Reception of the emigrants from Schenbrunn, 240. Visited by Huron warriors, 135. A sudden alarm makes the taken, 173.

Fur-

Linn, translated into the Mohican language, II. 184.

Lindau, I. 89.

Lindau, III. 17.

Lizensomat, Colonel, protects the missionaries at Secas, II. 72.

Logan, Commisary, his kindnese, and fai-ch to the Christian Indians, II. 210.

Long Island, in the Schenbrunn, Mack's ride to, II. 92. Travelling congregation passes by, III. 29.

Levon, a bird, I. 92.

Lord's Supper administered for the first time at Shakahaka, III. 46. At Schenbrunn, III. 75. For the last time at Friedenau, 77. For the last time at Salems, 160. At Elijah, 211. At New Salem, 243.

Lose, John, visits the Indian congregations at Friedenau, &c. III. 61.
INDEX.

M.

M. AT CORMICK, an English trader, kind to the Christian Indians, III. 159.

Machohawking, on the lower Susquehanna, II. 141. Awakened at Machildi- hilising, II. 209. The inhabitants prefer Ze-berger to other teachers, 206. The inhabitants forsake the place, and the Indian congregation refers to go there, 211. They abandon it, 211.

Mack, an Indian, I. 2. Territory, 5. Gospel preach'd first to them, II. 9. Indian, Cudonghenthen on the Muskingum, III. 89.

Mallett discourses, I. 39.

Majo sugar, I. 72. III. 27, 194.

Mame, Indian, I. 56, 67.

Marlait, Frederick William Von, acts as agent for the Indians, II. 217.

Marinda, Indian schollmistress, at Lotus, II. 34.

Martin, Frederic, missionary among the Negroes, II. 8. Arrives in Beth- lehem, 47.

Martin, John, an Indian brother, his conversation with an American general, III. 127. Murdered on the Muskingum, 150.

Marne, or Marie, I. 86.

Masseyman, Captain at Pahgotgecha, called Gideon in baptism, II. 43.

Mason, upper at Nain, II. 179. On the journey among the Indians, III. 78.

Medicine, I. 209, 247.

Milling, extraordinary, with the inhabitants of New Cudonghenthen, II. 154.

Firewalk meeting at Nain, 253. Lift meeting at Schohomoko, III. 150. At Lichtensh, 238. Previous to the missionaries departure for Detroit, 174.

M'N., Indian, described, I. 73.

Michael, an aged Indian, account of, II. 189.

M. bigt Lake described, I. 5.

M., I. 67.

M., Indian, or Mique, I. 2. III. 215. A captain of Miques refuses to murder Zeilinger, 156.

embarrassed,
INDEX

embarrassed, 114. Advised to fly to Pittsburg, but refused, 115. Avoid interfering with politicians, 14. obliged to write and deliver letters for the Indian Chief, 116. Subjected to influence the council of the Delaware nation, 117.
Threatened with death, 119. Greatly afflicted by the schism at Schenectady, 110. Plan to remove them not approved, 112. In continual danger during the American war, 120. etc. Comforted by a revival of grace, 119. Ther conference, etc. interrupted, 112. They are preferred in many instances, 119.
Rise of the Indian congregations, 139. Encouraged by J. F. Reed's letter, 148. Arrangements among them, 149. Their perplexities excused, being subjected by the governor of Detroit, 120. Refused by the governor of a forever, 134. Taken prisoners, 145. Suffer liberty, preach the Gospel, and administer the sacraments at Salem, 160. Forced to emigrate, 141. In par differently, obliged to receive alm, 123. Brought to Fort Detroit, 116. Well treated and examined by the governor, 160. Honорably acquitted, and resumed to Simsbury, 168. Tumbled from their brethren, 171. Brought the same time to Detroit, 171. Detained in Lower Simsbury, 186. On their return Detroit, 117. Immensely treated and left at liberty by the governor, 148. Will not forsake their people, 189. Collected them again at Detroit, where they are both the white people and the Indians with the Gospel, 150. Leave Detroit, and settle on the river Huron, 162. Send to all places where the different Christi an Indians reside, 194. Calls upon to baptize the children of the white peo ple, 152, 250. Travel with the congregation to the Ceyhaha, 177. Are encouraged by Congress, 170. Perplexed by rumors, 193. Precepts to the Inca dian to quit Pilgrims, 240. Go to New Salem, 252. Full of courage and con fidence, ibid.

Mishay-kwa in the Mahony, II. 122. Attack by the savages, 166. And de stroyed, 167.

Mishkagin River described, I. 7.

Mishkagin bird, 193.

Mongonchela river, I. 3.

Mongow tribe, adopt the brethren, III. 56. Endeavor to join the Mingus, 199.
With the nations against the Delaware and Christian Indians, 136.
Their假装 behavior of the Muskingum, 137.

Mose, Judge, of the Perses, his attention to the Christian Indians, II. 233.

Mosega, Colonel, his opinion concerning the missionaries, III. 121. Letter from the Delaware, 122.

Moshka, I. 2. Territory, 3. War with the Shawnees, 137.

Mosega, Chief of the Delaware, II. 152. Murder committed by French Indians, 146. Murder of the brethren on the Mahoney, 168. At Allmengold, 152. In the first settlement, 210. Of the peaceable Indians at Caneport, 212, 213.
Neer Smoebank, Ill. 15. Commanded by the Sounsack, 45. By the Chero kees, 54. By the Hurons and Mingus, 215. Account of the murder of the Chri stian Indians on the Muskingum, 176, 26.

Mishkagin, river, I. 6. First settlement made on, III. 74. Plants formed to de stroy the settlements on the Muskingum, 177. Pleasing course of the settle ments, 149. The settlements attacked by the savages, 151. Behavior of the in habitants, 132. Murderers assailed to forgive and kill them, 176. Perse trated the horrid design, 170. The Christian Indians with return thither, be cause fed by the Delaware and Shawnees, III. 204.

Mishkaw, I. 123.

N

KAIN, built, II. 175. Enlarging and flourishing state, 202. Alarm ed by wr, 7, 7. Blown up on all sides, 212. The inhabitants prepare for an attack, 213.
Fortikan, 215. Farewell meeting of the Indians there, 234.

Shawnee Indians, I. 2. Territory, 3. Their art of mixing poisons, 135. Sin gular custom respecting the dead, 212. Valued by the missionaries, II. 131.
INDEX.

Niw-jites, a town, inhabitants of Gadenhoutten remove thither, II. 257.

Nekenwescouno, Head chief of the Delawares, II. 173, 177. Ceremonies after his death, 224. Invites the Christian Indians to Gadenhoutten, III. 63. Receives and lodges Brother Zeisberger, 65. Invites the believers to settle on the Muskingum, 73. His opinion concerning more missionaries, 97. His grandson joins the believers, 100. His change of mind in favor of the Gospel, 102. Confirms it as of the Delaware nation to receive the Gospel, 103. His nephew elected. His son and family moves to Lichtense, his humble confession, 112. Endeavor to preserve peace, 214. Departs this life at Pittsburg, 216. His coffin frequently repeated in council, 66.

Nebatilis, a Chief, removes to Schoenbrunn, III. 98. Makes a party at Schoenbrunn, 219.

New Lights, II. 38.

Nochastome, an affiant, account of, II. 110.

Night-watchmen, a class of decoys, I. 46.

Nichtse, David, conducts a company of brethren to Georgia, II. 5. Visits Schenckemho, 17.

Nichtse, John, goes to Spangenberg, II. 218.

Nichtsem, Martin, and his wife, murdered on the Mahony, II. 166.

Noble, Thomas, merchant at New York, his kindarts towards the imprisoned missionaries, II. 72.

O

OCLETHERPE, General, forwards the Brethren's design of going to Georgia, II. 5.
Ohi, river, described, I. 6.
Ohioburg, Sarah, III. 146.
Oil, f.idli, I. 217.
Onatate, or at, or mucutat, I. 96.
Onata, one of the Six Nations, I. 2. Chiefs oppose the missionaries, I. 247. Their craftiness, 252. Onata Chief's declaration concerning the believers, III. 14.

Onda, Lake, I. 6.

Onondaga, one of the Six Nations, I. 3. Account of the town, II. 121. Two Indian thieves there, 247. Build a small house for their private use, 136.

Oriskany, lake, described, I. 5.

Oppheim, I. 84.

Ochkoada, I. 75.

Order of Government concerning the Christian Indians, granting them protection, II. 84. To remove thaws of Nain and Werquetank to Philadelphia, 214. To send them to the English army, 219.

Oren, I. 216.

Onawoch, I. 34.

Ow.en, I. 57.

P

Paints.
INDEX.

Palmer, much in us among the Indians, I, 49.

Parr, 1. 92.

Parr, Jr., 1. 92.

Paunispay, missionary, and his wife, escape from the murderers on the Mahen, II, 166.

Paxw, Chief of the Shawanees, brings a formal message to New Ontanutsuren, III, 157. His wife's baptism, 161. His efforts to save the missionaries at Dunmorick, 164. His old lodges Zeilerger, III, 82.

Pelham, I, 90.

Pomegranate Indians, join the Hurons, III, 157.

Pope, Popohbelle, interpreter at Machwhilbing, baptized, II, 207.

Pique river, caused by the travelling congregation, III, 209.

Pig, Aired Scudder de, governor of Fort DeWitts, feeds for the missionaries, III, 164. Examines, and honourably acquits them, 167. His great kindness towards them and the Indian inhabitants, 166. Orders the missionaries and their families to be brought again to DeWitts, 173. His humane and condescending bearing, 183. feeds a message to the Christian Indians, 190. Afflicts the mission in various ways, 191. 193. 195.

Piggle, I, 92.

Philadelphia. The Christian Indians ordered to go to Philadelphia, arrive, and are received admittance into the barracks, II, 216. They return thither, and are admitted, 223.

Pigeons, I, 92.

Pigeons, not hurt by rattlesnakes, I, 38.

Pipe, tobacco, I, 57. Of peace, 156.

Pipe, a Delaware Captain, his wife's conversion, III, 195. He is on an errand of the Golipt and joins the Huron Half-kings to destroy the mission, 195. His savage behavior on the Muskingum, 194. Bounds of having many fires of the Christian Indians, 163. Ordered to bring the missionaries to Fort DeWitts, 201.
INDEX.

Detroit, 164. Chief evidence against them, 166. Is confounded, and changes his mind, 167. His message to Pilgersob, 216.

Pikishob, Fort, built by the English, II. 190.

Plants, I. 65, etc. Official, 115, etc.

Poison. Suicide committed by taking poison, I. 58. Mixing of poison, 129.

Poigny, I. 58, 59.

Pox, an infect, account of, III. 79.

Paraguay, I. 84. A Jesuit goes to Shékomeko, and marries a baptised Indian woman, II. 57.

He is imprisoned at New York, 71. Relies at Pachargöch, 88. His plan of establishing a mission at Tucacora town fails, 101.

Ponca, awakening there, 102.

Poual, Joseph, goes to Shomokkin, II. 103.

Preachers, Indian, I. 55. A preacher sends a message to Friedenschutter, III. 23. A renowned preacher perverts the truth at Gébelsampekchouaken, 70. And at Kaftokunk, 71. A preacher in the Shawanoe country much moved, 83. A preacher hears the Gospel at Schoenbrunn, 98.

Prelfet, Martin, murdered at the Mahony, II. 168.

Priests of war, mode of treating them, I. 149.

Provision Island, settlement of the Christian Indians there, III. 216.

Pteurhomatué Indien, I. 2. Territory, 3.

QUADRUPEDS, I. 93.
Rebels, people so called, at Philadelphia, most humanly afflict the Christian Indians, II. 317. Exert themselves for their defence in the barracks, 242. Send a present of money for their relief, III. 86.

Quispeshi, fandow held at, III. 108.

I.

RACOON, I. 93.

Reeds in the Sulpheannah, III. 78.

Rattlesnake, described, I. 87. Their bite, and its cure, 124. Analys the traveling congregations, III. 78.

Rattlenskouke, its growth and use, I. 114.

Rau, John, employs the missionary Christian Rauch, II. 17.

Reception into the congregation, of an Indian woman, aged twenty-seven, III. 52. Of a family baptized by a Roman Catholic priest, 99. Of several persons, 242.

Regularia, external, at Gnadenhutten, II. 100. Made at Bethlehem during the war, 123. At Nain, 185. In the barracks at Philadelphia, 222. At Friedenschutter, III. 3. At Frie. Easton, 60. At Schoenbrunn, etc. 66. Their subservient aim, 102.

Riebel, John Frederick, visits North America, III. 142. His letter to the Indian congregations read, 149.

Rimbach, inhabitants of, desire to hear the Gospel, II. 21.

Religious ceremonies of the Indians, I. 32.

Rezinner, an Indian Brother, fixed and imprisoned, III. 213. Heears the account of his father's death, II. 281. It examined and acquitted, 64.

3
INDEX.

Refusals concerning the Missions, II. 29, 102. Made by the Indians at Bethlehem, 183. Of the conference at Friedenshutten concerning the removal of the Christian Indians, III. 64. Of the conference at Bethlehem, concerning the same, 65. Taken by the congregation on the Mekukum for their church, 128.

Rohrer, I. 102.

Rohrer, captain of Highlanders, II. 320.

Rohrer, doctor, his opinion concerning the people of North America, I. 1.

Rohrer, an English trader, kind to the Christian Indians, III. 169.

Rogler, Gottfried, 202 to Wajamiick, II. 133. His dangerous situation at Schoenbrunn, 174.

Rufer, Peter, II. 4.

Rye, a place belonging to the Brethren. II. 175.

Roda, John, missionary, II. 236. Goes to Friedenshutten, III. 34. To Tschibchepannick, 37. Conducts the Indian congregation to Schoenbrunn, 77. To the Mekukum, 89.

Runde, Gottfried, missionary, II. 140.

S

Salina, with his wife, baptized at Friedenshutten, III. 3.

Salem, on the Mekukum, built, III. 173. Pleading cause of the congregation, 179. The Huron Half-kings, and Captains Pipe arrive there, 232. Their transition, 175, &c. All the Christian Indians meet at Salem, 180. The settlement furthered and in full career, 182.

Salem. New, on the river Huron near Petiquotting, III. 123.

Salchi, I. 111. Spring, 65.

Samuel, first fruit of the Nanticok Indians, III. 14. Escape at Schoenbrunn, 152.

Senebaw, first settlement there, II. 7.

Sepoy, II. 35, how preferred, I. 48.

Spearfishing, in use among the Indians, I. 49.

Schmidt, John Jacob, called to Geisenhutten, II. 130. Improves the forests of the Indians, 133. Accompanies the fugitive Indians to Bethlehem, 111.

Appointed to go with the Indian congregation to the Seigerbaume, 132. Appointed missionary at Friedenshutten, III. 90. Returns to Beth hem, 128.

Schmidt, Anthony, goes to 50-whelker. II. 120.

Schoenbrunn, site of Schoenbrunn destroying, III. 72. Settlement built, 74. Visited by many brethren, 85. Inhabited chiefly by Delaware, 89. Chapel consecrated,
INDEX.

Schwartz, George, murdered on the Mahoning, II. 166.

Schneck'sfield's followers go to New America, II. 2.

Scriptures, several portions of the Scriptures translated into the Delaware and Mahican languages, III. 154. Revision of such translations, III. 80.

Seth, I. 98.

Siam, one of the first-fruits, II. 19. In baptism called Isaac, 97. His de- ceased, 94.

Separatists, Indian, II. 192.

Serpents, I. 87, 88. Their bite cured by the Indians, 183.

Strawberry Indians on the Lache, II. 182. Irish, 209.

Suffffari, Anthony, II. 2. His letter to the Author, 45.

Stahl, an Indian Chief, II. 8. His conversion, 11. In baptism called Abraham, 21.

Shaw, Joseph, schoolmaster at Shekemocks, II. 27.

Shekemocks, head-Chief of the Iroquois, receives the Brethren kindly, II. 31. Ac- count of his decease, 217.

Schuyler, Captain, II. 288.

Shonkshig
INDEX

Shureen, or Sunday Indians, the Believers called in derision, III. 35-36.

Soak, derisively, III. 15.

Swan, I. 94.

Snow, I. 95. See Robin, 103.

Soldier, English, attacked by the savages, II. 174. Four soldiers raise civil reports against the Brethren at Bethlehem, 174. Come into the neighborhood of Nain and Weyahetuck, and to the Conund Indian, 208. Kil Zachary and his wife, 209. Accompany the Christian Indians on their journey, 228. Posest them in the barracks at Philadelphia, 228. Sent by the governor of D-troit to protect the missionaries, III. 116.

Sovereigns of the earth, I. 46. Supposed to possess hidden means of destruction, 115.

At Goshen, B.C. 103. At Ichabodshamnam, 58. A fortress saves the lives of the missionaries, 154.

Treaty of the Chieftain, I. 186.

Sacred, I. 86.

Swan, I. 11.

Streamery river, I. 7.

Steep, hilly country on of, I. 35.

Sycamore, a boy, escapes from the murderers on the Mohawk, II. 266.

Suger, being described, I. 8.

Sugar, Lake, I. 4.

Swan, I. 95.

T

Taverner, beheaded, I. 35. See Providence.

Teffery borne to the believing Indians, by general Johnston, III. 47. By the Omaha Chief, 97. By a Delaware captain, 98. By the English and French at Detroit, 206.

Temperance, George, governor of Pennsylvania, II. 52. His great kindness to the Christian Indians, 152, 153, 185, 243.

Themse, Charles, secretary of Congress, his letter to the missionaries, III. 216.

Teague, on the Sunflower nation, II. 124.

Tebanus, I. 75.

Tealthy, John, I. 9.

Tecumseh, an Indian Chief, II. 4.
INDEX.

Tereje, large, name of a tribe of the Delaware nation, I. 129.

Torneio inhabited upon prisoners, I. 151.

Tomus, Indian, building of, I. 106.

Trades, I. 98. In rum, destructive, 100.

Towning, Indian made of, I. 101.

Trees, I. 68, 69. Forest trees not feared, 55.

Tobacco, Indians, I. 2. Territory, 3.

Torchis, wild, I. 90.

Turky, name of a tribe of the Delaware nation, I. 119.

Turthuam, I. 93.

Valura river, III. 76.

Vemias, tribe of Indians, visit Friedenshuetten, III. 18.

Vetosomes Indians, I. 2. Territory, 3.

W

VAN RANGO, river, I. 6. Christian Indians propoal to remove to Vanango, III. 35.

Vestis of breather Indians, II. 105.

Vick, Henry von, II. 73.

Vemias tribe of the Delaware nation, I. 2.

Voyage of the Indian congregation over Lake Erie, III. 208.

W

WARASH river, I. 8.

Wataquaack, awakening at, II. 15. The Indians obliged to forake it, 147.

Waymok, a town of the Shawanoe, II. 33. Proposled as a settlement for the breather, 80. Entirely foraken by the Indians, 181.

Wauhaling, river, III. 104. 128.

Wapango, tribe of Indians, visit Friedenshuetten, III. 18. Join the Hurons, 117.

War belt, I. 38.

War, m de common, 94. Fight and dance, 95. With the Cayugas, II. 107. Salem breaking up at of an Indian war, 104. Scene of war, 90. Breaks out for a, 107. Alarm of war, III. 25. 49. War between the Senecas and Mohawks, II. 45. Affairs of war, 12. Petty wars of the Indian tribes continue, 90. War breaks out between the Virginia and several Indian nations, 93. Between Great Britain and her colonies, 100.

Walks
INDEX

Rumors of war differeth the Indian congregations, 174. Rumor of war between the Americans and Shawnees, 216.

Weaouckanche, tribe of Indians, l. 2. Their territory, 3.

Weygert, noted in hunting, I. 73. In war, 147.

Weyer, Billings, Dr. 18.

Wheeler, George, missionary, II. 24.

Weymouth built, II. 193. Tragedy on account of the war, 288. Fariken, 287. Burnt by the white people, 287.

Wells, a student, studies the Shawnee language, II. 174.

Welsh, John, Chief of Afflingik, goes to Lucerne, III. 212. His letters to the council at Gosschenbank, 170. His baptism, 171.

Wyse, Jacob, conducts the Christian Indians, II. 240.

Wiza, missionary, his dangerous situation at Shawnekin, II. 164.

Wienbach, II. 56. Chief of Wetzellueck departs this life happily, 230. Deputies sent to Wetzellueck, 149.

Wittery, captain, II. 208.

Wuoc, a chief, II. 135.

Wuoto, James, agent of Indian affairs, III. 216.

White-Eye, first Captain of the Delawares, protests the missions, III. 201. His declarations and firmness, 202. Makes known to the commissioners at Pittsburg that the Delawares had resolved to receive the Gospel, 210. Accused of taking part with the Americans, 115. Proclaims the left will of Neta-wawers in council, 217. Dies of the small-pox at Pittsburg, 245.

Widow, manner of treating widows, I. 63.

Wijzen, Mr., afflicts the Christian Indians, III. 211.

Wippewa, a bird, I. 97.

Wippewechsky, name given by the Delawares to their own nation, I. 9.

Wohn, I. 53. In the country about New Graubussen, III. 304.

Wurom, a name given by the Iroquois to the Delawares, I. 125.

Wine, Indian, described, I. 12. Seldom wants allowance in child-bearing, 60.

Wurz, Indian, escapes from the murderers, I. 166.

Wurzgup, religious, are re-established at Graubussen and Friedenshoven, III. 97. Public worship regulated at Philadephia, 225. Re-established at Philadelphia, 325.

Wuulaleskicas, tribe of the Delaware nation, I. 90.

Z

INDEX.

THE END.
BOOKS PUBLISHED;

RELATING TO, OR IN USE AMONG

THE UNITED BRETHREN.

1. THE Ancient and Modern History of the Brethren, or a Succinct Narrative of the Protestant Church of the United Brethren, or Uniates Fastrum, in the remoter Times, and particularly in the present Century. Written in German by David Cronin, Author of the History of Greenland, published, with some additional Notes, by Benjamin La Trobe. Price in boards 6s. 6d.

2. An Exposition of Christian Doctrine, as taught in the Protestant Church of the United Brethren, or Uniates Fastrum. Written in German, by August Gottlieb Spangenberg, with a Preface, by Benjamin La Trobe. Price in boards 5s.

3. The History of Greenland, containing a Description of the Country and its Inhabitants, and particularly a Relation of the Mission carried on above thirty Years by the Uniates Fastrum, at New Herrnhut and Lichtenthal, in that Country. By David Cronin. Translated from the High Dutch. In two Volumes 8vo. Price in boards 15s.

4. Harmony of the Four Gospels; or, the History of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; in which every Thing and Circumstance mentioned by the Four Evangelists, is brought into one Narrative; so that the Reader has here collected together, in one Series, all that is recorded of the Acts of the Days of the Son of Man, in the very Words of our English Version. Price bound 5s.

5. A Summary of the Doctrines of Jesus Christ; to be used for the Instruction of Youth, in the Congregations of the United Brethren. Price half-bound 9d.

6. A Succinct View of the Missions established among the Heathens, by the Church of the Brethren, or Uniates Fastrum. By Benjamin La Trobe. Price 6d.

7. A Brief Account of the Mission established among the Equinocia Indians on the Coast of Labrador, by the Church of the Brethren. Price 6d.

8. A Concise Historical Account of the Present Constitution of the Uniates Fastrum, or Unity of the Brethren. Price 1s.

11. Hymn Tunes, Sung in the Church of the United Brethren. Price half-bound 8d.